... there must be official censorship, ... than that of the public itself, it is ...rnest belief that the most effective ...would be a Federal measure, making ...m, throughout the nation, the stan... of motion picture censorship."

... Fox concludes his letter with the ...ent that the inspection fee proposed ... per thousand-foot reel for each ...l and $5 per thousand-foot reel for ...uplicate, will result in driving the picture industry out of New York, being a ruinous tax.

...CH COMPANY SUES FOR REVIEW OF ORDER

Censors Charged With Unreasonable Action in Regard to "Birth of a Nation."

(Special Correspondence The Morning Telegraph.)

CINCINNATI, May 4.

The Epoch Producing Company of New York, owners of "The Birth of a Nation," has just filed suit in the Ohio Supreme Court for a review of the alleged unlawful and unreasonable order of the Ohio State Motion Picture Censors barring the production. Action was brought on the strength of the ruling of Federal Judge John E. Sater of Columbus, Ohio, that the legal remedy in the State courts should be exhausted.

The Industrial Commission and the censors are named as defendants and will be represented by Attorney General Edward C. Turner. The Ohio State Supreme Court judges may be asked to see the picture to decide the questions that will be raised in the petition, which was filed by Attorneys Joseph Heintzman and J. L. Sagmeister of this city. It is set out that the production has been attended by disturbances in only two centers and that these were instigated by enemies of the production, who conspired to prevent it from being produced.

It is generally believed in motion picture circles that this test of the power of the Ohio State Board of Censors will do much to destroy the alleged czarism existing in the censorship of films, not only in Ohio but throughout the country. The present action is receiving much attention in the newspapers. It also is set out that it was shown at a private performance of 2,000 men in a music hall on February 26.

Readers Condemn "The Birth Of a Nation." Belasco's Plans for New Production.

5/7-16

By JULIA CHANDLER.

I dig my way to you this week out of an avalanche of anathemas born of the perfect sincerity of scores of deplorably prejudiced readers who would have me hanged without a quiver of conscience for what one protester is pleased to term my "fulsome praise" of "The Birth of a Nation."

The exactions of my work make a personal reply to each of some two hundred letters on my desk an impossibility, so that I am forced to take this medium of publicly commending the frankness of opinions which have been expressed to me whether they praise or damn me for my belief that in his great film, now on view at the New National Theater, D. W. Griffith has lifted the motion picture art to an artistic level deemed at its inception impossible for it, picturing the stress and storm which gripped the South after Abraham Lincoln's untimely death, not merely with fine dramatic sense but with an admirable faithfulness to history.

Expressing to me his "feelings of disappointment and amazement" born of my attitude toward the Griffith film, Mr. James C. Waters, jr., attorney at law in this city, protests "distorted episodes" and "propagandist features so hideously insidious in their character that if any racial group within the nation except the negroes were made the victim of their reflections, the house which dared to present the film would be dynamited," adding reproachfully to me:

"'And you, too, Brutus?' You who have taken such high ground heretofore? I am led by your writings on this film to believe more firmly than ever before that there come times when a man must catch a new grip upon himself lest he lose faith in humanity."

To the accusation against Mr. Griffith of "distorted episodes" it can but be said that with the selection of Thomas Dixon's graphic story of reconstruction in the South following the civil war for film production the sponsor for "The Birth of a Nation" entered upon a primary work of research stupendous in its character, for the very purpose of establishing the historical truth of its narrative. A half dozen professors of history from as many universities worked for three months in compiling for Mr. Griffith historical data that he might be spared the slightest inaccuracy in the presentation of his theme. These professors examined no less than 5,000 volumes of history and innumerable official records to secure the facts. Not satisfied with this Mr. Griffith visited the locale of the country which gave birth to the Ku Klux Klan and heard from men and women of the highest integrity the story of their personal experiences through the darkest hours of Southern history. Fortunately for the depiction of the period the years which followed the civil struggle are not so far distant but that innumerable eye-witnesses can be found today still living in that portion of the South which was saved from negro rule and supremacy by the Ku Klux riders.

Because history does not always tell a beautiful story there is no reason that it should be suppressed, or told only in such part as it coincides with individual ideas of things as they should be, or might have been, but were not.

Nor should a man who has spent a fortune in his effort to achieve accuracy in a production be maligned and condemned because he has the temerity to offer the world the result of his expensive investigation, specially when this man happens to be one of high artistic gifts who has the ability and the will to clothe his presentation in such raiment as D. W. Griffith has given "The Birth of a Nation."

That he sensed in Thomas Dixon's description of conditions confronting the South with Lincoln's death, and the power that saved the flower of its people from an unspeakably hideous fate, a subject of tremendous dramatic appeal and unparalleled possibilities for action in a film production is nothing to Mr. Griffith's discredit, nor aught of proof against the sincerity, honesty and dramatic beauty of his depiction.

Contention aside, the fact remains that "The Birth of a Nation" is a dramatic offering. As one of the many approving letters I have received states the matter:

"The Griffith picture is in the theater like any other production; advertised like any drama, without pretense or deception. Seeing it is compulsory to no one, so let he who is afraid to be told the truth in a beautiful and impressive manner stay home and nurse his weazened prejudices."

Which, in my estimation, is admirable advice succinctly given.

...place ...
...it has ever know...
...standpoint of both the pioneer

WANTS PRODUCERS TO APPOINT OWN CENSORS

Reputable Manufacturers Can Be Trusted to Regulate Moral Tone of Motion Picture Productions, Declares Edgar Lewis.

By EDGAR LEWIS

V. L. S. E. Director.

Censorship is causing more discussion at the present time than any other subject that has to do with this remarkable new art. So much has been said and written by men who have a more facile pen than I, that I fear the subject, as far as the public is concerned, has, like many scenarios I have read, become very, very trite.

It is only at the insistence of many who have done me the honor to say they would like to hear my views, that I have determined to write as briefly as the subject will permit, what may, or may not be, a new angle or two to this menace.

First, we must understand that there are two classes of manufacturers, both of whom are affected by censorship. The first of these classes are they, who, at the beginning, spent their days and nights, their brains, their vitality and what little money they have, trying, with their every effort, to make this new industry a commercial success. To these men—all glory! If it had not been for their persistence and perseverance, their indomitable energy and undaunted faith in the future of the motion pictures, this new art would never have reached the high plane it has to-day. That they made many mistakes goes without saying. That a few of them pandered to the baser elements in our natures is a known fact. But these men were few. The great majority of the pioneers, like pioneers in every walk of life, fought their battles along the lines of decency, honesty and modesty. You cannot cite an instance of any of the old firms, whose trademarks became household words, whose watchword was not "cleanliness." The Vitagraph, Biograph, Lubin, Kalem, I. M. P., Reliance, Pathe, Thanhouser and others were in this group. They did not at all times make good pictures from a technical point of view, but they were always clean, wholesome and untainted.

Financiers Interested.

After a time, when they had earned a share of hard earned success, various large moneyed interests began to take notice. Many of these old firms brought in new partners—men with money, who they felt would help them expand and grow to still greater heights. Most of these new men were as clean of brain and as jealous of their ideals as were our friends, the pioneers.

So these affiliations, instead of hurting the morals of the motion picture as some ill-advised persons prophesied at the time, had had the reverse effect of broadening and lifting it.

"Small—But Dangerous."

Now comes the second class—small, but dangerous. They are the vultures, the jackals, the scavengers of the trade, who live on filth and the offal that has been ignored or cast aside as unfit by the healthy souled man. These are the ones who, seeing the golden harvest that has been reaped by hard, but honest endeavor, try to make capital off of the public that has placed well earned confidence in the legitimate manufacturers; the men who, with a few thousands of dollars, "produce" a picture under a high sounding title, engage more or less competent actors to play the parts, put it on in record breaking and art defying time, herald it in posters of many colors, spend money lavishly in spectacular advertising, market it, to unscrupulous men, who, in turn, rent it to the unwary exhibitor at what he considers a remarkably low price, and before the unsuspecting public has recovered from the shock, he has scavenged enough currency of the realm to pay him many times over for the comparatively small amount of his investment and has enough money left over to make two or three other "features."

This is the class of manufacturers who are continually casting a blight on the motion picture. They are the germ, the bacilli, the microbes of the healthy picture manufacturer, the same as microbes of disease are to healthy human beings.

This, at first sight, is a long preamble, but, to my mind, it is absolutely necessary to first make a distinction between the classes of manufacturers before we can touch the censorship question.

It is not within my knowledge to say positively whether the various boards of censorship are strictly honest in their rulings or not. If they are sincere in what they do they, by their own actions, plead ignorance of the world, or human nature, of what the public want, or what is best or worst for the picture lovers to see.

If they are dishonest and are influenced by honeyed words or honeyed shekels in their rulings then there is but one thing for them, expulsion from the board and court proceedings against them.

Most Pictures Are Clean.

Keeping in mind what I have said about manufacturers the deduction must be that the majority of motion pictures are more or less worth while, while there is a very small minority that are inferior in moral tone. The champions of censorship will say that as long as this is an admitted fact that censorship is necessary to eliminate the unwholesome few to protect the good.

Perhaps this is theoretically true, but it is not practicable. It would be all right if the boards were composed of high-minded men and women who were intimately acquainted with the motion picture industry and openly connected in some capacity or other with one of the reputable firms. Such a board would have to be made up of one person from each producing establishment, and the above qualifications would be absolutely essential. A board like this would take mighty good care that pictures were of a high standard. If one firm chanced to turn out a picture of questionable morals you may be sure that the whole board—with the exception of the member connected with that firm—would instantly put their ban on it and—good-by picture and all the time and money expended on it. It seems to me the only form of censorship that would be absolutely impartial, and it would of necessity tend to the uplift of the silent drama. It would mean a good salary added to the expense of every manufacturer; high grade men do not come cheap, and none but those who could in every way qualify would be tolerated. The smaller manufacturer, who could not afford this, could stake his all that fair and unprejudiced treatment would be given him by such a board.

All other censorship arrangements, whether municipal, State or Federal, are out of the question. While I am an optimist in every sense of the word and a believer in the good intentions of mankind in general, I am also an observer, and whatever common sense I may have tells me that boards composed of men and women who are not vitally interested in this form of education and entertainment either cannot, or will not be absolutely just. This is no reflection on the intention of these particular boards as a whole, but it would be as much of a physical impossibility for a body of men or women or both to judge of an art of which they know nothing, as it would be for me to explain the melody, or lack of melody, in Chinese music. It cannot be fair.

Censoring Art.

A self-appointed or politically appointed body of men have the same right to go into the New York Museum of Natural History, or New York Museum of Art, and destroy the nude statues there on the ground that they are indecent, as they have to eliminate some of the beautiful scenes which I know have been ruled out of some highly artistic and moral pictures I have seen.

They might as well condemn any newspaper for printing the story of a murder and a theft as to take it upon themselves to ruin another man's product by cutting out of his picture without his consent perhaps some of the most interesting and essential scenes in the story.

The same can be said of famous paintings, poems, works of fiction and sculpture. Why have not censor boards been appointed to rule on these?

Why is it that if a ballet or a number of beautiful young women dressed in abbreviated skirts are shown in a picture it immediately causes the ire to rise within the censor board's honest heart? But should a circus come to town they will gather the family together and visit "the grandest, most magnificent pageant on earth," and go wild with delight at the tumblers, the trapeze performers and the bareback riders, where every man, woman and child appears in skin tights that show every curve of the body.

The answer to it all is that it is simply a matter of individual taste for the elders and the parents' judgment for the children. Surely no self-respecting parent is going to allow his small children to patronize a motion picture theatre where obscene or indecent pictures are shown and no exhibitor with an ounce of common sense would be foolish enough to insist on cramming such pictures down the throats of patrons who don't want them. He knows it would spell business suicide.

As I have intimated before, the exceptional and occasional bad picture will creep in, but the exhibitor is probably just as much ashamed of it as our saintly censor boards, and each time he gets burned with one of this brand he is just so much more careful in the future.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" A big question truly. Evidently the censors' answer would be in the affirmative, and I might agree with them if they could furnish proof that they were better qualified than the "brothers" they want to keep.

FEDERAL CENSOR BILL IS REVIVED

Two Measures Sponsored by Crafts Faction Appear Simultaneously in House and Senate.

BOTH ARE OBJECTIONABLE

(Special Correspondence The Morning Telegraph.)

WASHINGTON, May 5.

Despite the fact that the Rev. Wilber Crafts has seemingly let the matter of federal censorship drop, after the strong resistance offered by the motion picture industry, the reverse is the case, as shown by the almost simultaneous introduction at Washington of two new censorship measures, almost identical in content. One of these bills has already been brought to the attention of the Senate by Hoke Smith, Senator from Georgia, while the other is at present in the hands of the House Committee on Education.

On Thursday the House Committee on Education by a divided vote agreed to report what is apparently a modified version of the Smith-Hughes bill. There are fifteen members of the committee, of whom eight, all Democrats, voted to report the bill. Chairman Hughes to-day informed The Morning Telegraph correspondent that the bill, in its modified form, will not be introduced in the House of Representatives until Monday. It will be referred to the Educational Committee, which has already voted to favorably report the bill to the House.

"It will take me several days to draft the report to be submitted to the House recommending passage," said Chairman Hughes. "The bill will probably be reported Tuesday or Wednesday."

The bill when reported, will take its place on the calendar, and will not be reached for consideration by the House for several months, unless a special rule is reported.

Objectionable Measure.

The Smith-Hughes bill is just as broad and drastic, although modified in form, as was the original bill, and will undoubtedly be just as objectionable to the

(Continued on Page 13.)

FEDERAL CENSOR BILL IS REVIVED

(Continued From Page 1.)

Motion Picture Board of Trade, because it provides for pre-publicity censorship by a commission.

Rev. Wilber F. Crafts, Treasurer of the International Reform Bureau, who favors the new bill, has started on a long tour of the Western States to drum up the sentiment in his propaganda for this legislation.

The bill agreed upon proposes to create a Federal motion picture commission of five members, to be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, at salaries of $8,000 for the chairman and $7,500 for the other censors. The commission is to be stationed in Washington, but is to have branch offices in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and other places, where films may be submitted for censorship.

All films except those dealing with current news would have to be submitted to censors before they could be released. Special permits would be provided for the temporary release of news films, subject to recall in case the board decided they were improper. Shippers of improper films would be subject to fines ranging upward to $1,000.

A fee of $2 on each original film and 50 cents on each reprint would be assessed against the producers, but provision is made for lowering this fee if it is found that the running expenses of the Board can be met at a smaller cost than the total revenue that would be produced from this levy. It is estimated that the total annual revenue from all sources at the proposed rate under present conditions would be about $130,000.

The Senate Measure.

While in outward appearance Senator Hoke Smith is the fostering parent of the measure brought before the Senate, he disclaimed all responsibility by saying in his introductory speech:

"I introduce what I understand is a bill which has been agreed upon by the friends, who are in favor of the regulation of motion pictures and a large number of the manufacturers of films. I introduce it, however, by request, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor."

The new measure, known as S 5671, proposes to "create a new division of the Bureau of Education, to be known as the Federal Motion Picture Commission, for the regulation of motion pictures intended for interstate and foreign commerce, and defining its powers and duties."

The law is not to constitute a money-making scheme, although there does not seem to be anything within its provisions to enjoin strict economy. And the commission is to collect from each applicant for a license or permit, except in the case of films previously exhibited, a license fee of $2 for each 1,000 feet or fraction thereof of film and 25 cents for each additional copy thereof licensed by the commission. It is provided, however, that upon the expiration of six months from the date of approval of the bill, and from time to time thereafter as circumstances warrant, the commission shall revise and fix the fees at such sums as will probably produce no larger income than is necessary to support the work of the commission, including salaries and all other expenses.

Probable Increase in Fees.

But anyone who knows anything about the work of the Government smiles at this clause and advances the thought that luxurious offices, little regard for the use of supplies and mileage, and a horde of employees, may require the fee to be advanced rather than decreased. Ninety thousand dollars is to be appropriated to put the law into effect. All fees received are to be paid monthly into the treasury of the United States. The revocation or cancellation of any license or permit issued shall not entitle the grantee to the return of the fee paid, although the same is to be credited upon the amount otherwise due for any subsequent license fee for the same film.

The Senate measure is very similar in its provisions to the bill being introduced by the House Committee on Education, but differs in one important respect. The House bill provides for the exemption of current news pictures, whereas the bill brought forward by Senator Smith carefully refrains from making any mention of news pictorials.

ALL READY FOR CENSORSHIP DRIVE

Big Guns Are Trained on Cristman-Wheeler Bill—Hearing Set for May 11.

SPECIAL TRAIN FOR FILM MEN

(Special Correspondence The Morning Telegraph.)

ALBANY, May 5.

All is in readiness for the big hearing before Governor Whitman next Thursday on the Cristman-Wheeler motion picture censorship measure, and from present indications it promises to be the most thoroughly concerted action ever recorded against a bill for State legislation.

Representatives of some of the largest and most influential film companies in the State will be on hand to voice powerful protests against the signing of the bill and there is every prospect that the Governor will veto it.

Arrangements are completed for a special train to carry a delegation of motion picture men to Albany.

Representatives of the Famous Players, Metro, Lasky, World, Mutual, Universal, Fox and other companies will make the journey to Albany. Jesse L. Lasky, who was one of the leaders in the fight against censorship in California, arrived from the Coast, and will be one of the principal speakers at the hearing.

Senator Files Brief.

Contending that the Cristman-Wheeler bill, which is now in the hands of Governor Whitman, would have the effect of giving the Board of Regents police powers, Senator George F. Argetsinger of Rochester, who bitterly opposed the bill on the floor of the Senate, has filed a brief with the Governor condemning the proposed law and urging the chief executive to veto the bill.

"Can the Legislature delegate its authority to the Adjutant of the State Department of Education in advancing this measure, and maintains that the Board of Regents was established to care for the educational system of the State and should not be given the powers to regulate public entertainments.

He also points out that the only kind of motion picture censorship that has been successful in the State is that authorized by local authorities. Senator Argetsinger also says:

"Can the Board of Regents create an organization of censors and place them in official positions, disregarding the educational system? Educators for years have been demanding that the administrations of schools shall be kept separate from other departments of government.

Out of Their Line.

"It is now proposed to require the educational department to perform duties in no way connected with education and to employ large numbers of men who will have nothing to do with educational matters. The Board of Regents was created and it has been maintained for the purpose of developing and fostering an educational system in this State.

"It is now sought to place upon it duties

(Continued on Page 13.)

Lasky Here for Censor Fight.

In order to appear personally next week before Governor Whitman at Albany at a hearing on the Cristman-Wheeler motion picture censorship bill, entirely foreign to the purposes for which it was created and has been maintained.

Telegraph May 7

CENSOR BILL HEARING SHORTLY

(Continued From Page 1.)

"It is intended to require it to supervise and regulate entertainment and amusements. A portion of the police powers of the State is to be delegated to it, and the educational branch of the Government is to be required to build up and maintain an organization and exercising police powers.

"The censoring of motion picture films can be upheld only by the police powers of the State, but the bill in question does not stop here. It provides that the Board of Censors, under the supervision of the Board of Regents, shall supervise and regulate the display of motion picture films or reels.

"That this power of supervision and regulation is not confined to censorship alone, is shown by the sentence following it, which states that such power and authority shall include the power to inquire into and investigate moving picture films or reels intended to be displayed.

"Unquestionably power to regulate gives authority to license, and refers to the Board of Censors power to license all places in which moving pictures are displayed, takes away from local authorities the powers now invested in them of licensing moving picture theatres.

"The various municipalities of the State have controlled theatres for many years by the granting and revocation of licenses. The ordinances of different cities contain many regulations for the conduct of other places of amusement. Those ordinances will be nullified by the proposed act, and the entire power of regulation will be placed in the Board of Censors, subject to the supervision and control of the Board of Regents."

NING TELEGRAPH
DAY, MAY 8, 1916

FER BILL FOR EDERAL CENSORS

n Picture Commission to Be thed With Great Power Over Production and Projection.

MEASURE HAS OPPOSITION

n Industry Will Have to Bear pense of Government if Proposition Becomes Law.

cial Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

WASHINGTON, May 7.

proposed new bill for the creation Federal motion picture commission d with far-reaching powers of pre- ity censorship has been agreed up- the House Committee on Educa- and Chairman Dudley M. Hughes t committee will introduce the bill he House to-morrow. It will be re- to the Education Committee as a r of form, and should be reported House by Wednesday. The Re- an minority members of the com- will file a report in opposition.

new proposed measure differs from the original Hughes-Smith that it has been much amended der to make it less objectionable to lm industry. It is essentially a blicity measure, however, and will posed by a majority of the film as well as by the Motion Picture of Trade. The new bill proposes ke the Federal censorship commit- n independent body like the Inter- Commerce Commission. It also des for five members to be appointed he President, subject to acceptance ejection by the Senate. Central will be in Washington, but deputy missioners and branch offices may be ed at the option of the commis-

Film Trade to Pay Expense.

he cost of Federal censorship is to orne by the film industry. The bill oses an initial appropriation by Con- of $90,000 to pay the cost of Fed- censorship. But the commission is ollect fees from applicants for li- es at the rate of $2 for each 1,000 of film licensed, and 50 cents for additional copy of films. This money be turned into the Treasury. After expiration of six months the commis- may revise the fees so that they produce no larger income than is essary to support the censorship com- sion.

The commission would have no au- rity over films not shipped in inter- te or foreign commerce except those be exhibited in the District of Colum- the Federal territories, and places der the local police power of the Fed- l Government. In these places no s are to be exhibited without licenses the commission, even if the films e not been shipped in interstate com- rce.

With respect to the States, the com- ssion has no power to prevent the hibition of films and is only given wer to reach such films by compell- them to be submitted for censorship intended to be shipped in interstate mmerce. But this is a very broad wer, since it means that no film made New York, or California, may be ex- bited in any other State or Territory thout the approval of the commission, cause such films would necessarily ter interstate commerce.

How to Get a License.

All films intended for interstate or reign commerce must be submitted approval or disapproval of the com- ssion. If the commission considers em obscene, indecent, immoral, inhu- an, or finds that the films reproduce tual bullfights or prizefights, or be- ves that they would corrupt morals incite to crime, the Federal censors ust refuse to license such films for hipment in interstate or foreign com- erce. The film may only be trans- orted from one State to another if censed by the commission. Any per- on, firm or corporation transporting an nlicensed film across State lines would e liable to a fine of $1,000, imprison- ent not more than a year, or both, nd the unlicensed film so transported ould be liable to confiscation.

Realizing that it would take years or the commission to censor films al- eady in existence, and also as a sop to he motion picture industry in an effort o obtain its support for the proposed lan of Federal censorship, the new ill proposes to allow all such films to nter interstate commerce without being nspected by the Federal censors. But ven with regard to such films the bill rovides that application must be made or a "permit" for them to enter inter- tate and foreign commerce.

Applications for these permits for in- erstate shipment of existing films must e made within sixty days after the bill oes into effect as law. There are cer- ain other exceptions. Films portraying urrent events may receive permits for nterstate shipment without inspection, nd films of a strictly scientific charac- r intended for use only by the learned rofessions must be allowed interstate hipment without inspection by the com- ission upon a sworn statement that the lm is not to be publicly exhibited.

May 6/16

THE MOTION PICTURE DAILY TRADE SHOW BULLETIN,

IT IS UP TO THE PEOPLE

By SIEGMUND LUBIN.

Censorship is an epidemic in its early stages. It will run its course and disappear ,as has the pastime of burning witches at the stake and the legend of the stork.

The world grows wiser every day. The once popular belief that the best cure for rheumatism was to carry a horse chestnut in your pocket is subsiding. Most people are now agreed that the moon is not made out of green cheese.

No robber baron lurks around the corner to set fire to your garage and slaughter your vassals. The curfew bell has stopped ringing and you no longer build stockades to keep Indians out of your front yard.

But, although there are moments when to prove it requires argument, you will find if you take the trouble to investigate that the constitution on which this democracy was founded is still in existence. It contains the antidote to state censorship and any other inheritance of monarchial tyranny that seeks to take root in this republic.

The men and women who, by their presence, give endorsement to the manufacture of life motion piceures have not yet awakened to a realization of the principle of censorship. They have not yet considered that they are permitted to see only that which a censor, whose qualification is frequently the color of his vote, decides they may see. It will be when they learn that they are taxed for the support of a plain human being like themselves who is to inform them that this is a bad and this is not and that they are not to be trusted to decide for themselves ;it is then that their voices in indignant protest will reach the ears of the legislators. And the legislator who has profited by the experience of ages is aware th when vox populi begins to buzz with indiznation it is time listen and respond soothingly.

If the feudal system of state censorship may endure in this de ocracy ,and that it can is conceivable, it is logical to anticipate extension into the forging of other shackles. Ingenious applicati of the theory would doubtless spare us the perplexity of selecti our own meals in public restaurants. A censored sermon from pulpit would also figure as a possibility.

Calling censors harsh names is not going to help. The reme is in the understanding of the men and women of the Republic. A some time it is going to be applied. It would be soon, were enlig enment to proceed from a source eminently qualified for the t but which appears to be peculiarly apathetic to an imposition wit principle so threatening.

The newspapers have not yet evidenced a full comprehension the issue to which they seem strangely indifferent. This, too, a condition that will remedy itself. The opening blast would sounded violently were a censor permitted to stroll at midni into the editorial rooms of a certain Kentucky journal and, giv the proofs the once-over, instruct Col. Henry Watterson to eli inate several columns before the morning's issue could be officia "passed."

Meanwhile, and finally, it is up to the people. Keep the lig before them.

4D

Movie Tickets to Stay Up, Pictures Will Be Improved, National Exhibitors' View

BY JAMES D. KILGALLEN

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—(United News) —Mr. Main Street movie proprietor believes that he will not have to cut the price of admission if he can get the right kind of pictures.

Mr. Broadway producer thinks prices are not too high. Considering that Uncle Sam is still charging war-tax, and he doesn't want prices to drop.

A heart-to-heart talk was held here Tuesday by both of these gentlemen. The occasion was the annual conference of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, at which theater men from all over the country were present.

A. P. Brentinger, general manager of five theaters in Indiana said the people aren't complaining about the prices, the kick is against the pictures.

"The people are 'shopping,'" he said. "Too many stars have been featured in bad plays. A star cannot, as a rule, carry a picture alone. There has been too much production and not enough discrimination.

"All of us agree the industry needs attention," said Robert Lieber, of New York. "We have all been squandering. We must tighten up. It has been the same way in other businesses.

"Will the salaries of your stars be cut," Lieber was asked.

"The salary of the star will, as always, depend upon ability to attract," was the answer. "No star who can amuse or entertain the people will suffer any reduction."

The small town managers said that 50 cents was their admission price limit.

It was the concensus that the day of the "adults only" movie vamp and blood and thunder pictures is passing, if it has not already passed, and that, instead, what the country wants and will gladly pay for, is good "human appeal" pictures and rich, natural comedy.

BETTER MOVIES AT PRESENT PRICES, PRODUCER'S PLAN

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—(By United News.)—"Better movies at the same prices" is the answer of the leading film producers in the East to the question; will the elimination of overpaid stars and directors from filmdom means a return to the old five and ten cent admissions to the shows?

The dollar and two dollar a seat movie is here to stay, say the producers and, as explained by officials of the leading houses here Tuesday, the reason is this.

"We are cutting off many so-called stars and many over-rated directors, but we are bunching our stars on fewer films, which means that these films must bring in the money that more but poorer and less expensive films brought in before. There will be more half million dollar productions but vastly fewer $25,000 affairs. We believe that we can put these out without raising movie theatre prices, but certainly we can't put them out and reduce prices generally."

Nevertheless, there are some price reductions for movies in certain localities. But these have resulted from inability of the people to maintain the former prices, not to reductions in the cost of making the films.

Detroit was cited as an example. Theatre tickets have been reduced somewhat there as a result of so many men being out-of work following lay-offs in the motor industry. Similar conditions in other cities have produced like action.

Generally speaking, however, present prices for movies will stand indefinitely, say the producers.

GRIFFITH OUTLINES PLANS TO REVOLUTIONIZE FILMS

MAMARONECK, N. Y., Jan. 12.—(By U. P.)—The entire movie industry is in the process of a thorough reorganization which will place it on the strongest basis it has ever known, from the standpoint of both the producer and the public, David Wark Griffith declared in an interview today.

According to the famous producer, the apparent slump in the motion picture business is due to three factors.

First, complete readjustments affecting everyone from the high salaried stars to the unskilled laborers.

Second, manufacture of bigger pictures to run several weeks, replacing the "one night stands."

Third, creation of a surplus of pictures following the years of underproduction that resulted from the war.

Griffith emphasized, that there had been no appreciable falling off in attendance at movie theatres and that increased cost of production had been more than offset by greater receipts.

"One picture alone has had a gross income of $3,500,000," Griffith said.

Griffith was asked what he thought about reports that the one-candlepower movie star" is on the wane.

"I cannot qualify as an expert on celluloid astronomy because I never went in for it," he replied. "But I do know that with the rapid improvement of the quality of motion pictures the individuality of the actor is becoming submerged, as in the case of the greatest stage productions, and I can apply Shakespeare's words to the films: 'The play's the thing.'"

"Of course, there are a few real film stars whose personality never could be dimmed. I refer to Chaplin, Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray, Lillian Gish, Norma Talmadge and Nazimova.

'In the past it has been the custom of some producers to sieze upon some curly haired boy or bl geyed ingenue and feature them to death just because they are good to look at. Naturally, there will always be some demand for that type of pictures—the matinee idol has never wholly lost his popularity. Discriminating people, however, are demanding well written, produced and acted pictures, regardless of whether or not the cast is as full of stars as the milky way.

"I predict that within ten years, possibly half that time, people will be paying $5 each to see one motion picture, running two and a half or three hours, as they now do for the best stage plays. The smaller pictures will occupy a position analyogous to vaudeville.

"To illustrate the confidence that real financiers have in the future of the industry, I may say that a group of big men is planning to spend $2,250,000 in making one picture, the book rights alone to cost $600,000."

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH MAY 9, 1916.

EMINENT JURIST OPPOSES CRISTMAN-WHEELER BILL

Former Chief Justice Edgar M. Cullen Prepares Opinion Condemning Censorship Bill as "a Piece of Outrageous Legislation."

It was announced at a luncheon given at Delmonico's yesterday by Lee Ochs, President of the New York State Exhibitors' League, to representatives of the foremost film manufacturing concerns and exhibitors in the United States, that Edgar M. Cullen, former Chief Justice of the New York Court of Appeals, is drawing up an opinion, to be presented to Governor Whitman next Thursday, declaring the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill unconstitutional to the extent of being "a piece of outrageous legislation."

[illegible]ests of the luncheon comprised a [illegible]phalanx of motion picture interests [illegible]ared to oppose to the last ditch this [illegible]asure, which has already passed both [illegible]ouses of the Legislature, and are hopeful of demonstrating to Governor Whitman in a special hearing at Albany on that day that it is unworthy of his signature.

Film manufacturers and exhibitors have had differences among themselves in the past over the reasonableness and desirability of Federal censorship. On that question they have been hopelessly split into many coteries. But regarding the Cristman-Wheeler bill, which creates a board of censors to be appointed by the Regents there is unanimity of disapproval, which is both bitter and vigorous.

Cost $500,000 a Year.

If this bill should become a law its estimated cost to motion picture manufacturers and producers would be in round figures not less than half a million dollars a year.

J. Robert Rubin, general counsel for the New York State Exhibitors' League, explained the serious character of the bill. He showed, as a sample of the methods pursued by its backers, a large postal card, which is being sent broadcast through the mails by the New York Society for the Prevention of Crime, urging citizens to subscribe themselves in favor of this scheme of State censorship.

Misrepresentations and false statements are set forth on this card, Mr. Rubin said, for the purpose of leading uninformed persons to believe that many film corporations are in favor of the proposed law. On the contrary, they are all unalterably opposed to it.

Among the speakers yesterday were T. J. Harrington, president of the National Exhibitors' League, who came on from Pittsburg; J. Stuart Blackton, president of the Vitagraph Company; W. W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E.; Walter N. Feligsberg, counsel of the Triangle; Arthur Friend, counsel of the Lasky Photo-play Company; Cordon Meyer, representing the Paramount Picture Corporation; Edwin M. Thanhouser, of the Thanhouser Film Company; E. M. Seabury, counsel of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, and Mr. Harrington, already mentioned.

Rubin Named as Chairman.

On a motion put by Arthur Friend, Mr. Rubin was selected as chairman of a committee to represent the united opposition to the bill. He at once named the following members of the league to assist him in making the proper presentment to the Governor next Thursday: Edwin Thanhouser, Lee Ochs, E. M. Seabury, Arthur Friend and William A. Brady. They will meet to-day to talk over the situation.

L. J. O'Reilly, secretary to William Randolph Hearst, announced the engagement of a special train to carry the delegation to Albany, leaving Grand Central Station at 8.45 P. M. and arriving at the capital at noon. Speakers for the opposition in the hearing before the Governor will be Martin W. Littleton, Bainbridge Colby, W. W. Irwin, President Brenton of the National Board of Review and several others representing educational and sociological bodies.

Arthur James of the Metro Pictures Corporation expressed the appreciation of the league members for the hospitality and spirit of steadfastness extended by their host, Mr. Ocns.

Among others present were President Berst of the Pathe Company, E. A. McManus of the International Film Corporation, Joseph Blumenthal, treasurer of the State Exhibitors' League; Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation; Messrs. Busch and Rosenthal of the World Film Corporation, Samuel Goldfish and Jesse L. Lasky of the Lasky Photo-play Company and Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

THOUSANDS URGE FILM BILL VETO

Samuel Gompers Tells Governor Whitman He Is Opposed to Censorship Measure.

PUBLIC HEARING THURSDAY

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

ALBANY, May 8.

Thousands of letters, telegrams, postcards and petitions have been received by Governor Whitman protesting against the Cristman-Wheeler motion picture censorship bill, which is scheduled for a hearing before the Governor on Thursday.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is among those who recently filed with the Governor a long letter in which he earnestly opposed the signing of the bill providing for a State Board of Censors on motion pictures. Among others appealing to the Executive to veto this proposed law are the united theatrical enterprises of Buffalo, the National Board of Review of New York, Vitagraph-Lubin-Essanay, Inc., Eastman Kodak Company of Rochester, and George J. Smith, of the Board of Examiners of the Department of Education of the City of New York.

Seth Moyles, of the lodge of Elks of Los Angeles, Cal., in a telegram to Governor Whitman yesterday, said: "As a New York business man and consistent supporter of your policies, and on the behalf of two hundred distinguished authors for whom I have acted as a literary agent, such as Rex Beach, Gilbert Parks, Conan Doyle, Rupert Hughes, Emerson Hough and many others who cannot register timely protests, I respectfully urge your veto of the New York State censorship bill passed By the Legislature.

"My operations in sixteen years have exceeded $5,000,000 and I feel warranted in stating that this bill will displease the public and prove injurious to the producers, exhibitors and contributors alike."

DENIES RAILS' INJUNCTION

THE WORLD: TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916

MOVIE CHIEFS PLAN TO FIGHT CENSORS' BILL

Eminent Lawyers Will Speak for Them at Whitman Hearing Thursday.

A meeting of motion picture executives was held in Delmonico's yesterday to formulate plans for a protest to Gov. Whitman against the proposed Cristman-Wheeler bill for a State Board of Censors.

That the industry is practically united in a fight against the bill is shown by the list of those at the meeting. They were Jesse L. Lasky of the Lasky Feature Play Company, J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph, W. W. Irwin of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Essanay, Lee Ochs of the Exhibitors' League, Edwin Thanhouser of the Thanhouser Company, Arthur James of the Metro, William M. Seabury of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, J. A. Berst of Pathe, Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players, J. C. Myers of the Paramount, William A. Brady of the World Film, and Mr. Seligsberg of the Triangle.

J. Robert Rubin was appointed as chief legal advocate for the movies at the public hearing before Gov. Whitman in Albany, Thursday. Bainbridge Colby and Martin Littleton will also represent the motion picture men, and an opinion on the law by former Chief Judge Cullen of the Court of Appeals will be read.

THE NEW YORK TIMES TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

UNITE AGAINST CENSORSHIP

Movie Men Plan a General Protest Against the Bill.

A meeting of moving picture manufacturers and distributors was held yesterday at Delmonico's to discuss means of offering united opposition to the Cristman-Wheeler Censorship bill, which has been passed by both branches of the Legislature and is awaiting the Governor's signature. The meeting was one of the most representative in the history of the industry, as the manufacturers are practically unanimously against the bill. Representatives of the Lasky, Metro, Vitagraph, Pathé, Famous Players, Thanhouser, International, World, Triangle, Arrow, Paramount, and V. L. S. E. companies were present.

J. Robert Rubin was appointed to present the general protest and Bainbridge Colby and Martin W. Littleton will be among those who will speak for the picture interests. The bill will come up for hearing Thursday and representatives of the companies opposing it will go to Albany by special train to attend the hearing.

W YORK AMERICAN—WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1916

hy Cristman Censorship Bill Should Be Disapproved

By Bainbridge Colby

only does the Cristman-Wheeler bill give to the censors the arbitrary power to suppress a film they (or any agent) do not deem r," but even their approval, once may be revoked. No power could e arbitrary, subjecting, as it does, able product of creative art and al skill to the continuing hazards individual opinion, which, if hon- quite as likely to be capricious any event, not above the plane lligence of the inferior political holders who will constitute the Burke alone but the Supreme of the United States has expressed in terms of strong repugnance to power as this. The late Justice ews, in a leading case, speaking r highest court, said:

hen we consider the nature and heory of our institutions of gov- ent, the principles upon which are supposed to rest, and review history of their development, we constrained to conclude that they ot mean to leave room for the and action of purely personal and rary power. * * * For the idea that one man may be com- d to hold his life, or the means ving, or any material right essen- to the enjoyment of life, at the e will of another, seems to be in- able in any country where free- prevails, as being the essence of ery itself."

RBITRARY POWER ILLEGAL.

another case of high authority, the yland Court of Appeals, discussing arbitrary power which a certain nance committed to the unrestrained of a single public officer, said:

"When we remember that this ac- or non-action may proceed from mity or prejudice, from partisan l or animosity, from favoritism and her improper influences and motives, y of concealment and difficult to detected and exposed, it becomes necessary to suggest or to comment n the injustice capable of being ought under cover of such a power, that becomes apparent to every- e who gives the subject a moment's nsideration. In fact, an ordinance hich clothes a single individual with ch power hardly falls within the main of law, and we are constrained pronounce it inoperative and void."

Abounding in similar expressions are reported cases and the leading com- ntaries far too numerous for me to .

A serious defect in the Cristman bill, d one that aggravates the arbitrary aracter of the power which the censors ill wield, is the absence of a provision r an appeal to the courts. The vic- ms of the arbitrary power lodged in e Board of Censors are thus doubly ronged in being deprived of the right a judicial review, where the undefined and fantastic powers of the board are exercised with prejudice or absurdity, as will frequently occur.

TENDS TO CORRUPTION.

Another objection to the bill is that arbitrary power tends to corruption. o quote Burke again:

"An arbitrary system must alway be a corrupt one. There never was man who thought he had no law bu his own will who did not soon fin that he had no end but his own profit. Corruption and arbitrary power are of natural reciprocal generation, necessarily producing one another."

Indeed, the modern law of dramatic censorship in England was the direct outgrowth of political corruption. It was the work of Walpole, whose evil fame it is to have "raised bribery to a system" and to have plunged Parliament to a depth of degradation never equalled before or since.

The law, introduced by Walpole and passed by his influence, was the answer of a frightened House of Commons to Fielding's play entitled "The Historical Register," in which a character, obviously suggesting Walpole, was presented distributing purses red-handed among his supporters. People wondered why Walpole, who possessed the finest extant collection of profane and wicked stories, had suddenly come forward as a champion of morality.

But this was only a surface appearance. It was as the champion of immorality on a huge scale that Walpole was acting in reality, and it was to shield that immorality from public view that the censorship law was passed. It called forth the famous protest by Chesterfield, that went straight to the heart of the matter, in the following admirable words:

CHESTERFIELD'S PROTEST.

"If poets and players are to be restrained, let them be restrained as other subjects are, by the known laws of their country; if they offend, let them be tried, as every Englishman ought to be, by God and their country. Let us not subject them to the arbitrary will and pleasure of any one man. A power lodged in the hands of a single man, to judge and determine without limitation, control or appeal, is a sort of power unknown to our laws, and inconsistent with our constitution; it is a higher and more absolute power than we trust even to the King himself; I must, therefore, think we ought not to vest any such power in the Lord Chamberlain."

Logical and irrefutable as was this protest, it evoked no response from a venal Parliament, and the bill became a law. The history of its operation has been one of hopeless confusion, vexation and futility. It has interfered with freedom of speech and rights of literary property. It has done no good and, unfettered by custom or law, it has often inflicted grave injustice.

Jan. 11-16 NEW YORK AMERICAN—The

How Censorship Works in Canada

WE believe that the law creating a censorship of moving picture plays is unconstitutional because it attempts to substitute an irresponsible power of prohibition BEFORE production for the recognized and constitutional power of the courts to punish the producers of unlawful plays AFTER the commission of the unlawful act.

A lawyer so able as Governor Whitman will see the force of this argument, we think, without our elaborating it.

The fundamental theory of our whole system of government is the entire liberty of any citizen to print or picture or speak or do anything he chooses, subject only to the peril of the law if he abuses that liberty to print or picture or speak or do anything unlawfully.

This is the sharp distinction between our American institutions of liberty under law applied by the courts and enforced by the executive and the institutions of State bureaucratic inspection and permission or prohibition which obtain in most European monarchies.

In practice, censorship of moving picture films has worked as might be expected. For example, in British Columbia last year the censorship forbade the exhibition of over 800 films, of which thirty-seven were forbidden because they might be "offensive to religious orders;" three because they pictured snakes; sixteen because they reflected upon England's allies in war; twelve because the original pictures were made in Germany and Austria; thirteen for disrespect to clergy; four for ridicule of temperance movements; thirty-six because against public policy; twenty-three because construed to be anti-British, and twenty-two on account of "unnecessary display of United States flag."

These figures are taken from the official Government report.

So we have here in British Columbia valuable properties destroyed and ordinary private rights subjected to the PERSONAL, POLITICAL, PARTY, RELIGIOUS AND DENOMINATIONAL VIEWS AND CAPRICES of the censor.

We submit that the people of New York do not want anything of this kind in the State of New York. And we are pretty sure that Governor Whitman will agree with the people.

American
THURSDAY, MAY 1 1916

ILM INDUSTRY PROTEST TO-DAY AGAINST CENSOR

All Branches of Moving Pictures to Denounce Proposed Law Before Governor.

Presenting a united front in opposi- on to the Cristman-Wheeler bill, hich would create State censorship f motion pictures, the various ranches of the motion picture in- stry will be represented this after- on at Albany. Governor Whitman ill hold a public meeting to discuss e demerits of the proposed law.

Motion picture producers, distribu- rs and exhibitors—the men who ake the pictures, those who sell em and those who show them to the eatre-going public and those who e them—will present their views to e Governor.

A special train of Pullmans will rry the protestants against the bill. ore than 300 persons, representing very motion picture producing and istributing company in America, and legates from the New York State eague of Exhibitors will be on the rain which leaves the Grand Central tation at 8:45 this morning.

Among those who will speak against the bill are the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Bainbridge Colby, Martin W. Littleton, A. G. Meyer, Assistant District Attorney; W. W. Irwin and J. Robert Rubin. Mr. Rubin is chairman of the committee in opposition to the Cristman-Wheeler bill, the others being Arthur S. Freind, representing Lasky and Famous Players; Walter N. Seligsberg, representing D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince and Mack Sennett productions; William A. Brady, representing the World, Equitable, Brady and Shubert film productions; Lee A. Ochs, president of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors; Edwin Thanhouser, representing American, Signal, Gaumont, Horsley and other Mutual producing companies; W. M. Seabury, general counsel of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, and E. A. MacManus, International Film Service.

Assisting Mr. Rubin, as chairman of the general committee, are John Flinn, chairman of the Committee of Arrangements; Albert S. LeVino, secretary of Mr. Flynn's committee, and Arthur James, chairman of the Press Committee.

Mr. Rubin will deliver to Governor Whitman the written opinion of Edgar N. Cullen, formerly Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, declaring the Cristman-Wheeler bill not only unconstitutional under the State Constitution, but also under the Federal Constitution.

The International Film Service has been carrying on a fight against the measure, and at the Motion Picture Convention got thousands of signatures against the bill, which were forwarded to Governor Whitman.

An elaborate luncheon was served yesterday to the members of the motion picture trade press by the International Film Service at the Advertising Men's League of New York.

MAY 11, 1916.
THE SUN, THURSDAY,

Censoring the Motion Pictures.

Except that it may furnish a few political jobs there appears no demand for the censorship of motion pictures as proposed by the Cristman-Wheeler bill, which comes up to-day for hearing before Governor WHITMAN.

In the three States where legal censorship has been tried it has been satisfactory neither to the producers of the pictures nor to those who pay to see them. The censorship has been generally considered inefficient; and in one State it has been so narrow and prejudiced as to bring the work of the board into ridicule and to cause a demand for repeal of the law that created it. In each of the three States the constitutionality of the law creating the boards has been questioned.

The protection of children against objectionable pictures is no better secured by this bill than it is by the present plan of the National Board of Review in providing special programmes for children and stimulating exhibitions for their benefit.

The Cristman-Wheeler bill, providing for no approval of a part of a picture, but requiring approval or rejection of it entire, inflicts unnecessary expense on the producer. Another objection that has been urged against the bill is that the charges are so high as to amount to special and unjust taxation, which will fall ultimately upon the patrons of the exhibition.

Public sentiment will continue to be, as it has been, the strongest force for the elimination of objectionable pictures. There is no more general and popular demand for the censorship of the motion picture than for a censorship of the stage, paintings, books or the press. The measure is impractical and undemocratic.

GLOBE AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER, NEW YORK, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1916.

MOVIE MEN OFF TO FIGHT BILL

Will Protest to Whitman Against Proposed Cristman-Wheeler Law Establishing Censor.

In an effort to kill the Cristman-Wheeler bill, which would establish a state censorship for motion pictures, more than 300 men, representing every motion picture producing and distributing company in the country, will leave to-day aboard a special train for Albany, where they will present a protest to Governor Whitman at a public hearing.

J. Robin Rubin, chairman of the delegation, will deliver to the governor the written opinion of Edgar N. Cullen, former chief justice of the Court of Appeals, who declares that the bill is unconstitutional under both the state and federal constitutions.

Among the men who will speak against the bill are the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Bainbridge Colby, Martin W. Littleton, A. G. Meyer, Assistant District Attorney, and W. W. Irwin.

Among those who will be present are:

Arthur S. Friend, representing Lasky and Famous Players; Walter N. Seligsberg, representing D. W. Griffith; Thomas Ince and Mack Sennett productions; William A. Brady, representing the World, Equitable, Brady and Shubert film productions; Lee A. Ochs, president of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors; Edwin Thanhouser, representing American, Signal, Gaumont, Horsley, and other Mutual producing companies; W. W. Seabury, general counsel of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and E. A. MacManus, International Film Service.

Assisting Mr. Rubin, as chairman of the general committee, are John Flinn, chairman of the committee of arrangements; Albert S. LeVine, secretary of Mr. Flinn's committee, and Arthur James, chairman of the press committee.

Telegraph May 11-1916

FILM MEN RUSH TO ALBANY FOR GOVERNOR'S VETO

Special Train To-day Bears Excursion of Motion Picture Delegates Who Will Argue for Disapproval of Measure Now Waiting Only Signature to Become Law.

FIGHT CENSORSHIP BILL

Screen Factors and Associates Are United on Vital Matter. Former Chief Justice Edgar M. Cullen Presents Opinion That Its Enactment Would Be Unconstitutional.

A special train bearing the representative opponents to the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill, will leave Grand Central Station at 8.45 this morning. The business of this excursion to Albany is to convince Governor Whitman that the proposed enactment, which requires only his signature to become a law, is an outrageous piece of legislation which is not only unjust and burdensome to a legitimate industry, but is in flagrant conflict with the Constitution of both the nationa and the State.

For the first time since the motion picture business became a subject of legislation, every individual, company, factor and organization in that industry is solidly united upon one issue, viz., to prevent the enforcement of the Cristman-Wheeler bill. For one hour this afternoon Governor Whitman will listen to reasons why he should veto the measure. The statements of the New York Society for the Prevention of Crime, to the effect that the moving picture people are divided on the subject, will be disproved in person and by the petition of representatives of every branch of the business.

Solid for a Vote.

Leo Ochs, president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, accompanied by thirty representative exhibitors from Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn, will urge the opposition of their organization against the threatened law. The exhaustive opinion prepared by Justice Edgar M. Cullen, former Chief Justice of the New York Court of Appeals, in which that eminent jurist attacks the Cristman-Wheeler bill as flagrantly transgressing the constitutional rights of those engaged in the motion picture business, will be presented to the Governor by J. Robert Rubin, general counsel for the New York State Exhibitors' League, who will direct the arguments of protest against that measure.

The Metro Pictures Corporation will be represented in this expedition by President Richard A. Rowland, Treasurer Joseph W. Engel, Arthur James, Harry John, Edwin M. Saunders, L. Lawrence Webber, president of Popular Plays and Players; Charles Maddock, general manager Colombia Pictures Corporation; Fred J. Balshofer of the Quality Pictures Corporation, B. A. Rolfe, president of Rolfe Photo-Plays (Inc.) and manager of the Strand.

Powerful Delegations.

President John R. Freuler and Secretary Samuel M. Field, with a number of their officials, will represent the Mutual Film Company; Jesse Lasky, Samuel M. Goldfish, Arthur Friend, and John W. Flynn will stand before the Governor in behalf of the Lasky Photoplay Company; Adolph Zukor will head a committee from the Famous Players Company; President W. W. Hopkinson and General Counsel Cordes Meyer will represent the Paramount and William A. Brady with ten associates of the World Film Corporation will add their presence and voices to the plea for a veto.

Ten delegates from the International Film Service headed by Manager E. A. MacManus and accompanied by L. J. O'Reilly, Secretary to William Randolph Hearst, who will also be in charge of the train; General Manager J. A. Verst, of Pathe (Inc.); W. E. Shellenberger, President, and A. S. Le Vino, manager, of the Arrow Film Company; J. Stuart Blackton accompanied by ten of his associates of the Vitagraph Company and W. W. Irwin with a dozen others of the V. S. L. E. staff will be among the most resolute petitioners for Governor Whitman's veto of the Cristman-Wheeler bill.

Prominent delegations will go from the Moving Picture Branch of the

---

GLOBE AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1916.

NO EXCUSE FOR FILM CENSORSHIP.

Governor Whitman gives a hearing to-day on the Cristman-Wheeler bill creating a board of motion picture censors to be appointed by the regents of the State University. That the measure passed both houses of the legislature does not imply by any means that it represents the majority view of the public. On the contrary, public sentiment is strongly against the film censorship idea, and Governor Whitman will be meeting the wishes of the people if he vetoes the bill.

There is no more reason why motion pictures should be censored than that books, pictorial representations, the press, and the stage should be passed upon by official arbiters of morals. The whole idea is undemocratic and impracticable. As for the Cristman-Wheeler bill, the main objections to it may be briefly set down as follows:

> In providing for censoring films found to be "sacrilegious, obscene, indecent, or immoral, or tending to debase and corrupt the morals," the board would be performing unnecessary work, as the present laws are ample to cover all such exhibitions.
>
> The proposed law would not protect the child as well as it is protected now by the National Board of Review, which provides special programmes for children and stimulates exhibitions for their benefit.
>
> There would be constant litigation if the bill became law, as manufacturers would not hesitate to bring mandamus proceedings if they disagreed with the board's judgment. This has been the experience in the three states which have adopted special censorship.
>
> No provision is made for approval in part of a film. It must be either passed as a whole or rejected. This would be unfair to the manufacturer, as under the present plan the proportion of eliminations to rejections is about twenty to one.
>
> The motion picture, broadly speaking, is amusement rather than education, and jurisdiction over it should not be given to an educational body.
>
> If we must have film censorship, it should be directed by the federal government and not by the states. It is unfair to the manufacturer to ask him to cater to the whims of different boards of censorship. There should be one standard of morals for the whole country.

The motion picture industry is regulated sufficiently as it is to meet all reasonable demands. The National Board of Review inspects 99 per cent. of all films put out, and the morals of the motion picture today, generally speaking, are on as high if not a higher plane than those of the spoken drama. The chief fault to be found with moving pictures is that the serious ones are often outlandishly ridiculous, and the alleged comedies an insult to the intelligence of the average audience. If a state censorship would be the means of remedying this state of affairs there might be some excuse for considering the proposal. Otherwise no.

THE EVENING SUN, THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1916.

Meddling With the Movies.

The proposals to subject moving picture films to censorship by Federal and State authorities are worse than useless. The most direct result from enacting such meddlesome measures—a result that would be felt by the pocket of every movie fan—would be an increase in moving picture show admissions to meet the new taxes. How heavily these taxes would fall is indicated by the fact that the State law would impose a levy of $10 for every 1,000 feet of original film examined and $5 for every 1,000 feet of duplicate film.

But this, while the most obvious, is not the most pernicious feature of the movie censorship scheme. If we are to have movie censors why not play censors, book censors and newspaper censors? In its nature moving picture censorship is un-American if not unconstitutional. How it might be exercised to the injury of certain producers and the advantage of others, should unprincipled politicians gain control, need not be explained.

Fortunately Congress has not yet passed the law creating a board of five Federal moving picture censors as proposed, and the Washington bill may die in committee. But the New York Legislature has passed the Cristman-Wheeler bill and only Governor WHITMAN can prevent it from becoming law by vetoing it. This he should do without hesitation. Moving picture plays are clean enough, and those that are silly could not be suppressed by the censors on that score only.

MORNING TELE[GRAPH] THURSDAY, MAY

Faversham Closing.

J[illegible] Peltret, who has [been] f[illegible] of William Faversham [illegible] "[illegible]" this season, arrived [illegible] yesterday and announced that [illegible] would close up shop on Saturday [illegible] in Binghamton. Mr. [illegible] Peltret, may be a highly [illegible] of general diversion throughout [illegible] try, but they did not interfere [illegible] box office business of the Faversham tour, save in one instance.

"We struck a Virginia town [illegible] after 'The Birth of a Nation' [illegible] played there," declared Peltret [illegible] day, "and the receipts of [illegible] looked like the standing of the [illegible] in the National League. The [illegible] naturally took all the money [illegible] of that town."

Rialto Gossip.

Theodore Mitchell is on his [illegible] the Coast to look after the [illegible] of the new Griffith 12-reel [illegible] Mother and the Law."

Max Wi[illegible]

NEW YORK AMERICAN, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1916.

ATE CENSORSHIP FOR MOVING PICTURES GETS DEATH BLOW AT HEARING

oes of Measure Enacted by Legislature Tell Governor Why It Should Not Become a Law—Whitman Is Expected to Veto Cristman Bill.

lbany, May 11.—State censorship the movies was handed one stag- ing blow after another at the ring before Governor Whitman ay on the Christman-Wheeler bill. tinguished educators, representa- s of the church, bench, bar, bus- s, official and labor world at- ked the measure from every le.

dvocates of the bill were finally ded to admit it was improperly wn and if signed would have to radically amended by the next islature to remedy gross in- tices to the motion-picture in- try.

TO IS EXPECTED.

t is conceded in official circles to- ht that Governor Whitman will to the bill. It is recognized as in- ceivable that any governor would n a bill in the face of such a pre- nderance of evidence of its uncon- tutional and unjust provisions.

A joker in the bill which would ce a burden of $800,000 a year on motion picture producers without benefit to the State was brought the attention of the Governor by alter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph Company.

This joker provides that in addition the censorship fee of $10 a reel, a py of each reel must be filed with Board of Censors. The cost of ch reel would be $40, a total for the ar of approximately $800,000. In dition the State would be put to e expense of constructing a special rehouse with fireproof vaults in hich to store the films.

"But no such thing was ever in- nded," insisted Senator Christman, troducer of the bill.

"Nevertheless the provision is in e bill and there can be no other nstruction," insisted the Governor.

UDGE CULLEN FILES BRIEF.

Edgar M. Cullen, former Chief dge of the Court of Appeals, filed a ief with the Governor declaring at the censorship bill "violates the ate and Federal constitutions as ell as the elemental principles of stice."

Bainbridge Colby, one of the most tinguished progressives in the untry, attacked censorship as hate- l and odious. He declared it origi- ated in political corruption and was st evolved to protect the British rliament from exposure of graft d corruption.

Martin W. Littleton pointed out that bill gave no right of appeal to the cture man whose work was rejected the Board of Censors though the gents might revoke a certificate of proval after a picture had been once cepted and the producer had spent rge sums in marketing it. He in- ted this provision is unconstitu- nal and quoted an opinion of the urt of Appeals to support his con- ntion.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst eared censorship would be a black ark against motion pictures and ould keep the best intellect out of e business. He said:

"I would not write a sermon if be- re I preached I had to submit it to board of censors of my own congre- ation."

Dr. Cranston Brenton, a college pro- ssor and chairman of the National oard of Review, formerly called the ational Board of Censors, said any gal censorship was unnecessary. he board of which he is chairman nsists of 250 members. Of this num- r 165 are prominent women, eleven e clergymen and three doctors. This ard now protects the public from moral and improper pictures.

PINION OF JUDGE CULLEN.

Edgar M. Cullen, former Chief Jus- e of the Court of Appeals, in his inion on the unconstitutionality of e bill, wrote as follows:

"In my opinion the act is in con- ict with the constitution, both tate and Federal. It is plainly the tention of the statute to submit e right to exhibit moving pictures the uncontrolled will of the Board Regents—uncontrolled either y a review in the courts or by any rinciple by which the power is to exercised. For this reason the tatute is void.

"On this matter the Supreme Court the United States says:

"'In conclusion, we may observe hat the Ohio statute gives a review y the courts of the State of the ecision of the Board of Censors.'

"No such review is granted in the roposed statute under examina- on.

beyond dispute; that is the ar- trary power vested in the board of regents to at any time revoke the license given by it or by its subor- dinate, the board of censors.

"It seems to me shocking that any legitimate business should be sub- jected to the whim of public offithat the proprietor shall have notice of any application to revoke his license.

"Assuming for argument only that this suggestion is well founded, it leads to another absurdity; that is that the revocation is complete upon service of the notice of the application to revoke, and before the owner or exhibitor has been heard.

"This is pure 'Jedwood' justice—'hang first and try afterward.' It needs neither argument nor authority to establish that such a provision violates the constitution as well as the most elementary principles of justice."

INTERFERES WITH CITY RULE.

Ex-Mayor Cutler, of Rochester, representing the Chamber of Commerce of that city, declared that the censorship bill interferes with the principle of home rule for cities.

L. F. Scott, representing the People's Church of New York City and the conference of mayors of the State, filed 50 telegrams with the Governor opposing the bill. The signers included Mrs. A. E. Viola, of the New York City Missions; Gerhard R. Lomer, School of Journalism of Columbia University; W. Frank Persons, director of the Charity Organizations Society of New York; Raymond P. Kaighn, senior secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of New York, and Ralph Folks, Commissioner of Public Works, in Manhattan.

WOMEN OPPOSE MEASURE.

Miss Mary Gray Peck, of Geneva, N. Y., chairman of the Drama, Education and Civic committees of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, said:

"This bill proposes no solution of the child problem. You know, Governor, that the consumer always pays the tax. This law would mean that the poor could not see the show. It would put the movies out of reach of the common people."

James S. Holland presented the opposition of the State Federation of Labor. He also read a strong letter from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, opposing the Cristman bill.

Assistant District Attorney Abraham G. Meyers spoke for District Attorney Swann, asking the Governor to veto the bill.

AN EFFECTIVE ARGUMENT.

Walter W. Irvin made a very effective argument against the bill, showing how censorship had operated in other States. He said:

"In Pennsylvania the censor refused to permit pictures of Villa to be shown in news reels. The reason given was Villa is a murderer and a bandit, and the showing of his picture will create bitterness; and this was a time when every newspaper in the country was printing pictures of Villa.

"The same board in Pennsylvania cut out two scenes of a picture called the 'Battle Cry of Peace,' which was intended to illustrate the necessity for and to educate the people to a belief in preparedness."

"Yes, I saw that picture," interrupted Governor Whitman, Mr. Irwin continued.

"Well, if you had seen it in Pennsylvania you would not have seen two of the most important scenes. In Pittsburgh one exhibitor hired a company of actors and staged the scenes cut out by the censors. The board even ordered him not to show on the screen a statement explaining that the scenes staged by the actors had been cut out by the censors. They withdrew that order when he threatened to paint the explation on a canvas and carry it on the stage every night."

Mr. Irwin explained that the operation of the Cristman bill would mean a loss during the first year to the motion picture industry of $1,813,125.

William M. Seabury, brother of the Judge of the Court of Appeals, presented the opposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. Maurice Simmons represented the Societf for the Protection of Immigrants.

The New York City delegation came to Albany in a special train of six cars. On arrival they were met by a big motor truck sent to Albany by the International Film Service with a petition signed by 75,000 persons.

The Governor accepted an invitation to meet the delegation and be photographed with them on the steps of the Capitol. The picture showing the Governor meeting the 150 churchmen, educators, lawyers and motion picture producers will be shown all over the State at once.

PETITION SIGNED BY 75,000.

Canon William Sheave Chase led the advocates of the bill.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, State president of the Women's Christian eTmperance Union, made an appeal for protection of the morals of of the State. Other sp cost the manufac

It was half-past six before the "movie" special started for New York. The train was in charge of R. P. Allison, special passenger agent of the New York Central, and John C. Flinn, of the trans- Company, was in charge of the delega- portation arrangements for the delegates.

Among those who made the trip were Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, representing the Authors' League; Eugene A. Johnson, of the Musicians' Union; Richard A. Roiland, Joseph W. Engel and Arthur James, Metro Film Company; Harry Cohn, Quality; J. Lawrence Weber, Popular; Charles Madock, Columbia and Rolfe; J. A. Berst, Pathé; W. E. Shallenberger, George M. Sites, Astra; Albert S. Levino, Federal; Jesse L. Lasky, Lasky Feature Play Company; Harry E. Aitken, Triangle; Edwin Thanhouser and Lloyd Lonergan, Thanhouser Film Corporation; Thomas W. Broadhurst, T. G. Wiley, Gordon Meyer, general counsel, of the Paramount; Fred J. Harrington, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; W. A. Johnston, of the Motion Picture News; B. H. Stern, Essanay; P. A. Powers, Universal; Joseph Shear, Solax; Herbert Blache, Blache Film Company; A. Aaronson, Peerless; Adam Kessel, New York Motion Picture Company; Briton N. Busch, World Film Company, R. W. McFarland, Lubin; Paul Comelin, Mutual Film, and John R. Freuler,

Evening Post Press
W YORK, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1916.

WHITMAN AGAINST MOVIE CENSOR BILL; VETO IS EXPECTED

Replying to Film Industry Protest, He Declares Measure Defective.

300 STORM STATE CAPITOL

Carrying Banners and Led by Counsel, Picture Folk Get Four-Hour Hearing.

Carrying banners inscribed "The Movies Must Not Be Censored" about 300 representatives of the leading motion picture companies in the country stormed the Executive Chamber in the Capitol in Albany yesterday in opposition to the Cristman-Wheeler bill, which aims to put the State Censorship Board, under supervision of the State Board of Regents.

Governor Whitman, by many questions he asked of sponsors of the measure, indicated that he considered the objections well founded and would veto the legislation. Following the hearing, which lasted four hours, the Governor said:

"If this bill should become a law I think it would have to be amended."

The provision intended to give the State Board of Regents power to withdraw approval of a film passed by the censors, while the measure gives the producers no power of appeal, was the principal point of attack.

The arguments of the movie producers were supplemented by clergymen and officers of civic and social welfare organizations and by the chairman of the National Board of Review.

Arguing for the measure were clergymen of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish denominations, and representatives of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the American Humane Society and State and City Sunday School associations.

Brief Calls Bill a Menace.

The opponents of the measure presented their strongest argument in a brief submitted by Edgar M. Cullen, former Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, attacking the bill as unconstitutional and a serious danger to the motion picture industry.

"Until recently," he said, "it was the great boast of our people in every part of the country that ours was 'a Government of laws, not of men.' I fear there has been, of late, a remarkable abandonment of that principle. It seems to me shocking that any legitimate business should be subject to the whim of public officers, however high in character or pure in motive.

"In my opinion, the act recently passed by the two houses of the Legislature and now submitted to the Governor for approval or disapproval, entitled:

"'An act to amend the education law in relation to the regulation of moving picture exhibitions by a board of censors under the supervision and control of the regents of the State of New York,' is in conflict with the Constitution, both State and Federal."

"Joker" Seen by Littleton.

Martin W. Littleton, representing the movie interests, told the Governor:

"Disorganized mental activities of freak reformers are responsible for this bill. The next step is a censorship of the press, the magazine and the pulpit."

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the State of New York, was the chief speaker in favor of the bill. She said that movies should be held to a "strict accountability" in order to safeguard the younger generation.

"Vampire plays which deal with the hard side of life," she said, "are carried to such an extreme that they are positively dangerous to our girls and boys."

May 12 1916
YORK TRIBUNE.

WHITMAN HOLDS 'MOVIE' HEARING

Governor Intimates He May Veto Censorship Bill.

200,000 PROTESTS FILL MOTOR TRUCK

Ex-Judge Cullen and M. W. Littleton Appear for Film Companies.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.]

Albany, May 11.—Fortified by distinguished counsel, a memorandum of an ex-Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals and an automobile truck filled with nearly 200,000 votes against "movie" censorship, several hundred representatives of the film industry came to Albany to-day to oppose, before Governor Whitman, the Cristman-Wheeler bill creating a board of censors under the State Regents. Opposed to them they found a large number of religious and civic organizations.

There is every indication that the movie men will win the fight. While Governor Whitman would not indicate his action, he said that it needed amending, while his questions led to the believe that he would not sign it.

The memorandum of ex-Chief Judge Edgar M. Cullen of the Court of Appeals was filed with the Governor by J. Robert Lubin, representing the motion picture industries. It held that the Cristman bill violated both the state and Federal constitutions, in that it permits the Regents to revoke at their discretion the censors' approval, uncontrolled by a review of the courts or any principle by which the power is to be exercised. At the same time, it was pointed out, there was no redress to the Regents if a film were rejected by the censors.

"This is plainly unconstitutional," said Judge Cullen, "for no man can be deprived of his property without a hearing."

Martin W. Littleton made a bitter attack on the bill because of what he termed the arbitrary powers it conferred on the censors and the Regents.

"I don't care whether you are ministers or not, surely you who drew this bill cannot say you have been square with the industry," declared Mr. Littleton, turning to Senator Cristman and Assemblyman Wheeler, the introducers, who were surrounded by several clergymen and church workers. "A statute to be valid must confer equal rights on both parties. This bill is illiterate, miserably constructed and hopelessly unjust to the motion picture industry."

Bainbridge Colby and W. W. Irwin also spoke against the bill. The latter declared that it would result in a loss of $1,813,000, of which about $830,000 would be in film prints to be filed with the Regents in accordance to the law.

The advocates of the bill were headed by Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, who said there was an imperative need of regulation because of the millions of children the movies reach. The Rev. Father Joseph A. Dunney, of this city, also declared that while motion pictures had a great educational power they had been exploited in the wrong direction.

Others who spoke for the bill were Mrs. Ella Boole, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; Henry N. Niles, of the Central Presbyterian Church, of Brooklyn; Frank L. Brown, of the World's Sunday School Association; Rabbi Maurice H. Harris, W. J. Southerton, president of the Sunday School Union, of Brooklyn; and Francis J. Sullivan, of the Brooklyn branch of the American Federation of Catholic Societies.

NEW YORK HERALD,
FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1916.

GOVERNOR HEARS FILM MEN ON CENSOR BILL

Special Trainload of Opposition Goes to Albany and Oratory Is Loosed—Mr. Whitman Hears Both Sides.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

ALBANY, N. Y., Thursday.—A special trainload of film producers and exhibitors from New York debouched on the capital to-day for the purpose of opposing the Christman-Wheeler bill, now before Governor Whitman for his signature, which would create a board of censors to pass upon all future film productions at the rate of $10 per reel.

With the film men came a formidable array of counsel, and the whole delegation, 125 men and two women strong, immediately took possession of the Ten Eyck Hotel and gave a very good imitation, in one reel, of trying to eat the proprietor out of house and home. They filled the two dining rooms and the grill and overflowed into the barroom. The boom in cocktails was enormous, for there was big work to be done. At one table Daniel Frohman, general director of the Famous Players Film Company, presided. Surrounding him were such men as Jesse L. Lasky, of the Lasky Feature Film Company; J. J. McCarthy, general representative of David W. Griffith, and J. J. Brulatour, of the Eastman Company, who gets a little piece of money every time anybody uses a foot of film, which is very, very often. Harry E. Aitken, of the Triangle, presided at another. In a corner, wotting not of such things as films, sat Public Service Commissioner William Hervey and a party of friends.

Governor Is "Filmed."

The Governor greeted the motion picture men on the Capitol steps and was "filmed" with them smiling broadly.

In his private chambers preceding the hearing Governor Whitman received one of the protesting delegates, the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, for a few moments. Meanwhile the others quickly filled all the chairs and the overflow stood four or five deep all around the room. There were several women in the crowd. It was the biggest matinee Governor Whitman has had all season.

Presently the Governor appeared. Every one arose and then sat down as he did. The business of the hearing was quickly on. J. Robert Rubin, chairman of the Grand Committee of Organized Opposition, told the Governor that there would be about fourteen speakers all together. The Executive smiled rather dubiously at this and finally set two hours apart to hear both sides—one hour for each.

Bainbridge Colby was the first speaker against the bill. He said censorship was un-American, and he hated it and thought everybody else ought to, including the Governor. He thought it was a step backward, and that in time the State would want to censor the press. And he read from Governor Whitman's own speeches in which he told a group of newspaper publishers that the freedom of the press must be preserved at all costs. The idea was that the Governor could think the same about the film business if he liked.

Dr. Parkhurst declared against censorship and said if he had to submit his sermon each week to a board of censors of his congregation he simply would not think of preaching.

Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Review, which now passes upon ninety-nine per cent of all films manufactured, told of the care taken by that body to eliminate anything objectionable. He thought the State could get along quite well without any more censors. Lester F. Scott, director of the People's Institute, asked the Governor to veto the bill, on the broad ground that "movies" are the poor people's chief diversion and well regulated enough at present.

By this time the opposition's hour was up, and Mr. Rubin was holding the watch nervously on all the speakers, but he whispered to Miss Mary G. Peck, of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, that she could have three minutes. She told what he said out loud to the Governor and he said that to tell in three minutes what the General Federation of Women's Clubs thought was some task (laughter and applause).

Martin W. Littleton, one of the big headliners of the afternoon, who represented David W. Griffith, was reserved until the last. He delivered a telling argument, and the Governor listened with close attention. Apparently the delegation opposed thought that he had shot the bill so full of holes that it was beyond all help. Abram G. Meyer, Assistant District Attorney of New York, spoke against the bill and in behalf of his chief, District Attorney Charles S. Swann, and asked for its veto.

Then came the opposition, led by Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, who said that the manufacturers and exhibitors were all wrong, and that while he was friendly to the films in general and owns a new picture machine himself, he thought the business needed censoring in spots and that the bill is sound and safe. The Rev. Father McGuire, of Albany, who said he spoke in behalf of all the parochial school children of that city, and indirectly represented all of the school children of the State, made one of the most telling addresses in behalf of the bill.

The Governor has ten days in which to render a decision. The guesses here to-night are that he will sign the bill.

Cost to Film Interests.

If he does it will cost the motion picture interests a little matter of $1,700,000 the first year.

The figures are those of W. W. Irwin, manager of the Vitagraph and companies, who was another who opposed the bill. The new law calls for a print of each film censors as required.

The Question of Motion Picture Censorship Now Up to the Governor.

The question of motion picture censorship in New York State is now squarely up to Governor Whitman. It would be superfluous for The Morning Telegraph to advise him further in the matter by reviewing at length the reasons which would justify a veto. He is now in possession of the arguments that have been made against the Cristman-Wheeler bill, and he is also in possession of the argument presented by the sponsors of that measure. It may not be out of place, however, to call the Governor's attention to this one fact: There is no New York censorship of motion pictures now, and motion pictures continue to be the most popular form of amusement for the masses—for men and for children.

The Cristman-Wheeler bill assumes that these patrons of the photo-play have vitiated tastes; that they are supporting a form of amusement that is not everything it should be. It assumes that unless they are protected by a benevolent supervision of their morals they will be injured. In other words it seems to be the contention of the Cristman-Wheeler crowd that the people are so base, inherently, that they cannot be trusted as the keepers of their own consciences. The Governor, who was elected to his present office by a majority of the people can hardly afford to adopt this view. It rejects the fundamentals upon which this government is founded.

URGE GOVERNOR TO VETO CENSORSHIP

Why Governor Whitman Should Veto the Cristman-Wheeler Bill.

It is unconstitutional.
It would be unjust if it were constitutional.
It is class legislation without representation.
It is undemocratic, superfluous and arrogant.
The bill is vague and provocative of endless litigation.
It would cost the industry nearly $2,000,000 a year.
It would put an end to the popular-priced movie.
It would destroy, by delay, all film news services.
It is opposed by the National Federation of Women's Clubs.
The American Federation of Labor is opposed to it.
It would put the moving pictures beyond the reach of the poor.
It is a blow at a great art, as well as at a great industry.
It is destructive instead of constructive and reactionary instead of progressive.

(Continued From Page 1.)

tion of costly property without any process of law and without any of those safeguards to the rights of property which are guaranteed by the Federal and State constitutions.

Governor Whitman set aside one hour to listen to the arguments of the opponents of the disputed bill, and another hour for the pleadings of those who favor it.

The hearing commenced about 2.30 this afternoon before an informal audience, largely composed of the trainload of delegates who had come from New York City to urge the veto. It was arranged that the opponents of the measure should begin the argument, and in spite of the brevity of the speeches only seven of the listed objectors could be heard during the ninety minutes to which their time was extended. J. Robert Rubin, general counsel for the New York State Exhibitors' League, introduced Bainbridge Colby, who opened the argument for a veto by saying:

"This measure, careless in preparation, vague in meaning and arbitrary in its scope, is a thing alien to the very idea and principal of democracy in that it confers a power without appeal or representation upon a small and utterly irresponsible group of individuals. You are a statutory officer, your Excellency, and your power is great, but it is not so great and could never be made as arbitrary, as the unwarranted and unconstitutional power which this bill proposes to vest in a board of three censors. They would be answerable to no man or body of men if this bill became a law; from their decision there would be no appeal, no defense, no escape. They could literally obliterate millions of dollars' worth of property without giving its owners either time or opportunity to defend their rights in it."

Blow at a Great Art.

Mr. Colby made courteous reference to the activities of some religious organizations in the framing and passage of the Cristman-Wheeler bill, adding that the tendency toward censorship had always been manifested by churches, all denominations of which insist upon "the right to censor other denominations, even to the extent of throwing rocks through their windows, burning their objectionable books and, in the early days, going so far as to destroy their houses of worship and even putting their preachers to death." He pleaded for the same freedom for the screen which is accorded to the press, the stage and public speech, and said that it would be a disgrace to New York "to have three little Dogberry moralists strutting about the State with the unbridled power to hinder or destroy the development of a great art and a vital industry at their own sweet will."

W. W. Irwin, general counsel for the Vitagraph company, urged the disastrous results of divergent and whimsical censorship as now disclosed by the various boards of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kansas and Maryland. He recited the case in Ohio where the board of censors of that State raised an embargo on a film which showed Francisco Villa as a "murderer, bandit and outlaw," insisting that such language and such pictures must cease on the ground that "they would arouse bitter feeling." Mr. Irwin produced figures in which it was estimated that at the rate fixed by the Cristman-Wheeler bill it would annually cost the motion picture men now in the business $1,813,123 merely to defray the cost of furnishing the censors with the reels of new pictures and of those now in operation in the State of New York. He said that many present factors and small organizations would be bankrupted or driven out of the field if such a law were made operative.

Referring to the arbitrary arrogance of an unbridled censorship, he added:

"A few weeks ago the Motion Picture Board of Trade prepared some animated cartoons in criticism of censorship, which were attached to all or nearly all of the eleven news reels issued one particular week; and which bore a subtitle asking for the support of moving picture patrons in opposition to censorship. This title was arbitrarily and absolutely barred by the Pennsylvania Censors. In other words, this Censor Board in Pennsylvania has become so obsessed with its power that it even went so far as to deny the right of an American citizen to criticize legislation or rather to criticize the manner in which the legislation was being put into effect."

Clergymen Want Veto.

The Rev. Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Review, explained the activities of the 250 members of that organization in the appraisement of suitable films and in their objections to pictures of questionable value or downright evil. He said that there were eleven clergymen among the half dozen of other professional representatives in that body, and that they all served without pecuniary reward or any selfish motive other than to maintain the already high and "always improving standards of the motion picture industry." Mr. Brenton pleaded for the same liberty for the screen which is granted to the press and the pulpit.

The Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst said that he was vigorously opposed to the censorship of films because he foresaw that it would operate as an indictment of an institution whose activities thus far and whose opportunities for the future are all enlisted for the lasting and uplifting service of the world. He caustically referred to the average volunteer censor as "a small-bore freak," and said that the proposed bill would "put a black mark, uncalled for and undeserved, upon one of the most potential vehicles the world has ever known for the education, edification and sane entertainment of people of all classes."

"I would never write another sermon," declared Dr. Parkhurst, "or if I wrote one that even a board of censors from my own congregation was empowered to censor, I would never deliver it."

Women Oppose Bill.

Mary Gray Peck, of the dramatic committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs of America, said that the organization which she represented was unanimously in favor of the present National Board of Review and unalterably opposed to the present censorship bill and to all State censorship measures.

"We are opposed to this measure and to all political or governmental measures looking to the restriction and arbitrary interference with the moving pictures," said Miss Peck. "If this undemocratic and uncalled-for interference is copied by all of the States, we will have forty-eight conflicting bodies with arbitrary power to hinder, embarrass and even destroy the finest and most practical opportunity for education and amusement ever placed within the reach of the poor people of this country. This bill, if made into a law, will put the 'movies' out of the reach of the poor of New York. It will inevitably strangle a great art. I urge you to veto the bill, because it is narrow, undemocratic, destructive and a vital blow at the wise American idea of educating public opinion instead of trying to force it."

A letter of strenuous protest written by President Samuel Gompers on behalf of the American Federation of Labor was then read to the Governor, urging him to veto the bill. Abraham G. Meyer read a similar protest from District Attorney Swann of New York, and Mr. L. F. Scott, on behalf of the 2,000 members of the People's Church of Cooper Union Hall, presented a petition from that organization, pleading for a veto the measure. The New York City Mission, the League for Political Education, the Young Men's Christian Association and other organizations were represented on petitions for the veto.

Unconstitutional and Unfair.

Concluding a lengthy opinion in which he points out the unconstitutionality of the proposed law, former Chief Justice Cullen, in the document filed with Governor Whitman yesterday, wrote:

"But the proposed legislation is not only vicious, but it is unconstitutional in another respect. The statute provides: 'The regents may, in their discretion,' revoke the approval of the pictures 'at any time.' The regents are thus authorized to revoke the license at any time, and the revocation becomes complete on the service of a notice, as to what is to be the character of the notice, it is difficult to understand. Not only does the statute plainly so prescribe in words, but, equally plainly, it was in the contemplation of the draftsman of the law, that a license already granted, might be revoked by the board of regents at any time.

"There is no provision for giving the proprietor of the exhibition any notice or hearing, and his property may be destroyed without his ever having had an opportunity to be heard in its defense. This is plainly unconstitutional, for no man can be deprived of his property without a hearing. Even in the case of a liquor license, the statute expressly provides for a judicial hearing before the license can be revoked and the holder's business destroyed. For this lack of provision for notice and hearing, the statute is in conflict with the fundamental law of this State. It has been repeatedly declared by the Court of Appeals, in the tax cases, that no tax is valid unless the citizens have a right to be heard. Equally, no statute is valid which authorizes the revocation of a man's license to carry on a particular business, without offense on his part and without a hearing as to whether he has committed any offense. A power as monstrous as this is not to be found on the statute books of this State, nor, I think, on that of any State."

The advocates of the Cristman-Wheeler bill urged its confirmation by the Governor for the same reasons that rule the issuance of licenses to physicians, lawyers, and all of those activities which are at the service of the public for a profit. It was recited that the bill has the endorsement of the Methodist Conference, the New York County Bar Association and other religious and educational institutions, and that the bill, if made operative would net over $1,000,000 annually to the State.

CENSORSHIP PROTEST HAS NATIONAL SCOPE

Governor Whitman Besieged With Arguments Asking Veto for Cristman-Wheeler Film Bill. Measure Declared Unconstitutional.

BULLETIN.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

ALBANY, May 11.

At the close of the hearing the Governor was asked if he would give an expression of his attitude as to whether he would sign or veto the measure providing for a State board of censors. His only reply was "In case the Cristman-Wheeler motion picture bill became a law it would need amending."

By JOHN H. RAFTERY.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

ALBANY, May 11.

A protest of national significance and scope was heard by Governor Whitman to-day in the final arguments against the Cristman-Wheeler film censorship bill. The men and women pleading for this veto to the objectionable measure, were, in many instances the accredited representatives of organizations that are active in the professions, in the religious and educational affairs, in the business circles and in the organized labor unions of the whole country.

Numerically and financially speaking, the motion picture business had the largest representation, but through President Samuel Gompers the American Federation of Labor spoke emphatically in protest against the bill. Through Mary Gray Peck, the Federated Women's Clubs of the United States urged Governor Whitman to veto the measure. Daniel Frohman, representing the interests of the legitimate stage, was here in person to raise his voice against the obnoxious measure. The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, clergyman of extended activities and high standing, inveighed against the proposed law. Former Chief Justice Cullen of the Court of Appeals of New York submitted his opinion to the effect that the Cristman-Wheeler bill is in violation of both national and State constitutions and antagonistic to the most elementary principles of justice.

Great Industry Menaced.

The fact that New York furnishes most of the enormous sums now invested in the motion picture business of the United States was adduced as a cogent reason why the proposed board of arbitrary censors in this State could cripple or destroy a national industry if entrusted with the sweeping power conferred by this bill. The established practice of releasing over 75 per cent of the film product of the whole country in New York State, was cited as a vital reason why the fate of so enormous an investment should not be placed at the mercy or the whim of a board of three censors against whose judgment, under the threatened law, there would be no appeal, no recourse.

Numerous instances, cases in point, were brought to the attention of the Governor for the purpose of convincing him that no other State in the Union has either proposed or enacted a film censorship law that is as "vague, unfair and mischievous" as this one now under his consideration. At their worst, it was argued, the film censorship laws of other States provided the factors in that industry some course of defense, some tribunal of appeal. The Cristman-Wheeler measure, it was urged, amounts to a power of confiscation, the utter destruc-

(Continued on Page 5, Cols. 4 & 5.)

May 12 1916
W YORK TRIBUNE

he Play the Thing?

t is unqualifiedly not the thing, if you e the word of any tired business man. ys, like pictures, or poems, or novels, just fluff. They amuse you or bore u, depending upon your particular taste. t they have no more relation to the real uff of life—to the ticker, the putting een and the family—than, well, a flower ed has to the dinner table. Your wife sticks a few daffodils on the centrepiece by way of cheering up the look of things; but their food value is nil.

It is an extreme case to put up on the other side of the argument, but there is a play of to-day that is unmistakably something other than fluff. "Justice," we mean. A work of imagination, it bites deep into almost every one that sees it. It does not relate to golf or bank accounts. It does touch life—the community life that we all ead, with vice and crime and mistakes and ailure not so very far around the corner rom the best of us. Taken literally, it oes not apply with complete accuracy to he facts of crime and punishment in this tate. Lawyers have pointed out that Galsworthy's victim would have been more ently and sensibly dealt with under our enal Code. Its power as a work of art, xpressing a general truth in terms of parcular human beings, is not the least eakened, however. The central idea, the structive, senseless rigidity of legal procdure, is brought home as not all the lectres of the most eloquent prison reformer uld do it. "Unacknowledged legislators the world" poets were called by Shelley. nd such art as Galsworthy's makes good e idea.

How about the cases not extreme—the ory by Mary Roberts Rinehart; the revue George M. Cohan, the "Birth of a Na on"? Well, their effect upon our logic and r point of view may not be as obvious. t their entrance into manners and talk d lives is just as certain and often quite powerful in producing an effect. Take, r instance, that fundamental quality of r national make-up—sentimentality. It aves sweet, comforting, unreal, unfrank tion—demands it and is in turn kept ive by it. Art thus reduced to its lowest rms does not get very deep under human ins. (Glory be!) Most of its content lls off immediately as vanish the plots of vels from the brain of the inveterate vel reader. But little or big, your book your play is life, at least as much life the murder around the corner and this nth's bills. That friendly, cheerful, unroic five-cent weekly is probably a more fluential visitor in your home than is ur best friend.

That is the point which a sight of "Jus e" can bring home, making us perhaps t a shade more discriminating in liking disliking what we read or see next. Let say, as discriminating as in picking an ce boy or the summer's straw hat.

New York Tribune

Material for the Wastebasket.

Governor Whitman should veto the Cristman-Wheeler bill establishing a board of censors for motion pictures as a bureau under the Regents. That proposal is foolish and harmful. There is no need for any censorship other than what now exists: the good sense and the good taste of the managers who produce pictures and the public which pays to see them and the statutes against indecency and immorality enforced by the police. To that is added the work of the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures—a non-official body of experts, made up of persons eminent in business, in philanthropy, in professional life, who act as adviser and critics for the producers of pictures before they are released for public exhibition.

Official censorship by jobholders might register a different opinion from that of these experts and from that of the producers. But there is no earthly reason to suppose that it could be better, wiser, purer or more of a protection for the public.

Aside from the foolishness of the proposal, there must be considered the innate viciousness of it. As the late Mayor Gaynor so sagely said, there never existed a censorship of anything which did not do infinitely more harm than good. There might just as well be a censorship of plays, of books, magazines, newspapers, as of motion pictures. Indeed, there might better be, for with few exceptions the pictures exhibited to-day are made with more scrupulous care to exclude suggestive situations and smut than many books and magazines.

In principle the bill is unwise; in practice it would be a farce and a fraud. It should never have passed the Legislature, even if the clerical lobby backing it was unquestionably sincere in its views. Governor Whitman will serve the community well if he throws it into the wastebasket, where it belongs.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1916 HE MORNING TELEGRAPH

WOMEN'S CLUBS VOTE AGAINST CENSORS BILL

Defeat Resolution Recommending Passage of Federal Measure for Motion Picture Supervision.

The New York City Federation of Women's Clubs went on record yesterday against the Smith-Hughes Federal motion picture commission by voting down the following resolution:

"Be it resolved that the motion picture commission bill, introduced by Senator Hoke Smith and Congressman Hughes, both of Georgia, furnishes a reasonable remedy for the immoral havoc which is being wrought among the youths of our land.

"The now so-called Board of National Censorship is neither national nor a board of censorship; it has no official power from city, State or nation, and is fooling the public, who believes these pictures now being shown have been censored by a national board, which it is proved is only the work of a volunteer board and is inefficient.

"It is therefore to be desired and placed before the Senators and members of the House of Representatives of the United States that the Federal Government should have the power and appoint a commission to license all moral pictures and grant a right that they can be carried from State to State, and the Alluminatti Club of Brooklyn, Mary MacNutt, president, through the appointed chairman of the motion picture committee, begs that all Federated clubs will see to it that a letter is written by them and sent to their Congressmen, begging them to see to it that a Federal commission is formed to pass on all motion pictures before they are shown to the public."

The resolution was defeated, chiefly by the address of Helen Varick Boswell, thus placing the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs on record against Federal censorship.

MAY 13, 1916. HE NEW YORK PRESS.

MOVIE CENSOR IS DODGED BY WOMEN

800 Federation Delegates Leave That Subject to the "Whole People."

30 NEW CLUBS RECEIVED

Telegram Sent to Whitman Urging Him to Veto Argetsinger Bill.

After thirty more clubs had been formally received into membership in the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, thus bringing the total number of clubs in the Federation to more than 300, the 800 odd delegates and an equal number of alternates and visitors, in convention assembled in the Hotel Astor, yesterday morning settled down to talk, not of "shoes and ships and sealing wax," but things no less important.

For instance, moving pictures. A discussion as to whether they should be censored by a Federal commission was introduced by the Illuminati Club of Brooklyn. Helen Varick Boswell, head of the Women's Republican Club, opposed such a resolution on the ground that a matter of such wide application ought to be left to the decision of the whole people. The resolution was dropped.

Discuss Argetsinger Bill.

Then there was a debate about sending a telegram to Governor Whitman urging him to veto the Argetsinger bill, which legalizes the 84-hour week for women in canneries during certain seasons. It was opposed most stoutly by Mrs. J. J. Rooney, who won her first opposition spurs by opposing suffrage.

"We have no right to meddle in the matter," said Mrs. Rooney, in indignant accents. "The women who are concerned, the women in canneries, should speak. It is their voice, not ours, which should be heard."

"How can it be heard," asked some one in the back of the room, "when they have no vote?"

Mrs. Rooney didn't consider it worth while to discuss the matter further.

The upshot was that the telegram was sent, the resolution being carried by a great majority.

Other matters were railroaded through the convention in an unusually businesslike way. A resolution to urge State officials to pass stringent measures against prize fighting met with small enthusiasm until Mrs. Grace G. Wolterbeek of the Gotham Club explained that bull fighting and dog fighting were included in the measure. Whereupon there was much interest manifested and it was passed unanimously.

List of Speakers.

Among the speakers were Lawson Purdy, president of the Department of Taxes and Assessments; Mrs. Harry Hastings, Mrs. Charles H. Griffin, Mrs. John H. Parker, Dr. Cornelia Brandt, Mrs. George Ashwell, Mrs. Maida Craigen, Mrs. Roy Emery Fletcher, Miss Anna C. Moskowitz, Miss Katherine D. Blake, Mrs. Johanna von Wagener, Mrs. Anna C. Hedges Talbot and Mrs. William Cumming Story.

The guests of honor of the convention were Mrs. William Tod Helmuth, Miss Mary Garett Hay, Miss Florence C. Guernsey, Mrs. William Grant Brown, Mrs. Clarence L. Bleakley, Mrs. Shanna Cumming-Jones, Mrs. Montague Marks, Mrs. Ralph Trautman, Mrs. Benjamin Prince, Mrs. J. Hedges Crowell, Mrs. George B. Crawford, Mrs. Henrietta Speke-Seeley, Mrs. Haviland Lund, Mrs. von Wegener, Mrs. Story, H. S. Rowe and Lawson Purdy.

Mrs. Eugene J. Grant presided.

Censorship Unjust to the Workman

By Bainbridge Colby

THE moving picture is to-day the most popular form of the drama. It has become the chosen field of the most gifted writers and the most talented players. It is true that now and then some cheap theatre, making a special appeal to the lewd fellows of the baser sort, is guilty of offenses against decency, but this is a matter for the police, acting under existing provisions of the penal law, which are adequate and rigorous. But these offenses are by no means confined to the moving picture theatres, which, with few exceptions, are devoted to serious art, and seek to attract only respectable patronage, which, happily for us, is the larger patronage.

Under these circumstances, to adopt so discredited a means of regulation as a censorship, and to single out one branch of creative art for humiliation and outlawry, although it is predominantly clean and honest, is a backward step into the darkness. It degrades the dramatist by placing him under a summary jurisdiction otherwise unknown to our law. It puts the property and reputation of a great body of deserving workmen at the mercy of a secret tribunal, which at one stroke can silently annihilate the labor of months and years, without giving any reason, and subject to no appeal. We would not suffer such treatment to be meted out to the burglar or the pickpocket.

GUILDS DENOUNCE IT.

Aside from the objections to a censorship which have been mentioned, namely, the arbitrary character of its power, its tendency to corruption, the injustice of it—there is the further consideration that it has always been denounced and opposed by the great guilds of art and literature. It is a banal proposal—narrow, stupid, provincial—condemned by its operation and observed results, and hated by every man of culture and enlarged understanding in the world.

At a recent inquiry into the dramatic censorship in England, a parliamentary committee received the testimony of many eminent writers—poets, novelists and dramatic authors, including Sir Arthur W. Pinero, John Galsworthy, Thomas Hardy, Henry James, H. G. Wells, Joseph Conrad, Israel Zangwill, Arnold Bennett, Granville Barker, Bernard Shaw, and others of almost equal fame. All sounded a single note—that the censorship tends to deprive the theatre of intellectual life, of the importance to which a free choice of subjects and illustration directly ministers, and to confine it to the trivial and the puerile. The late Henry James summed up the case for art and truth in a few words.

JAMES DEPICTS EVILS.

"It is difficult," said he, "to express the depth of dismay and disgust with which an author of books finds it impressed upon him, in passing into the province of the theatre with the view of laboring there, that he has to reckon anxiously with an obscure and irresponsible Mr. So-and-So, who may by law peremptorily demand of him that he shall make his work square at vital points with Mr. So-and-So's personal and, intellectually and critically speaking, wholly unauthoritative preferences, prejudices and ignorances, and that the less original, the less important, and the less interesting it is, and the more vulgar and superficial and futile, the more it is likely so to square.

"He thus encounters an arrogation of critical authority and the critical veto, with the power to enforce its decisions, that is without parallel in any other civilized country, and which has in this one the effect of relegating the theatre to the position of a mean, minor art, and of condemning it to ignoble dependencies, poverties and pusillanimities."

CENSORSHIP BILL SEEMS DOOMED

(Continued From Page 1.)

Peck, the Federated Women's Clubs of the United States urged Governor Whitman to veto the measure. Daniel Frohman, representing the interests of the legitimate stage, was here in person to raise his voice against the obnoxious measure. The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, clergyman of extended activities and high standing, inveighed against the proposed law. Former Chief Justice Cullen of the Court of Appeals of New York submitted his opinion to the effect that the Cristman-Wheeler bill is in violation of both national and State constitutions and antagonistic to the most elementary principles of justice.

Menace to Great Industry.

The fact that New York furnishes most of the enormous sums now invested in the motion picture business of the United States was adduced as a cogent reason why the proposed board of arbitrary censors in this State could cripple or destroy a national industry if entrusted with the sweeping power conferred by this bill. The established practice of releasing over 75 per cent. of the film product of the whole country in New York State, was cited as a vital reason why the fate of so enormous an investment should not be placed at the mercy or the whim of a board of three censors against whose judgment, under the threatened law, there would be no appeal, no recourse.

"Vague and Mischievous."

Numerous instances, cases in point, were brought to the attention of the Governor for the purpose of convincing him that no other State in the Union has either proposed or enacted a film censorship law that is as "vague, unfair and mischievous" as this one now under his consideration. At their worst, it was argued, the film censorship laws of other States provided the factors in that industry some course of defense, some tribunal of appeal. The Cristman-Wheeler measure, it was urged, amounts to a power of confiscation, the utter destruction of costly property without any process of law and without any of those safeguards to the rights of property which are guaranteed by the Federal and State constitutions.

Governor Whitman set aside one hour to listen to the argments of the opponents of the disputed bill, and another hour for the pleadings of those who favor it.

The hearing commenced about 2:20 in the afternoon before an informal audience, largely composed of the trainload of delegates who had come from New York City to urge the veto. It was arranged that the opponents of the measure should begin the argument, and in spite of the brevity of the speeches only seven of the listed objectors could be heard during the ninety minutes to which their time was extended. J. Robert Rubin, general counsel for the New York State Exhibitors' League, introduced Bainbridge Colby, who opened the argument for a veto by saying:

Colby Opens Arguments.

"This measure, careless in preparation, vague in meaning and arbitrary in its scope, is a thing alien to the very idea and principal of democracy in that it confers a power without appeal or representation upon a small and utterly irresponsible group of individuals. You are a statutory officer, your Excellency, and your power is great, but it is not so great and could never be made as arbitrary, as the unwarranted and unconstitutional power which this bill proposes to vest in a board of three censors. They would be answerable to no man or body of men if this bill became a law; from their decision there would be no appeal, no defense, no escape. They could literally obliterate millions of dollars' worth of property without giving its owners either time or opportunity to defend their rights in it."

Mr. Colby made courteous reference to the activities of some religious organizations in the framing and passage of the Cristman-Wheeler bill, adding that the tendency toward censorship had always been manifested by churches, all denominations of which insist upon "the right to censor other denominations, even to the extent of throwing rocks through their windows, burning their objectionable books, and, in the early days, going so far as to destroy their houses of worship and even putting their preachers to death." He pleaded for the same freedom for the screen which is accorded to the press, the stage and public speech, and said that it would be a disgrace to New York "to have three little Dogberry moralists strutting about the State with the unbridled power to hinder or destroy the development of a great art and a vital industry at their own sweet will."

Irwin Gives "Horrible Examples."

W. W. Irwin, general counsel for the Vitagraph Company, urged the disastrous results of divergent and whimsical censorship as now disclosed by the various boards of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kansas and Maryland. He recited the case in Ohio where the board of censors of that State raised an embargo on a film which showed Francisco Villa as a "murderer, bandit and outlaw," insisting that such language and such pictures must cease on the ground that "they would arouse bitter feeling." Mr. Irwin produced figures in which it was estimated that at the rate fixed by the Cristman-Wheeler bill it would annually cost the motion picture men now in the business $1,813,123 merely to defray the cost of furnishing the censors with the reels of new pictures and of those now in operation in the State of New York. He said that many present factors and small organizations would be bankrupted or driven out of the field if such a law were made operative.

Referring to the arbitrary arrogance of an unbridled censorship, he added:

"A few weeks ago the Motion Picture Board of Trade prepared some animated cartoons in criticism of censorship, which were attached to all or nearly all of the eleven news reels issued one particular week; and which bore a subtitle asking for the support of moving picture patrons in opposition to censorship. This title was arbitrarily and absolutely barred by the Pennsylvania censors. In other words, this censor board in Pennsylvania has become so obsessed with its power that it even went so far as to deny the right of an American citizen to criticize legislation or rather to criticize the manner in which the legislation was being put into effect."

Clergymen Are Opposed.

The Rev. Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Review, expressed the activities of the 250 members of that organization in the appraisement of suitable films and in their objections to pictures of questionable value or doubtful right. He said that there were eleven clergymen among the other half dozen of professions represented in that body, and that they all served without pecuniary reward or any selfish motive other than to maintain the already high and "always improving standards of the motion picture industry." Mr. Brenton pleaded for the same liberty for the screen which is granted to the press and the pulpit.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst said [illegible] looking to the restriction and arbitrary interference with the moving pictures," said Miss Peck. "If this undemocratic and uncalled-for interference is copied by all of the States, we will have forty-eight conflicting bodies with arbitrary power to hinder, embarrass and even destroy the finest and most practical opportunity for education and amusement ever placed within the reach of the poor people of this country. This bill, if made into a law, will put the 'movies' out of the reach of the poor of New York. It will inevitably strangle a great art. I urge you to veto the bill, because it is narrow, undemocratic, destructive and a vital blow at the wise American idea of educating public opinion instead of trying to force it."

Labor's Voice.

A letter of strenuous protest written by President Samuel Gompers on behalf of the American Federation of Labor was then read to the Governor urging him to veto the bill. Abraham G. Meyer read a similar protest from District Attorney Swann of New York, and Mr. L. F. Scott, on behalf of the 2,000 members of the People's Church of Cooper Union Hall, presented a petition from that organization, pleading for a veto of the measure. The New York City Mission, the League for Political Education, the Young Men's Christian Association and other organizations were represented on petitions for the veto.

An Important Brief.

Concluding a lengthy opinion in which he points out the unconstitutionality of the proposed law, former Chief Justice Cullen, in the document filed with Governor Whitman yesterday, wrote:

"But the proposed legislation is not only vicious, but it is unconstitutional in another respect. The statute provides: 'The regents may, in their discretion,' revoke the license of the pictures 'at any time.' The regents are thus authorized to revoke the license at any time, and the revocation becomes complete on the service of a notice. As to what is to be the character of the notice, it is difficult to understand. Not only does the statute plainly so prescribe in words, but, equally plainly, it was in the contemplation of the draftsman of the law, that a license already granted, might be revoked by the board of regents at any time.

"Plainly Unconstitutional."

"There is no provision for giving the proprietor of the exhibition any notice or hearing, and his property may be destroyed without his ever having had an opportunity to be heard in its defense. This is plainly unconstitutional, for no man can be deprived of his property without a hearing. Even in the case of a liquor license, the statute expressly provides for a judicial hearing before the license can be revoked and the holder's business destroyed. For this lack of provision for notice and hearing, the statute is in conflict with the fundamental law of this State. It has been repeatedly declared by the Court of Appeals, in the tax cases, that no tax is valid unless the citizens have a right to be heard. Equally, no statute is valid which authorizes the revocation of a man's license to carry on a particular business, without offense on his part and without a hearing as to whether he has committed any offense. A power as monstrous as this is not to be found on the statute books of this State, nor, I think, on that of any State."

The advocates of the Cristman-Wheeler bill urged its confirmation by the Governor for the same reasons that rule the issuance of licenses to physicians, lawyers, and all of those activities which are at the service of the public for a profit. It was recited that the bill has the endorsement of the Methodist Conference, the New York County Bar Association and other religious and educational institutions, and that the bill, if made operative would net over $1,000,000 annually to the State.

200,000 Protests.

A special train conveyed the representatives of the opponents of the bill from New York to Albany and a motor truck carried 200,000 protests to the executive halls. Many of these were collected at the Exhibitors' exposition at the International Film Company's booth.

Among those in the party which appeared at Albany in opposition to the Cristman-Wheeler measure were the following:

Lee Ochs, president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, accompanied by thirty representative exhibitors from Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn.

The Metro Pictures Corporation was represented by President Richard A. Rowland, Treasurer Joseph W. Engel, Arthur James, Harry Cohn, Edwin M. Saunders, L. Lawrence Webber, president of Popular Plays and Players; Charles Maddock, general manager Columbia Pictures Corporation; Fred J. Balshofer of the Quality Pictures Corporation; B. A. Rolfe, president of Rolfe Photo-Plays (Inc.) and manager of the Strand.

Important Delegates.

President John R. Freuler and Secretary Samuel M. Field, with a number of their officials, represented the Mutual Film Company; Jesse Lasky, Samuel M. Goldfish, Arthur Friend, and John W. Flynn were there in behalf of the Lasky Photoplay Company; Adolph Zukor headed a committee from the Famous Players Company; President W. W. Hopkinson and General Counsel Cordes Meyer represented the Paramount, and William A. Brady with ten associates of the World Film Corporation added their presence to the plea for a veto.

Ten delegates from the International Film Service headed by Manager E. A. MacManus and accompanied by L. J. O'Reilly, secretary to William Randolph Hearst, who was also in charge of the train; General Manager J. A. Berst of Pathe (Inc.); W. E. Shallenberger, president, and A. S. Le Vino, manager, of the Arrow Film Company; J. Stuart Blackton, accompanied by ten of his associates of the Vitagraph Company, and W. W. Irwin, with a dozen others of the V. L. S. E. staff, were among the most resolute petitioners for Governor Whitman's veto of the Cristman-Wheeler bill.

Prominent delegations were on hand from the Moving Picture Board of Trade, the New York State Exhibitors' League, every manufacturer in the business in this State and other men of influence in the legitimate amusement world.

Luncheon at Delmonico's.

A luncheon was held at Delmonico's in New York City during the week, which was given by Lee Ochs to representatives of the foremost film manufacturing concerns and exhibitors in the United States. It was at this session that the fact was made known that former Chief Justice Cullen [illegible] the Governor, pointing out in learned manner the evils of the bill. Among those who spoke at the meeting were:

T. J. Harrington, president of the National Exhibitors' League, who came on from Pittsburg; J. Stuart Blackton, president of the Vitagraph Company; W. W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E.; Walter N. Seligsberg, counsel of the Triangle; Arthur Friend, counsel of the Lasky Photo-play Company; Cordes Meyer, representing the Paramount Picture Corporation; Edwin M. Thanhouser of the Thanhouser Film Company; E. M. Seabury, counsel of the Motion Picture Board of Trade.

On a motion put by Arthur Friend, Mr. Rubin was selected as chairman of the committee to represent the united opposition to the bill. [illegible]

CENSORSHIP BILL SEEMS DOOMED

If It Should Be Signed Governor Whitman Intimates Measure Will Be Amended—Belief That Executive Will Veto It.

GREAT PROTEST REGISTERED

Hundreds Journey to Albany to Voice Objections to Cristman-Wheeler Act—Is Called Destructive and Unconstitutional.

(Special Correspondence The Morning Telegraph.)

Albany, May 12.

One thing, at least, is certain, according to the statement made by Governor Whitman following Thursday's hearing of the Cristman-Wheeler Censorship bill here: If the bill goes through, it will be as a well-amended measure. The signs are that it will not go through, however. Governor Whitman has ten days in which to make up his mind whether or not to affix his signature to the measure, thereby making it a law.

It is believed that, in the face of the tremendous weight of protest against it, the Governor will scarcely sign the bill. Not only motion picture people, but many prominent persons in other walks of life, as well as editorialists on many of the leading newspapers, have denounced the bill as unconstitutional, unjust, arrogant, vague, costly, a blow at a great art, a hardship on the poorer people who attend picture plays and destructive instead of constructive, reactionary instead of progressive.

In the final arguments yesterday against the Cristman-Wheeler film censorship bill a protest of national significance was seen. The men and women pleading for this veto to the objectionable measure, were, in many instances the accredited representatives of organizations that are active in the professions, in the religious and educational affairs, in the business circles and in the organized labor unions of the whole country.

Numerically and financially speaking, the motion picture business had the largest representation, but through President Samuel Gompers the American Federation of Labor spoke emphatically in protest against the bill. Through Mary Gray

(Continued on Page 13.)

Telegraph

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1916.

CENSORSHIP BILL GOES TO THE HOUSE

Representative Hughes Will Submit Report on Measure From Democratic Majority of Education Committee

By GORDON TRENT.

The revised Smith-Hughes bill, providing for Federal censorship of motion pictures, will be reported to the House of Representatives this afternoon, by Representative D. M. Hughes of Georgia, chairman of the House Committee on Education. He will also submit a favorable report from the Democratic majority of the committee. Since the vote in the committee was a very close one, unusual importance is attached to the report of the minority, and it is expected that these members who have been from the first opposed to any form of pre-publicity supervision, will also submit a statement and will oppose the passage of the measure by this session of Congress.

Chairman Hughes will endeavor to have the bill called up in the House at an early date. However, the bill will go to the calendar, and can only be reached in its regular order unless the House should adopt a special rule, taking the measure out of its regular turn. In the meantime, Wilbur F. Crafts, treasurer of the International Reform Bureau, is touring in the West in an effort to spread a prairie fire in favor of the proposed legislation.

It is understood that when the bill is reported, Chairman Hughes will issue a brief statement in which he will contend that a Federal censorship commission should be created in the interest of patrons of the film theatres throughout the country, as well as for the good of the motion picture business. It is the contention of the author of the measure that Federal censorship would be an argument that might be used by the film industry in opposition to the formation of State and municipal censorship boards.

[illegible] ness man and consistent supporter of your policies, and on the behalf of two hundred distinguished authors for whom I have acted as a literary agent, such as Rex Beach, Gilbert Parks, Conan Doyle, Rupert Hughes, Emerson Hough and many others, who cannot register timely protests, I respectfully urge your veto of the New York State censorship bill passed by the Legislature.

"My operations in sixteen years have exceeded $5,000,000 and I feel warranted in stating that this bill will displease the public and prove injurious to the producers, exhibitors and contributors alike."

Actors Form League.

For the first time screen stars have formed an anti-censorship league. The photo-players will wage war on the sole platform that a censored screen trammels the free and full expression of dramatic art and stultifies their artistry.

The inception of the idea of forming such a league is due to Edwin August, and many prominent stars have promised Mr. August their active support. Letters have been mailed to hundreds of photo-players. A session was held at the exposition at Madison Square Garden, to [illegible] Lillian Gish, Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith or Mary [illegible] will be offered the presidency of [illegible]

ork American Editorial

Monday, May 15, 1916

CENSORSHIP!

Copyright, 1916, International News Service.

MONDAY, MAY 15, 1916

As It Has Existed From the Beginning of History.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE,
MONDAY, MAY 15, 1916

SHOULD BE VETOED

Motion Picture Censorship Bill Would Lead to Fraud and Stupidity.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: Permit me to express my unqualified approval of your editorial this morning, "Material for the Wastebasket." The Cristman-Wheeler bill, establishing a board of censors for motion pictures as a bureau under the Board of Regents, ought, in my judgment, to be vetoed, and I have written Governor Whitman to that effect.

I am well aware of the clerical lobby urging this bill and I also know that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in session at Saratoga Springs, indorsed this bill the other morning, when Governor Whitman was present. But everybody who knows anything about such matters at a general conference knows that a lot of resolutions are introduced into such a body before the elections occur just to get the signers' names in print in the daily journal.

You state the absolute truth in your editorial when you say this censorship proposed is "foolish and harmful," that the bill is "unwise in principle" and "in practice it would be a farce and a fraud."

In a personal letter from the late Mayor Gaynor he says: "Once we begin setting up censorships in this country no one can tell where we might end. Some people would prohibit the exhibition of a picture of Luther nailing his thesis to the cathedral door; others would prohibit a picture of the Virgin and Child, and so on."

And in another letter to me he says: "It is better to suffer even a considerable grievance than to set up a still greater evil to remove it."

The arbitrary power of a few men with censorship authority sets up a greater evil than it removes and is utterly abhorrent to the whole spirit of American institutions from the beginning. That spirit is accurately expressed in laws against indecency and immorality. To single out a special class of offenders and put over them a group of political appointees, with authority to say what is or is not immoral and indecent, is a proposal capable of unlimited extension and filled with amazing possibilities of graft, fraud and stupidity.

Governor Whitman should veto the Cristman-Wheeler bill and "zinc" it.

WILLIAM B. TOWER.

New Rochelle, N. Y., May 12, 1916.

A Monarchy with "Law" as the Tyrant.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: Your editorial in this morning's Tribune, "Material for the Wastebasket," is sensible. In fact, it is the only sensible thing I have seen on the subject. My only disagreement with your viewpoint is your crediting the "clerical lobby" as "unquestionably sincere in its views." In my opinion, the only thing sincere about the "clerical lobby" is its loyalty to the ecclesiastical hierarchy of which the lobby is the mouthpiece.

Were I of sporting blood I should readily make a wager that the clergymen back of the censorship bill are not overly supplied with knowledge of the sort of pictures that are being shown in the country generally, of the prevalency of smutty stuff exhibited on the screen and of the attitude of motion picture exhibitors toward the whole question in general. As one who has been trying the thing out on a small scale I suggest that legislation will not solve the problem. Coöperation with the managers of theatres, an attitude of appreciation, publicly, toward the best films shown, such appreciation to be shown in a commendatory word of the film and theatre, and where conditions justify it the introduction of a weekly or semi-weekly programme of motion pictures in the regular church work, will do more to solve the question of the smutty film than all the laws that man can devise.

We seem to be in a period of fads. The legislative fad is all the rage now. To me it is pathetic to find so many ministers losing their heads over the craze, and by giving assent to the new fancy discrediting the very principles on which their ministry is based, thus aligning themselves with forces that for centuries have fought all progress in church and State. Unless a halt is called on this legislative craze we may soon discover that instead of developing a democracy we have established a monarchy, with law as the monarch and tyrant. Such a thing is not impossible, in fact it has become so probable, as well as possible, as to excite our alarm and fear.

F. A. HAWLEY,

Pastor Methodist Episcopal Church.

MAY 14, 1916.
THE MORNING TELEGRAPH, SUNDAY,

The "Well-Earned" Rest Should Be Omitted by the Film Man.

While the film industry is congratulating itself upon the almost certain victory over the censorship bills which were introduced at Albany and which Governor Whitman is confidently expected to veto, there are several features of the situation which should cause those who have the interests of the film business at heart to ponder seriously.

Victory is assured, but the supporters of censorship so nearly carried their designs to a successful completion that he who seizes this opportunity to take a "well-earned" rest is in the same class as the man who fails to carry an umbrella in April. There are going to be more censorship showers—and violent ones. The fact that the cause of the film man has been successful in this particular instance need give him no false sense of security. It behooves him to organize his forces into a stronger, more effective body. He should be more careful than ever that nothing occurs within his ranks that will furnish strength to any of the arguments advanced by the opposition in favor of censorship. From this point on, attention will be directed toward motion pictures and their method of conduct with more care than ever before. The fruits of victory were too nearly within the grasp of the Cristman-Wheeler followers for them to give up without another struggle—one that will doubtless be pressed with much greater vigor than ever before.

There is at present no New York censorship of motion pictures, and there is need of none. Those in closest touch with Governor Whitman give assurances that the Cristman-Wheeler bill will never receive his indorsement. But this does not mean that the motion picture will be freed from the dangers which have been threatening it. It means instead that there is an increased need for watchfulness—an increased need for action, instead of words.

SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1916.
THE MORNING TELEGRAPH

EARLE WILLIAMS GIVES VIEWS ON CENSORSHIP

"Cristman-Wheeler Bill Is a Dead One," Declares Vitagraph Star.

Earle Williams, Vitagraph star, stopped at the International Film Exhibit at Grand Central Palace week before last long enough to be presented to Grace Darling and to cast his ballot against the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill. Mr. Williams was very handsome in his "third-act clothes" and very forceful in his denouncement of the hated censorship measure. He arraigned the Cristman-Wheeler bill as "preposterous and without basic reasoning or logic."

"Every State in the Union," said Mr. Williams, "is menaced at times by a political fanatic element stampeding to put across some bill whose only excuse for existence is to serve as an outlet for their misguided and hysterical efforts. The people responsible for this bill are notorious enemies of everything worth while, and it is a safe bet that they themselves are not familiar enough with the bill to know what it is all about. The bill is a dead one all right, and all it lacks is a grave digger. I should like to be assigned the part. It would be a pleasure to officiate at the obsequies."

Mr. Williams's progress around the Palace was one continuous ovation for the popular star, who is as manly and modest as he is famous. He expressed himself as impressed by the plans of the International Film Service for promotion and expansion.

MORNING TELEGRAPH, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1916.

HUGHES MAKES PLEA FOR CENSORSHIP BILL

Measure Should Be Passed at Once, He Tells House, to Head Off the Local Boards.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

WASHINGTON, May 17.

The revised Hughes-Smith bill for the creation of a Federal censorship of motion picture films destined for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce was reported to the House of Representatives to-day by Representative Dudley M. Hughes of Georgia, chairman of the House Committee on Education. In presenting the bill, with a recommendation from the committee for its early passage, Chairman Hughes makes the prediction that if the Federal film censorship measure is not passed this session "the great majority of motion picture producers will come to Congress—as the Famous Players, Paramount, Lasky, World and Equitable companies have already come—at its next session, demanding the passage of the bill to save them from the tremendous costs and hardships of local censorships."

Chairman Hughes argues that the sooner the bill is passed "the better it will be for the industry" on the theory that it would be easier to prevent the formation of a host of State and municipal censorships if it can be shown that the Federal Government has taken a hand in the game of pre-publicity censorship of interstate films. Mr. Hughes asserts that the bill as reported is "the one way" open to producers to protect themselves from "the ruinous effects" of State and municipal censorship.

Bill Closely Reported.

The bill, while reported by a close vote of a majority of the House Education Committee, is vigorously opposed by a minority of its membership, and there will be several minority reports presented to the House in opposition to the enactment of this or any other Federal censorship proposition. At the time of presenting the report to the House this afternoon, Chairman Hughes gave out the following statement:

"The report which I am submitting to the House fully explains the bill. The committee has endeavored to so frame the measure that it will safeguard the public welfare and at the same time work no unnecessary hardships on the motion picture industry. I believe we have accomplished not only this, but have presented a measure which will vastly benefit the industry in the matter of relieving the producers in a large measure from the oppressive weight of the growing local censorships. This bill is the one way open to the producers to protect themselves from the ruinous effects of State and municipal censorship, for it will make unnecessary the local boards by meeting the public demand for regulation of motion pictures.

Sooner Passed, the Better.

"The sooner the bill becomes law, the better it will be for the industry, for it would be much easier to prevent the formation of a State or city board of censors by showing that there is already in existence an efficient Federal regulation than it will be to have a local board abolished which was created before the Federal law became effective. In any event the national board will be considered the leading motion picture commission and its decisions will carry the weight of leadership. Should a picture be passed by the national board a local board would have to give a good reason to the public for prohibiting the exhibition of the picture.

"It is for the good of the motion picture interests, as well as for the public welfare, that I am pressing this measure for early passage. It is my prediction that, should this bill not be passed at the present session, the great majority of motion picture producers will come to Congress—as the Famous Players, Paramount, Lasky, World and Equitable companies have already come—at its next session, demanding the passage of the bill to save them from the tremendous costs and hardships of local censorship."

The full text of the report which Mr. Hughes presented to the House to-day follows:

"The Committee on Education, to whom was referred H. R. 15462, have considered the same and submit the following report, with the recommendation of the committee that the bill do pass:

"The necessity for regulation of motion pictures is apparent. It has been acknowledged by a large majority of the film manufacturers by their voluntary submission of their films to unofficial boards for approval. That the public demands this regulation is demonstrated by the scrupulous regularity with which the producers exhibit such approval at the end of each picture.

"'The vicious picture brings the larger return [illegible] exhibitor and producer, because it gets the [illegible] of the regular customer and the sensation [illegible] also. This state of affairs constitutes a [illegible]tion hard to resist, and, in fact, the pro[illegible]on of vicious pictures is constantly increas[illegible] just because they are more profitable. If the [illegible]dustry is to endure, if decent people are to [illegible]y in the business, this cancer must be cut out. [illegible] Federal regulatory commission should prove a [illegible]clean surgeon, and we therefore favor such a [illegible]mission.'

"This statement of conditions is made [illegible] the brief filed with the committee by [illegible] legal representatives of four of the [illegible] manufacturers [illegible] produce 90 per [illegible] of the motion pictures [illegible] United [illegible] and [illegible] representatives [illegible] mo[illegible] most objectionable will not voluntarily be submitted for review.

"An unofficial board which has not the right to examine 100 per cent. of the pictures is in reality not a board of regulation, but a board of recommendation and approval. As a matter of fact, evidence before the committee discloses that a very considerable percentage of the pictures approved by the unofficial board are declared by the local boards unfit for exhibition. The decision of the National Board of Review is not binding. Pictures which have been disapproved by it are shown to the public.

State Regulation Inadequate.

"The character of the motion picture industry renders State and municipal regulation inadequate. Motion picture films are essentially articles of interstate commerce. They are not manufactured for use in any one State or municipality, but practically every picture is exhibited in all of the States of the Union. Innumerable inspections by local boards work great hardships on the industry. In the absence of any official Federal regulation the States and cities are finding it necessary to establish these local boards to prevent the exhibition of immoral, indecent and obscene pictures. The only adequate method of regulating motion pictures is to be had in a Federal commission, and the establishment of such a commission is the one way to obviate the necessity for innumerable local boards.

"The bill which this report accompanies provides for the appointment by the President of five commissioners, and a supplementary force of deputy commissioners to be appointed by the commission. The commission is required to license each film intended for interstate commerce unless it finds that such film, or a part thereof, is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or is a reproduction of an actual bullfight or prizefight, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite crime.

"The main offices of the commission are to be at Washington, but the commission is granted authority to establish branch offices where necessary. Each branch office is to be in charge of one of the commissioners or a deputy who is clothed with the power of a commissioner. Licenses may be issued by this commissioner or deputy commissioner at such branch office. Should he render an adverse decision on the film, the producer has the right to appeal to the full commission, and in all cases the producer can appeal from decisions of the commission to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

"The commission is authorized to issue licenses for pictures which are to be shown only to people over 16 years of age.

"It is further provided that a film not having been licensed by the commission shall not be transported in interstate commerce. The exhibition of unlicensed pictures at places of amusement for pay in the District of Columbia or in any of the Territories of the United States, or any place where the local police power is in the jurisdiction of the United States, is prohibited.

"The penalty for a [illegible]tion of this act is a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both, and the confiscation of the films illegally transported, exhibited or changed. Motion picture films meant for use by the learned professions and not for purposes of entertainment are excepted from the operation of this bill. Films known in the industry as 'news films'—those depicting current events—may be granted a permit so that they can be shown immediately after manufacture, the commission having authority to withdraw the permit when this privilege is abused. All motion picture films which are in existence at the time this act is approved shall be granted a permit to enter interstate commerce without examination.

Has a License Fee.

"License fees of $2 for 1,000 feet of film for originals and 50 cents for each duplicate copy are provided in this bill. It is estimated that 200 original reels of 1,000 feet each are produced weekly in this country. The best figures obtainable indicate that an average of twenty-five duplicates are made of each original. The income from the originals would therefore be $400 per week or $20,800 per annum, and from the duplicates $2,500 per week or $130,000 per annum. The total income is therefore estimated at $150,800. The commission is given authority to revise these fees after six months so that only an amount sufficient to bear the expenses of the commission will be collected.

"In the consideration of this measure your committee, after once determining that regulation of motion pictures was a pressing necessity for the protection of the public, and particularly the children, against vicious and immoral pictures, sought to frame a bill which would meet the needs of the public and not work unnecessary hardships on the industry. The measure which your committee reports has the indorsement of leading producers of motion picture films and others engaged in the industry."

The statement of Messrs. Meyers & Clark, attorneys for Paramount Pictures Corporation, E. J. Ludvigh, Ralph A. Kohn, attorneys for Famous Players Film Company; Arthur S. Friend, attorney for Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., and Moritz Rosenthal, attorney for World Film Corporation and Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, follows:

"Hon. D. M. Hughes,

"Chairman Committee on Education, House of [illegible]

performers and makes the pictures. The distributor contracts with the producer for his product and through local offices, known as exchanges, places it in the hands of the exhibitor. The exhibitor deals directly with the public. All these divisions of the business would be affected adversely by an act providing for Federal regulation which overlooked the practical needs of the business. In order that those needs may be served, we urge you to include in any bill which you may report provisions as follows.

"(1) Local offices for the commission in New York and Los Angeles, so that the producers, most of whom operate in those cities or their vicinity, may have ready access to the supervising authority and prompt consideration of their product.

"(2) Authority to the commissioner or deputy in charge of a local office to grant or refuse a license. This is necessary to procure the prompt action on applications, which the producer requires in order to meet his engagements with the distributor, covering a constant and frequent supply of pictures, and which the distributor requires in order to enable the exchanges to supply to the exhibitor the daily and weekly changes covered by their contracts. Delay would certainly be costly and might be fatal to the organized business.

"(3) A provision for condemnation of specific parts of a film, which, when the same are eliminated, shall become entitled to license.

"(4) A provision for review by the commission when the examiner refuses a license. As the determination of the question whether a film is entitled to license is not based upon exact standards but is a matter of opinion only, it should not be possible for one man, in his discretion, to destroy the large investment represented by a modern photo-play.

An Appeal Provision.

"(5) A provision for an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia from a refusal to license. As the determination by the commission would be really arbitrary because of the absence of legal tests or recognized standards, it is of the greatest importance that the commission should not be vested with supreme power. Where great property interests are involved, the citizen should always be afforded an opportunity for relief from the court, if he feels that he has been treated unfairly.

"(6) A provision permitting the producer to transport films prior to application for license. The producer should be free to transport a film from its place of manufacture to his home office or other place, where it will be cut and trimmed and otherwise prepared for exhibition.

"(7) A provision for substantial salaries for the commissioners, so that the President can secure the services of capable men, who will accept office as a career and not for the purpose of carrying out preconceived and perhaps prejudicial ideas as to reform of the film industry.

"(8) An exemption from the operation of the act of (a) films exhibited to the public prior to its enactment, and (b) films which do not contain any dramatic or fictional element such as pictures of current events, commonly known as news pictures and topical reviews, and pictures of places and peoples, geographical in nature, and commonly known as travel pictures.

"(9) A provision granting discretion to the commission to issue a permit under which films may be exhibited pending revocation of the permit and application for license. Such a provision would enable the commission to adjust the burden of temporary accumulated applications by granting permits (in effect, temporary licenses) to producers whose history and reputation entitle them to a presumption of complying with the law.

"As we are moved by the sincere purpose of cooperating with your committee in producing a draft of an act which should prove effective and workable and at the same time fair to the decent people in the motion picture business, we respectfully request that when a bill is ready for action by the committee a copy shall be sent to us, and we shall be given an opportunity to appear before the committee and make such suggestions and criticisms as may occur to us.

"Meyers & Clark, attorneys for Paramount Picture Corporation.

"E. J. Ludvigh and Ralph A. Kohn, attorneys for Famous Players Film Company.

"Arthur S. Friend, attorney for Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc.

"Moritz Rosenthal, attorney for World Film Corporation and Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation.

"New York, January, 25, 1916."

[illegible] 10 POLICE [illegible]

THE NEW YORK TIMES, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1916.

URGES FILM CENSORSHIP.

House Committee Declares for Federal Board to Pass on Pictures.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—A report recommending the passage of the Hughes bill for the Federal censorship of motion pictures was made to the House today by its Committee on Education. It declared that State and municipal censorship of motion pictures could not meet the demands of the industry and the public today.

The Hughes bill provides for the creation of a Federal Board of Censors of five members, which would license all films entering into interstate commerce, and prohibit the exhibition of any film regarded as of a vicious or immoral nature. This board would have authority to establish branch offices in various sections of the country. The motion picture industry itself would pay the cost of the proposed board, the bill providing for license fees of $2 for 1,000 feet of film for originals, and 50 cents for each duplicate copy.

The report says that about 95 per cent. of the films made are passed upon by an unofficial board known as the National Board of Review, at New York City.

"Though it were to exercise a careful and intelligent supervision over 95 per cent. of all pictures," the report continues, "still there would remain 5 per cent. which could be immoral and unfit to be shown."

THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1916.

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE.

DISCUSS MOTION PICTURES.

Priscilla Study Club Addressed by Censorship Chairman.

An open meeting of the Priscilla Study Club of Flatbush was held in Public School No. 139 on Tuesday night to discuss the question of motion-picture censorship. Orrin Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Censorship, explained the organization of that body.

It was stated $325,000,000 was spent in admission to motion-picture theaters in the United States last year. One-eighth of the whole population of New York goes every day.

Miss Florence Dalzell, principal of the Brooklyn Music School, and fifteen of her pupils furnished the music for the meeting. Mrs. R. S. Blakie spoke, emphasizing the fact that the delinquent children who are supposed to have been affected by the "movies" are more often the victims of "delinquent parents."

FRANKLIN REPOSITORY, CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

Telegraph
May 19

ENSORSHIP BILL ECLARED UNJUST

retary of Motion Picture Trade Board Predicts No Congress Will Pass It.

CONSTITUTIONAL, HE SAYS

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

WASHINGTON, May 18.

answer to a request for a statement erning the Hughes Federal film cen- hip bill, reported to the House of resentatives from the Committee on cation yesterday, J. W. Binder, utive secretary of the Motion Pic- Board of Trade of Ameri'a, said ay:

Yes, I have read the report of the mittee, and also the statement by irman Hughes accompanying it. I this to say about the whole mat- Pre-publicity censorship of mo- pictures, no matter how art- it is sugar-coated, is, in my ment, a violation of the rights guar- ed by the constitution of the ted States and of the several States, can therefore never be justified.

No matter how carefully the five com- sioners and the supplementary force deputy commissioners are selected, fact remains that these men are ted by Federal law with power to say. his film is obscene, indecent, immoral inhuman, that film is not.' I submit at no human being can determine what immoral, or indecent, or obscene, for y one. Therefore, when these powers conferred by law as they are in the ghes bill, the result must be an in- ngement of the right of each man to termine for himself what his course all be with regard to matters of rals.

"The bill makes no attempt, nor can make any attempt, to prevent the dup- ation of censorships all down the line rough the State and municipality.

"I predict that the bill will never re- ive serious consideration from this, or y other Congress."

OPPOSE U. S. CENSORSHIP

Minority Committee of Congress Made a Report Strongly Against the Idea of Bill Now Pending.

Washington, May 23:—A vigorous attack on the proposed moving picture censorship bill was contained in a minority report on the measure submitted to the house yesterday by four members of the House education committee. The report declares that the establishment of a federal board of censors would "stretch the implied power of congress under the constitution to the breaking point." The report was signed by Representatives Rucker, of Missouri, Powers, of Kentucky, Platt, of New York, and Dallinger, of Massachusetts.

"The most serious objection to this bill," said the report, "lies in the power it seeks to give an executive commission to trammel the moving picture art, the propagandist power of which is already marvelously developed and the potential power of which seems limitless."

"Those manufacturers who favor the bill report a very insignificant proportion of the output" said the report. "The attitude of this minority is naturally and frankly selfish and commercial. They believe it would be less expensive and troublesome to deal with and perchance control a single federal censorship commission than to deal with or control the several state boards."

"In our opinion" the report concluded, "every reasonable protection to the public morals can be secured by the proper exercise of the local police power, supplemented by an amendment to the federal penal code, including moving pictures in the list of articles barred from interstate commerce for stated causes. The extra power vested in the proposed commission will not only prove ineffective to protect public morals but is utterly un-American in its character and in the highest degree dangerous from any point of view."

Has Good Report.

bill has the earnest support of leading moral and religious organizations of the nation. A similar bill was unanimously reported to the House from this committee in the last Congress.

"With the acknowledgment of the need of regulation both by the motion picture interests and the public they serve, the question arises as to what shall be the regulation and who shall do the regulating. The National Board of Review at New York City is composed of representatives of various moral and civic organizations. The expenses of this board are paid by some of the leading motion picture interests, and it has no legal authority. At the request of the manufacturers this board passes upon the pictures. It is estimated that more than 95 per cent. of all pictures produced in this country are passed upon by this unofficial board.

"In addition to this voluntary board there are numerous official censors, both State and municipal. The establishment of such large numbers of these local boards, which are rapidly increasing, clearly demonstrates the inadequacy of the so-called National Board of Review, which by its very unofficial character cannot exercise effective supervision. Though it were to exercise a careful and intelligent supervision over 95 per cent. of all pictures, still there would remain 5 per cent. which could be immoral and unfit to be shown. It is only fair to assume that those pictures which are Representatives, Washington, D. C.

"Sir—The undersigned, representing substantial interests in the motion picture industry, viz., Paramount Pictures Corporation, Famous Players Films Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., World Film Corporation and Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, submit herewith for your consideration a revision of the Smith-Hughes bill (S. 2204; H. R. 458) which, while crude in form, covers practical points of great importance to the trade, and will, we trust, serve as a working basis for a bill to be reported by your committee.

"While the idea of censorship of motion pictures is distasteful to our clients, as well as to others in the business, our support of the principle of regulation embodied in the bill before you is due to our realization of unfavorable conditions in the industry which cannot be corrected by ordinary means nor by sporadic and occasional criminal prosecutions, procured by the better elements of the business or by individual or organized reformers. The motion picture business, now of vast financial importance, has had a mushroom growth and is not yet homogeneous and standardized. Too many persons engaged in the business look upon it as a temporary means of getting money instead of a permanent business, the continued profit of which is dependent upon the quality and character of the productions. They are like miners who quickly exhaust the high-grade ore and leave the low grade on the dump. They are get-rich-quick artists, looking for a quick 'clean-up and a get-away.' They find the opportunity for such methods in producing and exhibiting sensational productions which display scenes of lust and crime.

"Unfortunately, the public is not yet discriminating and goes to see both bad and good, which are usually to be found upon the weekly program of the same theatre. Still more unfortunately, the vicious picture brings the larger return to exhibitor and producer, because it gets the money of the regular customer and the sensation seeker also. This state of affairs constitutes a temptation hard to resist and, in fact, the production of vicious pictures is constantly increasing just because they are more profitable. If the industry is to endure, if decent people are to stay in the business, this cancer must be cut out. A Federal regulatory commission should prove a fearless surgeon and we therefore favor such a commission.

"The motion picture business has three well-defined divisions—production, distribution and exhibition. The producer deals with authors and

NEW YORK, SUNDAY, MAY 21

GOVERNOR VETOES BILL FOR STATE FILM CENSORSHIP

Whitman, at Eleventh Hour, Kills the Objectionable Measure With Stamp of His Disapproval—Would Have Expired Automatically at Midnight Without His Signature.

VICTORY FOR SCREEN MEN

Action of the Executive Crowns Efforts of Motion Picture Industry to Thwart Passage of the Measure on Constitutional Grounds—Would Be Unnecessary and Onerous Tax.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

ALBANY, May 20.

Almost at the eleventh hour Governor Whitman vetoed the Cristman-Wheeler motion picture censorship bill to-night and crowned the efforts of the film industry to thwart the passage of the measure on the grounds of unconstitutionality. The limit of the thirty-day measure would have been up at midnight, and, without his signature the bill would have automatically expired, but the Governor's action backed up by a set of substantial reasons, places him on record as actively opposed to arbitrary regulation of the screen by a board and is regarded as a signal victory for the motion picture folk.

The bill in question proposed to amend the educational law in relation to the regulation of motion picture exhibitions by the establishment of a board of three censors, to be appointed by the State Board of Regents.

The Governor vetoed the measure at 6.30 o'clock to-night. Both Senator Cristman and Assemblyman Wheeler, the sponsors of the measure, were in the Executive Chamber when Governor Whitman announced he did not approve of the bill. In substantiating his action the Governor issued the following positive statement:

Disregarded the Tax, He Says.

"The framers of this bill seem to me to have disregarded two very important considerations: First, where a tax is imposed upon an industry in which our people are engaged, under ordinary conditions such as prevail to-day, great care should be taken in determining the amount of the tax, to the end that the industry itself shall not be crippled or its development hampered, or that those who use or enjoy the product of the industry shall not be deprived of such use and enjoyment as a result of excessive taxation. Second, that in all legislative acts imposing a tax, the right of redress or appeal in all cases should be preserved to those who will be affected and who may be aggrieved.

"The first objection noted, namely, that it appears to place an unnecessary and onerous tax upon the activity which it proposes to regulate, results in part from apparent carelessness in drafting. The bill requires that films be submitted for examination of the censors, and by making them a part of the censors' official report transmitted to the Regents, precludes their return to the owners. The films after examination would be of absolutely no value to the State, would occupy costly space in preservation, and would impose an expense upon the industry, as stated to me at the hearing, of over a million dollars during the first year of the act if it becomes a law, and over $400,000 annually thereafter.

"To remove any doubt that the bill in its present form would require the retention of films submitted for examination, and in reply to the declaration of one of the speakers at the hearing that the bill could not be so interpreted, I

RK'S FINEST
ith POMMARD $1.00
rsus courses.
n or Oriental.
M 6 TO 8 P. M. ner and Midnight Fashions"
1916 CREATION
Produced by Dan Dody. at Plays "Real Music."

GOVERNOR VETOES FILM CENSOR BILL

(Continued From Page 1.)

for original films and $5 for duplicates, my attention has been called to the censor fees in other States of the union where a moving picture censorship exists. The fees are as follows:

"Pennsylvania—One dollar for each 1,200 feet of original film, $1 for each 1,200 feet of duplicate prints.

"Ohio—One dollar for each 1,000 feet, whether original or duplicate.

"Kansas—Two dollars for each reel or picture (length not specified).

"Maryland—Two dollars for each 1,000 feet of original film, $1 for each 1,000 feet of duplicate print.

"The Hughes bill for the Federal censorship of motion pictures which was favorably reported in Congress during the present week, provides a license fee of two dollars for one thousand feet of original film, and fifty cents a thousand feet for each duplicate copy.

"As there are approximately sixteen hundred places for the exhibition of moving pictures in the State (I am dependent for all of these statistics upon statements made at the hearing, and not there disputed) the amount of financial burden imposed the first year by the bill under consideration would represent an average actual cost upon each owner of these places of exhibition of between thirteen and fourteen hundred dollars.

Is Chief Form of Amusement.

"The moving picture theatre, because of the nominal admission fee of from 5 to 10 cents, has become the principal form of entertainment which can generally be enjoyed by persons of very limited means. It is stated by the representatives of the industry—and I believe it to be a fact—that the burden imposed by this bill in respect to the tax on the producers and lessors of these films would be so great as to close up many of these places of exhibition in communities where the expenditure of more than 5 or 10 cents would be prohibitive and increase the admission charges generally to these entertainments.

"My second and most important objection to the form of the bill is to that provision which permits the State Board of Regents to review the acts of the Board of Censors when the latter approve a film, but does not permit a review by the Regents when the censors reject a film. The language of the bill relating to the powers of the Regents in this matter is as follows:

"'The Regents may, in their discretion, by majority vote, revoke such approval of any such film or reel at any time. Such revocation shall be complete upon personal service of notice of such application upon the proprietor of such film or reel or upon any agent of such proprietor having charge of the leasing, sale or exhibition of any such film or reel.'

"This provision would give the Regents, acting on their own initiative, or upon appeal to them by a patron of any exhibition, the right to disapprove a film previously approved by the censors. But there is no opportunity for appeal to the Regents by an owner who might feel aggrieved by the censors' disapproval of a film, the action of disapproval by the censors being final under the bill as drawn.

"It has been urged that in this and other respects the bill, if it became a law, would be unconstitutional. I do not think that we need to go even so far as a discussion of constitutionality to satisfy ourselves of the impropriety of placing a provision such as this upon the statute books.

Promised an Amendment.

"It was stated at the hearing that it was not the intention of the makers of the law either to put an onerous tax upon the industry, or to deny to those who believed themselves aggrieved the right of appeal, and that if the bill should become a law I might be sure that the objectionable features would be eliminated by amendment next year. A practical answer to this objection, so far as the question of an unjust burden on the industry is concerned, is in the fact that the failure to provide for a return of the films would impose a wasteful and unnecessary expense, and one of no value to the State, upon the industry, of the greater part of a million dollars before any amendment could be obtained.

"In addition to this fact I deem it neither wise nor courageous to accept a badly constructed bill in the hope that future legislation may correct its admittedly objectionable features.

"I have found such fundamental objections to the form of this bill, and the procedure under it, that the necessity for censorship has been eliminated as a factor in its consideration.

"If we must have such censorship, it should not be established hurriedly or by an imperfect statute and one which is open to such serious and sound objections as are urged against this measure which I am asked to approve.

"In this connection, however, the fact should not be overlooked that the Hughes bill in Congress, to which I have referred, being now favorably reported out of committee, may be assumed to have an excellent chance of becoming a law at this session. The establishment of a national censorship of moving picture films would undoubtedly make any special legislation in this State for the same purpose unnecessary."

MAY 21, 1916.

NEW YORK, SUNDAY,

WHITMAN VETOES CENSORSHIP BILL

Kills Measure Fought Bitterly by the Moving Picture Men.

ALBANY, May 20.—Governor Whitman to-day acted on another batch of important bills passed by the last Legislature. He vetoed:

The motion picture censorship bill.

The bill providing a clearing house for mental defectives in New York.

He signed:

The Mills bill affecting the payment of teachers' pensions in New York.

The Brooklyn Eighty Cent Gas bill.

The bill establishing the pay-as-you-go financial policy in New York city.

The Maier bill, authorizing the expenditure this year of $10,000,000 from the $50,000,000 highways bond issue.

The motion picture censorship bill aroused great interest throughout the State. Many pastors and prominent laymen came to Albany to speak for it at a public hearing, and the motion picture interests, with Edgar M. Cullen, former Judge of the Court of Appeals as their spokesman, were equally active.

The teachers' pension bill also was bitterly fought. The teaching force of New York was split widely upon the measure, which provided for payments to annuitants from the reserve fund of the Teachers' Retirement Fund.

The pay-as-you-go bill, although embodying a policy adopted by the present city administration of New York, was opposed by various civic associations as being opposed to the spirit of home rule.

ELEGRAPH, SUNDAY,

UGHES REPORTS CENSORSHIP BILL

(Continued From Page 1.)

report to the House this afternoon, Chairman Hughes gave out a statement, of which the following is a part:

"The report which I am submitting to the House fully explains the bill. The committee has endeavored to so frame the measure that it will safeguard the public welfare and at the same time work no unnecessary hardships on the motion picture industry. I believe we have accomplished not only this, but have presented a measure which will vastly benefit the industry in the matter of relieving the producers in a large measure from the oppressive weight of the growing local censorships. This bill is the one way open to the producers to protect themselves from the ruinous effects of State and municipal censorship, for it will make unnecessary the local boards by meeting the public demand for regulation of motion pictures."

In the complete report presented to the House by Mr. Hughes, it is stated:

"The necessity for regulation of motion pictures is apparent. It has been acknowledged by a large majority of the film manufacturers by their voluntary submission of their films to unofficial boards for approval. That the public demands this regulation is demonstrated by the scrupulous regularity with which the producers exhibit such approval at the end of each picture.

"The vicious picture brings the largest return to exhibitor and producer, because it gets the money of the regular customer and the sensation seeker also. This state of affairs constitutes a temptation hard to resist, and, in fact, the production of vicious pictures is constantly increasing just because they are more profitable. If the industry is to endure, if decent people are to stay in the business, this cancer must be cut out. A Federal regulatory commission should prove a fearless surgeon, and we therefore favor such a commission.

Inadequacy of State Regulation.

"The character of the motion picture industry renders State and municipal regulation inadequate. Motion picture films are essentially articles of interstate commerce. They are not manufactured for use in any one State or municipality, but practically every picture is exhibited in all of the States of the Union. Innumerable inspections by local boards work great hardships on the industry. In the absence of any official Federal regulation the States and cities are finding it necessary to establish these local boards to prevent the exhibition of immoral, indecent and obscene pictures. The only adequate method of regulating motion pictures is to be had in a Federal commission, and the establishment of such a commission is the one way to obviate the necessity for innumerable local boards.

"The bill which this report accompanies provides for the appointment by the President of five commissioners, and a supplementary force of deputy commissioners to be appointed by the commission. The commission is required to license each film intended for interstate commerce unless it finds that such film, or a part thereof, is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or is a reproduction of an actual bullfight or prizefight, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite crime.

"The main offices of the commission are to be at Washington, but the commission is granted authority to establish branch offices where necessary. Each branch office is to be in charge of one of the commissioners or a deputy who is clothed with the power of a commissioner. Licenses may be issued by this commissioner or deputy commissioner at such branch office. Should he render an adverse decision on the film, the producer has the right to appeal to the full commission, and in all cases the producer can appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

"The commission is authorized to issue licenses for pictures which are to be shown only to people over 16 years of age.

"It is further provided that a film not having been licensed by the commission shall not be transported in interstate commerce.

"The penalty for a violation of this act is a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both, and the confiscation of the films illegally transported, exhibited or changed. Motion picture films meant for use by the learned professions and not for purposes of entertainment are excepted from the operation of this bill. Films known in the industry as 'news films'—those depicting current events—may be granted a permit so that they can be shown immediately after manufacture, the commission having authority to withdraw the permit when this privilege is abused. All motion picture films which are in existence at the time this act is approved shall be granted a permit to enter interstate commerce without examination.

License Fees.

"License fees of $2 for 1,000 feet of film for originals and 50 cents for each duplicate copy are provided in this bill. It is estimated that 200 original reels of 1,000 feet each are produced weekly in this country. The best figures obtainable indicate that an average of twenty-five duplicates are made of each original. The income from the originals would therefore be $400 per week or $20,800 per annum, and from the duplicates $2,500 per week or $130,000 per annum. The total income is therefore estimated at $150,800. The commission is given authority to revise these fees after six months so that only an amount sufficient to bear the expenses of the commission will be collected."

Inimical Points in Bill.

Representative Hughes had submitted a copy of the bill to attorneys for the Famous Players Film Company with the request that they suggest changes thought advisable. Several points incorporated in the proposed measure were found [illegible] to the better interests [illegible] industry as a whole [illegible] atives of this produ[illegible] submit to the commission every foot of negative film taken, if any part is printed, before it is returned to the studio. This would be a great hardship upon the producers and would result in great inconvenience and delay in preparing photoplays for presentation, because no "test" prints could be made until the company returned.

Binder Opposes Bill.

In answer to a request for a statement concerning the Hughes bill, J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, said to-day:

"Yes, I have read the report of the committee, and also the statement by Chairman Hughes accompanying it. I have this to say about the whole matter: Pre-publicity censorship of motion pictures, no matter how artfully it is sugar-coated, is, in my judgment, a violation of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and of the several States, and can therefore never be justified.

"No matter how carefully the five commissioners and the supplementary force of deputy commissioners are selected, the fact remains that these men are vested by Federal law with power to say: 'This film is obscene, indecent, immoral or inhuman, that film is not.' I submit that no human being can determine what is immoral, or indecent, or obscene, for any one. Therefore, when these powers are conferred by law as they are in the Hughes bill, the result must be an infringement of the right of each man to determine for himself what his course shall be with regard to matters of morals.

"The bill makes no attempt, nor can it make any attempt, to prevent the duplication of censorships all down the line through the State and municipality.

"I predict that the bill will never receive serious consideration from this, or any other Congress."

FEDERAL RELIEF FOR CENSORSHIP

Richard A. Rowland Would Appoint National Commission to Rid Industry of Local Supervision.

BUSINESS IS BEING RUINED

(The Morning Telegraph has already made known its stand against any form of prepublicity censorship, but we print the following article as an example of individual opinion.—Editor's Note.)

By RICHARD A. ROWLAND.
President of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

As the great amusement of common men, and as the fifth industry in the United States, the motion picture has a right to demand and will demand fair play at the hands of the lawmakers. I do not believe in the principle nor in the operation of a censorship of motion pictures. I do believe in a proper and protective regulation of motion pictures.

There should be demanded, and I believe there is to be demanded of the Congress, a law creating a Federal Commission of Motion Pictures. The members of this commission should be men of the broadest education and intelligence. They should be paid salaries of from $10,000 to $15,000 annually in order to make certain that men, big enough and broad enough, can be induced to accept the responsibility that would attach to such offices. They should be sufficient in number so that all sections of the United States would be represented on the commission, and for purposes of suggestion only, I would place the number at seven. Of these, two should represent the Middle States, one the Pacific Coast States, one the New England States, one the Middle Atlantic States, one the Southern States, and one should be appointed at large and be chosen as head of the commission.

The commission should be required to review every motion picture manufactured for public exhibition, with the exception of news pictures, which, under proper conditions, should be exempt from review because of the element of time. The pictures reviewed should carry the Federal Commission trademark or sign as an evidence that they had been shown to and approved by the commission.

The commission should be appointed personally by the President of the United States with the approval of the Senate, and it should be specified that its membership should be bi-partisan in order to insure its freedom from the influence of politics.

Use Political Influence.

I might point out here that, with upward of seventeen thousand motion picture screens in the United States, there lies in the hands of the exhibitors an opportunity for political influence which, if rightly used, will take full care of the bigot, the self-seeking politicians, the notoriety seeking reformers, the professionally virtuous, and all the rest of the gallant crew that is now aligned against the greatest source of entertainment in the world.

I believe the exhibitors should combine and as one man oppose to the uttermost the election of any man to office who seeks to exploit motion pictures for political profit, whether the office be that of Governor, Senator, Assemblyman, Mayor, Alderman or Town Constable. I believe that such a protective combination will be in operation before the next elections, and in its full operation the screen will be guaranteed a freedom equal to that now enjoyed by the pulpit, the spoken drama and the public press.

No man in motion pictures, who has any conception of the responsibilities that are his as a public servant, dealing with the millions as his public, has any desire to see this power misused, nor could it be misused and succeed. But it can be invoked and it will be invoked to bring the unthinking, the careless, the ruthless, the bigoted, the narrow and the unfair to a sense of their responsibilities to the picture industry and to the public.

A Federal commission is needed by the industry if it is to be protected against the assaults of forty-eight different kinds of legislation in forty-eight different States. The situation now, if it is permitted to continue, will bring absolute ruin—I am not overstating the case—to makers and the distributors of motion pictures.

No matter how broad-minded the State censors may be, they do not seem to agree in their demands upon the picture makers. One scene is cut out in Ohio, another totally different one is eliminated in Pennsylvania, and we may look for other changes in Maryland and in Kansas. How is it possible to preserve a story in anything like its entirety if they all take a hack at it, and each in a different place?

Industry Being Ruined.

We, in the picture business, believe that the problem of better pictures would solve itself, if time were given for the industry to work out its own salvation before the public. But legislation is upon us in oppressive bulk, and before we can suit the various needs and satisfy the whims of the censors in each of the States, our business will be gone and it will be too late. Therefore, as a protection to ourselves as business men, we have a right to demand protection from the Federal Government.

I do not expect that this Federal Commission would at once rid motion pictures of the State censorship problem, but it could not help but deter States from passing legislation that would be shown to be totally unnecessary when the situation was being adequately supervised in fairness to the industry and to the public by a body of dignity, breadth and full power. It would, in my opinion, lead to the repeal of State laws which have been found in every case unsatisfactory to the public, as well as oppressive and unfair to the picture makers. A Federal Commission would provide a broad and fair foundation for the settlement of all of our motion picture problems within and without the industry, and the expense of its maintenance would be borne by a proper tax upon the industry itself.

I am not a lawyer, but I do not believe the motion picture could properly come under the supervision of the present Trades Commission. It is like no other business, and it has so many elements of art that it requires special knowledge, special breadth of understanding and special supervision of a broad and constructive sort of the needs of the situation now and the conditions that are to come with its farther growth and to be fully met in fairness and in justice to all.

Besides, an industry and an art, standing fifth in financial importance, warrants a commission of its own just as the Interstate Commerce Commission is required for the railroads of the nation.

On the progress which I have outlined, I believe every responsible manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor will unite. The theorists can talk as they like, we face a vitally serious situation and we have the right to demand relief from the highest body which our laws can make possible.

"[illegible] caused by the [illegible] of a few unscrupulous pro[illegible] ing out salacious or suggestive films [illegible] permitted to go unchecked, result [illegible] the establishment of local and state boards [illegible] all over the country. That the producers would be forced to bear the ruinous expense of supporting these bodies, is self-evident. It is felt by the producers that Federal regulation forms the only adequate protection against these threatened encroachments.

One serious objection to the proposed bill which has been cited by the Famous Players' attorneys in their report to the sponsor of the bill is the section which provides for the same licensing of films which are to be exported as those which are to be exhibited in the United States. It is pointed out that it is manifestly unfair to force American producers to compete with foreign film men in countries where there is no regulation and where pictures of a more highly colored type are at an actual premium.

Another dangerous provision, in the minds of the film representatives, is that which states that the Federal Commission shall distinguish between films that shall be shown to adults only and those which shall be exhibited both to adults and to children under the age of sixteen. The exhibition of the former films to minors is expressly forbidden. It is argued that this practice has been established in Chicago, where a white permit is issued for all pictures considered suitable for children, and a pink permit for those deemed too risque for the juvenile mind. As a result, the Chicago exhibitors are putting a premium on the "pink" pictures and advertising the fact that they were so labeled by the censors, thus defeating the very purpose of censorship.

Other considerations which affect the producers are also discussed in the recommendations which have been drawn up by Ralph A. Kohn, attorney for the Famous Players, one of them being a phrase which would make it impossible for a producer to send a company of players outside of the State in which his studio happened to be located without having to Buenos Aires Also Likes It.

The reviews of "The Birth of a Nation" in Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic, have just reached D. W. Griffith's office. The Courrier de la Plata has this to say of the picture:

"If the Germans had not monopolized the term 'colossal,' it would be right to use the word to properly classify Mr. Griffith's production.

"Imagine a romance comprising episodes of war, a whirling passing of pictures of every kind and variety, in succession like landscape views as seen from an express, without losing, however, anything of their clearness. Imagine scenes of peace and bloody war, music now plaintive and tender, now warlike and diabolical, in harmony to the screams of fighting men, the uproar of the crowd and varied action. All this and thousands of other things penetrate and stupefy you. You have the sensation of being at the mercy of the waves."

YORK TRIBUNE, MONDAY, MAY 22, 1916.

A PLEA FOR CENSORSHIP

Motion Picture Directors Said to Demand "the Punch," Otherwise "Dirt."

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: I cannot see the reason for your continued opposition to censorship of motion pictures.

I have been writing and editing scenarios all winter, on a salary, for one of the most successful concerns in the city, and I must say that if there is one thing above all others that modern motion pictures need, it is censoring.

You must know how many managers and directors are uneducated and—to put it gently—unmoral. Scenarios to find favor with directors must possess what directors call "punch," which is what we call sensationalism; what both would call dirt, if both were frank.

It may be argued that the public demands dirty picture plays, but I have seen that some of the most successful (successful with the public, not necessarily with the director) are absolutely clean! Think how largely the screen public is composed of children and young people. Is it they who demand the dope fiends, the artists' models, the vampires and the wife beaters?

One of your contributors indignantly asks: "If motion picture censorship, why not book and magazine censorship?" A second's thought will show that the book and magazine public to some extent does its own censoring, to say nothing of the editor's part. It is an entirely different public from the uneducated, undeveloped and undiscriminating public of the screen. Subjects like birth control, sex morality and divorce may or may not be all very well when treated seriously; when treated in the crude fashion natural to coarse, uneducated producers, whether in plays, newspapers, magazines or on the screen, they are unhealthy food for growing minds of any sort, children's or adults'. I do not mean that there are no good scenario writers or producers, but that there are not enough.

Motion pictures in their universal availability and appeal to the public have a big future before them; the screen can develop as many interesting methods and rules and conventions as has the legitimate drama, but until the companies prove themselves capable of evolving large quantities of wholesome material as a matter of course, their products will continue to need censorship.

E. SCHLOSSER.

New York, May 17, 1916.

MORNING
LEGRAPH, TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1916.

LM CENSORSHIP BILL CONDEMNED BY MINORITY

(Continued From Page 1.)

h more quickly and more effectively same result would have been ac-plished if the moving picture art had n in existence at that time! And yet s any one doubt if such had been the e and a Federal Censorship Board had n in existence with the slave power control of the national Government, t the film depicting the scenes por-yed in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' would e been refused a license on the cious ground that it was inhuman and ded to corrupt morals?

"I am firmly convinced that if this bill ould become a law it is not only possi- but extremely probable that under same conditions, motion picture films ting forth the need of national pre-redness or portraying the evils of the ite slave traffic, of intemperance and n of child labor might be refused a nse. In my opinion those who are erested in progress and reform are very ones who should be most vitally erested in keeping absolutely free from itrary control this latest and most erful instrument of free thought ex-ssion.

The enactment of the Alien and Sedi-n laws utterly destroyed the great deralist party in the early days of the public. These laws, however, merely ished the author of objectionable itten or spoken word after they were itten or uttered and then only after rial by jury. This bill seeks to set in this country pre-publicity censor-p, one of the most effective instru-nts of European military despotism, and annot believe that any political party willing to assume the responsibility its enactment."

n the text of the Minority Report it tated:

Declares Claims Unproven.

This bill proposes to regulate by a deral commission the principal amuse-t agency and what is rapidly coming e one of the chief educational agen-of the people of the United States. s not proposed to censor the plays or ras produced at the high-priced the-s throughout the country, but it is posed to give five men at Washing-the absolute power to determine be-hand what the great mass of the erican people shall be permitted to depicted upon the motion picture een. Before the National Govern-t undertakes to thus exercise the l police power hitherto reserved to States, and to regulate purely local usements, thus stretching the implied er of the interstate commerce clause the Federal Constitution to the break-point, it is incumbent upon the pro-ents of such legislation to show that widespread evil exists with which the te and local authorities are unable rope.

"At the hearings before the committee ctically no real evidence was intro-ced tending to show that any signifi-nt proportion of the moving picture s now being exhibited in the United tes are objectionable.

"It is entirely within the power of several States to provide that the ecutive or police authorities of the al communities shall have absolute wer to grant and revoke licenses for places of amusement within their veral jurisdictions, and in many com-unities this power is now being effec-ely exercised. Furthermore, most of e States already have laws making it criminal offense, punishable by fine d imprisonment, to exhibit any obscene indecent picture. Where the local lice power is thus ample to effectively al with whatever evils exist in the otion picture business, regulation by e National Government is manifestly called for, unnecessary and un-stifiable.

"In England the evidence produced be-re a special Parliamentary committee hich made a very exhaustive investiga-n and report in 1909 has established at pre-publicity censorship tends to der the growth of a great and serious ma by discouraging distinguished au-ors whose time is valuable from opardizing their time by writing plays hich might be destroyed by the whims-l opinion of a censor.

"The great majority of the motion pic-re interests oppose this pre-publicity nsorship bill because it is, in their dgment, a bill that will tend to stunt e natural development of the useful-ss of the moving picture art and will nd to confine it, as it has the English ama, to the lighter forms of mere usement when its potentiality lies the far wider field of information and opaganda.

"But we regard the balance of inter-ts between those several small pro-cers catering to high-priced houses who lieve in censorship because it will re-re them of the necessity of deferring local standards of decency, on the one nd, and those large producers who nt to leave the industry free to de-lop still greater fields of usefulness, the other, as of little moment com-red with another and very grave phase this question.

"[illegible] ious objection to this bill [illegible] er it seeks to give [illegible] ission to examine [illegible] art, the propos[illegible] a is already many [illegible] the potential po[illegible] that it tended toward a breach of neutrality and to incite military spirit.

"In Massachusetts an organization to ameliorate the conditions of child labor has been exhibiting moving pictures of actual conditions in certain manufacturing plants, and the representatives of these manufacturers attempted to stop these exhibitions. If Massachusetts had had a board of censors, who knows what its action would have been in this case.

"Do we dare to put in the control of an executive board such an extraordinary power—a power to suppress a medium of thought expression which in this country alone speaks to 20,000,000 people every day?

"In short, this bill violates the principle of the constitutional guaranty of a free press. It denies to the public the very utility in this wonderful new art which made it so necessary to keep the press free. It gives a few men despotic control over an art which at the very threshold of its development has power to influence more than 20,000,000 people every day. It completes the vicious circle by making it inevitable that the powerful moving picture industry, already the fourth greatest in the country, will be precipitated into politics and used for political purposes by the party in power.

"In our opinion, every reasonable protection to the public morals can be secured by the proper exercise of the local police power supplemented by the amendment to the Federal Penal Code already suggested. The extraordinary power vested in the commission proposed to be created by this bill will not only prove ineffective to protect public morals, as experience has shown, but it is utterly un-American in its character and in the highest degree dangerous from every point of view.

"William W. Rucker.
"Caleb Powers.
"Edmund Platt.
"Frederick W. Dallinger."

MINORITY REPORT FLAYS FILM BILL

Hughes Federal Measure for Pre-Publicity Censorship of Pictures Scored.

DECLARE CASE NOT PROVED

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

WASHINGTON, May 22.

A strong minority report in opposition to the passage by Congress of the Hughes bill, calling for the creation of a Federal film censorship commission, was presented to the House of Representatives this afternoon by Representative Frederick W. Dallinger, of New York. The report is signed by Representatives Dallinger, Edmund Platt, of New York; Caleb Powers, of Kentucky, all of whom are Republican members of the House Committee on Education, also by Representative William W. Rucker, of Missouri, Democratic member of the committee, and was prepared by Representative Dallinger at the request of the other dissenting members of the committee which has been in charge of the consideration of the bill.

After setting forth succinctly the fact that the proposed legislation is opposed by 85 per cent. of the film producers of the country, and declaring that prepublicity censorship would violate the constitutional guaranty of a free press and freedom of speech, the minority report asserts the belief of the opponents of federal censorship that every reasonable protection to the public morals can be secured by the proper exercise of the local police power supplemented by the amendment of the Federal Penal Code, so as to include motion picture films in the list of objects barred from interstate transportation.

Dallinger's Statement.

When interviewed after he submitted the minority report to the House to-day, Representative Dallinger said:

"There is nobody who is more bitterly opposed than I am to the exhibition of indecent and immoral pictures. I believe, however, as is pointed out in the minority report, that the proper exercise of the existing police power of the several States supplemented by an amendment to the Federal Criminal Code prohibiting the interstate transportation of objectionable films, is more than adequate to remedy any evils that may exist. That the regulation of local amusements by national legislation is entirely unnecessary and unjustifiable is, in my opinion, too plain for argument.

"Having been engaged all my life in reform work, I cannot understand how the official representatives of organizations which are striving to remedy some of the evils in our American life can advocate this legislation. From the beginning of time the most effective weapon of reform has been the portrayal of the evils of existing conditions, whether that portrayal has been by word of mouth as in days of the prophets, through the printed page of poet and novelist, or means of the artist's canvas or upon the stage. The motion picture art affords the most effective means of propaganda yet devised and to cripple its usefulness as is proposed by this bill would be most unfortunate and dangerous.

"The effect of Harriet Beecher Stowe's 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' in bringing home to the American people the evils of human slavery is a matter of history. How

(Continued on Page 3, Cols. 4 & 5.)

MAY 23, 1916
THE GLOBE AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER, NEW YORK, TUESI

FILM CENSORSHIP.

Governor Whitman vetoed the Cristman-Wheeler moving picture censorship bill for two reasons. First, because it was plainly unconstitutional in that it imposed unjust taxes and restrictions on the film manufacturers, and second, because if there was to be such censorship it should be exercised by the federal and not the state authorities. While he did not say openly that he was in favor of censorship, it would be fair to infer he is from the reference to the Hughes bill now before congress.

Representative Dallinger of Massachusetts, who drafted the minority report on the Hughes bill, which is favored by a majority of the committee on education, believes that the proper exercise of the police power of the states, supplemented perhaps by an amendment to the federal criminal code prohibiting the interstate transportation of objectionable films, is adequate to remedy any existing evils. He thinks the regulation of local amusements by national legislation is unnecessary and unjustifiable.

While there is no doubt that objectionable films are sometimes exhibited, they are negligible in proportion to the total number produced in this country every year, and the tendency is away from this class of picture. Indecency on the screen doesn't pay any better than it does on the stage, and the laws are ample to deal with a producer who holds any foolish views to the contrary. Press publicity censorship, as Mr. Dallinger says, is one of the most effective instruments of European tyranny, despotism, and it does not square with the American idea of freedom. Until some better argument is offered in favor of moving picture censorship than has been thus far advanced there will be indorsement of the views of Mr. Dallinger and insistence that the proposed arbitrary control of this powerful instrument of free thought expression would be a serious mistake and an unjustifiable abridgment of the people's rights.

[illegible]
Battle Cry of Peace" upon the ground

YORK ural food

Morn. Tel. 28 May 16

LEGAL FLAWS IN CENSORSHIP BILL

Faulty Construction of Cristman-Wheeler Measure Chief Cause of Governor's Veto.

IRWIN POINTS TO ERRORS

By E. L. MASTERS.

That the efforts of the apostles of censorship in various States can best be met by centering the attack against such proposed legislation upon the faulty construction which frequently marks these statutes, rather than upon the usual stock arguments of those urging the passage of such measures, is the opinion prompted in film circles as the result of the veto of the Cristman-Wheeler Censorship bill by Governor Whitman.

It will be recalled that in the defense set up by the film interests, against the approval of this bill by the Governor, those who appeared before him confined themselves almost entirely to the analysis of the legal weaknesses of the measure, and that Governor Whitman in his opinion justifying the veto of the measure, practically ignored the merits or demerits of censorship and based his rejection of the bill on the imperfection of its drafting.

In fact, the Chief Executive's opinion was almost wholly a recapitulation of the statements presented before him by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., who in his address dissected the many defects of the measure from a legal standpoint, and pointed out its injustice to both the State and to the moving picture industry, by reason of the financial burdens which it sought to impose.

In his speech, Mr. Irwin showed that the assessment which the sponsors of the censorship bill sought to make upon the industry in this State, was from five to ten times as much as that charged in any other State where censorship now exists, and that by reason of the provision of the measure which made it necessary to file duplicate prints with the State, the moving picture industry would be taxed during the first year of the bill's operation to the amount of $1,815,125.

It is upon this point, together with the fact that the proposed legislation empowered the State Board of Regents to review the actions of the Board of Censors when the latter approved a film, but did not permit the review of the film when the Board of Censors rejected it, that Governor Whitman based his disapproval of the measure.

Encouraged by the success which was gained by attacking the vulnerable legal points of the New York State censorship measure, the censorship foes, it is said, will hereafter follow this procedure wherever proposed censorship legislation lays itself open at all to such a course.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF FILMS FAVORED

Cincinnati Exhibitors' League Goes on Record as Approving National Censors.

"MUST MAKE BUSINESS CLEAN"

(Special Correspondence The Morning Telegraph.)

CINCINNATI, May 24.

At a meeting of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce, a resolution was passed placing the league on record as being in favor of Federal regulation of motion pictures.

The resolution is as follows:

"Whereas, There was during the month of January, 1916, a certain bill known as Senate Bill 2204 and House Bill 456 pending before Congress; and.

"Whereas, Said bill was called to the attention of this league on January 17, 1916, in its then form; and,

"Whereas, Said bill has since been materially changed and altered; and,

"Whereas, At that time this league was not fully and sufficiently informed as to the merits or demerits of said bill; and,

"Whereas, At this time more explicit information is at hand; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this league go on record as being in favor of Federal regulation of motion pictures; and,

"Further, That this league co-operate in every proper way with the various film manufacturing companies and other parties who are now actively engaged in the interest of said legislation with the ultimate object of bringing about a law that is fair and equitable to all interests involved."

Max Stearn, Columbus, O., president of the Ohio branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in an address to the members, said in part:

"The motion picture exhibitors realize they must make the business clean and show only pictures which the public will approve.

"State censorship has not been a success, and I am confident that Federal regulation is the only thing to cure the evil. State censorship has been too prone to criticism, although I am not averse to criticism if it is done in a proper spirit.

"Motion pictures should be criticised carefully, but should not be assaulted, which is very often done. People who criticise motion pictures in a wrong sense do not realize that they are attacking the fifth largest industry in the United States. It is the poor man's pleasure, but I have no patience with critics who criticise it because it has done them some harm in their own business."

Speaking of the stand which oppositionists to Federal regulation take, Mr. Stearn said: "Those who oppose this idea say it is un-American, as America is a free country and exhibitors should have a right to say what is good to be shown and what is bad. But I maintain that censors are required for motion pictures as well as other things, because there is always a certain class who will take advantage of the freedom given them."

BERST IN FAVOR OF HUGHES BILL

Pathe Executive Declares Himself a Supporter of New Federal Censorship Measure.

WILL KILL STATE BOARDS

J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, has come out for Federal censorship of motion pictures. Mr. Berst strongly believes that some form of censorship is inevitable and that the best interest of the business demands a Federal law drawn up in accordance with the views of the manufacturers, and put through with their support.

"This is the only way in which obnoxious State censorship bills can be headed off," says Mr. Berst. "The fact that the Federal Government is passing upon films will be a powerful argument against local censorship—the most powerful that we can have."

Mr. Berst made a careful study of the Hughes bill and sent to the Hon. Dudley M. Hughes, chairman of the House Committee on Education, a letter containing the result of his analysis and pointing out a number of objectionable features in the bill. Under date of May 19 Mr. Hughes wrote Mr. Berst to the effect that many of his suggestions had been followed in the new bill. The revised bill was carefully analyzed by Mr. Berst who, on May 22, write Mr. Hughes in part as follows:

"I wish to assure you that your bill will find in our firm a very strong support. All the big concerns intend to get together and discuss this bill thoroughly, and I am very confident that a resolution will be adopted for the support of the bill."

Mr. Hughes, recognizing Mr. Berst's great help in putting the bill upon a basis where it would merit the support of the manufacturers, wired Mr. Berst on the 24th as follows:

"Thanks for your letter of the 22d. Have I your permission to make this letter public? Wire answer."

Mr. Berst accordingly wired his consent to have his letter used.

When the new bill is carefully read, compared with the old one and also with Mr. Berst's first letter to Mr. Hughes, the value of the Pathe executive's suggestions and the weight they had in Washington is at once apparent.

MINORITY REPORT FLAYS HUGHES CENSORSHIP BILL

Dissenting Members of House Committee on Education Call Measure a Violation of Constitutional Freedom.

(Special Correspondence The Morning Telegraph.)

WASHINGTON May 22.

Declaring that pre-publicity censorship would violate the constitutional guaranty of a free press and freedom of speech, and that the proposed measure is opposed by 85 per cent. of the film producers of this country, the minority report of the House Committee on Education against the passage of the Hughes bill to create a Federal motion picture censorship commission was presented to the House of Representatives this afternoon by Representative Frederick W. Dallinger, of New York. The report is signed by Representatives Dallinger, Edmund Platt, of New York; Caleb Powers, of Kentucky, all of whom are Republican members of the House Committee on Education, also by Representative William W. Rucker, of Missouri, Democratic member of the committee, and was prepared by Representative Dallinger at the request of the other dissenting members of the committee which has been in charge of the consideration of the bill.

The minority report asserts the belief that every reasonable protection to the public morals can be secured by the proper exercise of the local police power supplemented by the amendment of the Federal Penal Code, so as to include motion picture films in the list of objects barred from interstate transportation.

Local Law Sufficient.

When interviewed after he submitted the minority report to the House to-day, Representative Dallinger said:

"There is nobody who is more bitterly opposed than I am to the exhibition of indecent and immoral pictures. I believe, however, as is pointed out in the minority report, that the proper exercise of the existing police power of the several States supplemented by an amendment to the Federal Criminal Code prohibiting the interstate transportation of objectionable films, is more than adequate to remedy any evils that may exist. That the regulation of local amusements by national legislation is entirely unnecessary and unjustifiable is, in my opinion, too plain for argument.

The motion picture art affords the most effective means of propaganda yet devised and to cripple its usefulness as is proposed by this bill would be most unfortunate and dangerous.

"I am firmly convinced that if this bill should become a law it is not only possible, but extremely probable, that under the same conditions motion picture films setting forth the need of national preparedness or portraying the evils of the white

(Continued on Page 9.)

NEW YORK TRIBUNE,
TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1916.

National Film Censorship.

(From The Boston Globe.)

Eternal vigilance, which is the price of liberty, must be paid continually, if liberty is to survive. The immediate illustration is the effort to pass a law creating a paid Federal commission with power to censor all of the moving picture films of this country. The bill has been approved by the House Committee on Education, despite the determined objection of four of its members. It is proposed to create a paid commission of five, who shall say what shall or shall not appear upon the screens of the thousands of moving picture theatres throughout the country.

Under the conditions sought by the bill, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" would certainly have been kept off the screens if both motion pictures and a Federal Board of Censors had existed when Mrs. Stowe wrote that story.

The film drama is in its youth. It may become one of the greatest means of propaganda for a better America. Whether it reaches that usefulness depends largely upon the death of the bill for Federal censorship. Once give a board the right to shut the eyes of all Americans and many of the possibilities of good are eliminated from the movin pictures.

The bill has gone too far already. Publi opinion must be roused to prevent its passage. Nothing now prevents each community from stopping indecent pictures, but to give the power over a leading amusement of 100,000,000 into the hands of five men is the Russian way or the Prussian way, but not the way for America.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14, 1916.
THE SAVANNAH PRESS.

WRIGHT OPPOSED TO CENSORSHIP

THINKS ALDERMEN WILL FIGHT AGAINST MOTION PICTURE GAG.

"I am absolutely opposed to local moving picture censorship," stated Alderman W. H. Wright this morning. "I have never yet witnessed a picture presented on the screen of a Savannah motion picture house which was at all detrimental to the community morale, and we do not need the censorship of pictures here.

Come From Atlanta.

"I have looked into this matter thoroughly. All the pictures which come to Savannah are from Atlanta. There is a local censorship there, and in addition to that, there is the national censorship, and it is ridiculous to add a local censorship here, which would so hamper the moving picture houses as to make their business practically impossible.

Hearty Opposition.

"Regardless of what the joint commissions do at their meeting tomorrow afternoon," continued Mr. Wright, "this matter will be finally settled by the aldermanic board. I think I am safe in saying that any move to establish such a censorship here will meet with most hearty opposition in the board of aldermen, as such a procedure would entail a gross hardship upon our moving picture people; a hardship which is unnecessary, impracticable, childish and absolutely uncalled-for."

Tomorrow.

The library commission and the playground commission will meet jointly tomorrow afternoon to take the matter up, and from expressions already made it is possible that they will recommend a local censorship of such a character as will, in their opinion, preclude the possibility of any pictures being shown in Savannah except those completely cleansed of sex contingencies or suggestion.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE, MONDAY, JUNE 19, 1916.

"DECADENT MOVIES"

Opinions of a Believer in Censorship Examined and Criticised by a Member of the National Board of Review—Motion Pictures Compared with Magazines.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: The letter signed "A Believer in Censorship" and printed under the heading "Decadent Movies" in your paper June 4, 1916, is provoking of a specific answer. The writer may have seen, as he claims to have seen, many thousand pictures; if he has perceived so little that is beneficial and so little that is significant his belief in the efficacy of censorship is well founded. But what, I should like to ask, of the belief of that mass of people to whom the motion picture in its fascination and power to amuse has become as the bread of life? Do they look upon it as an unmitigated and growing evil, demand that it be edited for them and submit to the philosophy that a few arbitrary censors, who do not share in their enthusiasm, whose vision does not extend beyond their own noses or whose taste penetrate the magic ring of their own conception of culture and morality, are well equipped to cut and butter their bread for them? I should wish to hear from those people as to whether or not, after watching so many thousand pictures, they are led to the conclusion that censorship is necessary.

Just what, I would like to ask "A Believer in Censorship," is "permitted on the screen which would have a few years back invoked a storm of criticism" that if presented or published or permitted anywhere else a few years ago would not have invoked the same? Everywhere—on the stage, in literature, in the forum and press—things are permitted to-day that would have shocked our fathers. The forces of our age have created a chasm between what they talked about and what we talk about; it follows that the motion picture—the voice raucous, if you will—most representative of our age as its new medium of expression is heard on the younger generation's side of that chasm. Again, contrary to "A Believer in Censorship," the motion picture may be compared with the magazine to good purpose. At its worst it is not as insidious as some of the stories which certain of our most popular magazines print and upon which they depend for their salability. Falsity exists in both, of course, as it does in all popular forms of entertainment where the aim is oftenest to overemphasize life rather than truly reveal it; but the pictures are frankly melodramatic and pictorial; many of our magazines and best sellers are surreptitiously false to life and shadowed with suggestion. It follows that one can just as safely enter a motion picture theatre without fear of having one's morals besieged as one can open the pages of such publications.

The communication goes on: "The National Board of Censors could, if it so desired, accomplish a decided reform, but certainly is not doing so at present." Does the writer mean to say that the National Board of Review, which, I take it, he refers to, could manage this reform by holding the same conception of censorship as is held by the legal state boards, whose most notable success lies in their abuse and mutilation of pictures, the unobjectionable impartially with the objectionable, by basing its principle not on the desire to help the motion picture in a constructive sense but rather on the aim to prune it after the manner of those reformers who have no sympathy with the less cultured enthusiasm of the masses for what, though often crude, is thrilling, who have no patience with which to await the slow development of a raw medium of expression into an art form and whose interest lies chiefly in the pleasure of finding fault rather than in that of being entertained?

The National Board of Review, by trying to work in a constructive advisory capacity with the producers, by endeavoring to gauge the sentiment of motion picture audiences throughout the country, by recognizing as valuable the opinion of those through whom the motion picture has become the people's theatre and reflecting that opinion in its critical action on pictures, is working out a policy that will amalgamate in motion picture production what is best in the motion picture and best in the taste of its audience.

The contention that "hundreds of thousands of small children witness films every day which would be suitable for presentation only before an audience composed of the most hardened persons" is so erroneous as to [illegible] ure is a nursery amusement, to be brought forth with the bread and milk, or that all picture theatres are children's playgrounds? The National Board is prone to recognize that this is not so. It does not aim to level what shall some day be a medium of serious expression to the heads of the young just because that medium at present is itself immature. Realizing, however, that since the pictures are often crude or aspiring to delicate themes they are not always fit for children, it carries on the important work of issuing monthly a list of expertly, carefully selected pictures suitable for children of different ages, from which people really anxious to help the situation by action of their own may choose children's programmes to be established on certain days in regular picture theatres and for entertainments of a private nature.

While conceding that "photoplays in which criminals are shown in a favorable light are generally frowned upon," which must be unpleasant for those "most hardened persons" who may witness these productions, "A Believer in Censorship" immediately attempts to gain ground with the exclamation, "How much worse are those in which immorality is cheapened and in many cases made to appear as though justified!" I do not wish for a minute to deny that the generality of pictures are not discolored through oversentimentalization. But when was a new angle ever drawn on a traditional moral issue with its roots deep in convention, on the stage or in books, that was not challenged at once by the defenders of convention as being all wrong or immoral? Ibsen's "A Doll's House" was condemned in its day for its justification of a then unconventional attitude toward marriage. Yet the principles on the subject laid down in that play are accepted without question by high-minded, right-thinking men and women to-day.

As for the writer's declaration that while the state boards of censors, such as Ohio's and Pennsylvania's, may not be necessary, still, on the whole, he is convinced that too much censorship is better than too little, it may be put on a par with the theory that a choking to death is much preferable to a gentle pressure on the windpipe now and then for surgical reasons. It is about as conducive to growth and art, about as bigoted and un-American.

W. A. BARRETT,
Secretary Review Committee, National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

New York, June 16, 1916.

June 18

4

The Morning Telegraph

MOTION PICTURE WEEKLY SECTION.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY.

Published by THE LEWIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, at No. 826 Eighth Avenue, corner Fiftieth Street, in the City of New York, Borough of Manhattan. William E. Lewis, President; W. B. Masterson, Vice-President; John J. Nell, Jr., Secretary and Treasurer, 826 Eighth Avenue.

TRACY H. LEWIS, Editor.

H. A. HALLETT, Advertising Manager of Motion Picture Department. Telephone, 2400 Circle.

E. V. Durling, Los Angeles Representative, 310 Currier Building.

Make checks payable to The Morning Telegraph, 826 Eighth Avenue, New York.

The Ohio Board of Censorship Is Seeing Snakes Again.

Had censorship really been the great blessing to the nation that its advocates claim, it would doubtless have been impossible to have prevented this bright ray of light from having penetrated the minds of those persons who continue to be earnestly and sincerely opposed to it. In one State or another it has been in operation sufficiently long for all who are interested in the subject to note the success or failure with which it has met, and the causes.

One of the chief reasons for its undesirability is the utter incompetence those chosen to constitute the State boards and their inability to exercise rational or broad-minded judgment upon the problems which are brought before them to decide. There was a striking instance of this last week, and it is some because of it that The Morning Telegraph sees fit to reiterate its views upon the question.

The Ohio Board of Censorship has been seeing snakes again. It is not due, as is sometimes the case, to an excess of spirits, but to harmless, shadowy snakes, which confronted its horrified vision on the screen. There is a rule observed by the film cutters of the Buckeye State that excludes any visualization on the screen of the creature that caused Adam's downfall. It is not our purpose to dispute the good or evil of the rule, as it is conceivable that the wrigglers may cause hysterics among some of the fair audience and their absence might be considered a thing to be desired. But—and here is disclosed with a charming vividness the true character of the Ohioans—such a rule being on the books, it becomes entirely inconceivable to the members of the board that it is possible for them to exercise any judgment in its application. A few days ago there was shown to them an animated cartoon, entitled "The Bump Goes Fishing." It is difficult to imagine even the most rabid snake fearer being alarmed at the sight of his appearance in an animated drawing where the element of reality is absent, but this consideration evidently bothered the long-haired censors not at all. The rule was on the books. That was all they wished to know. It was not theirs to reason why—theirs but to do or die.

They would see that that rule was enforced, whether it was meant to cover such cases or not. The result was that when "The Bump" went fishing he was forced to do so without any material assistance from the limber reptile.

Other and equally indiscriminate slashings of films have been made by the Ohio Board and similar organizations in other States. This is only the most aggravating because it is the most recent.

Let us unite for the good of the industry and make every effort to afford the opportunity of like displays of judgment in other States where the long arm of censorship as yet has had no opportunity to reach.

SEPTEMBER 21, 1916.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

M. P. EXHIBITORS OPPOSE CENSORS

Executive Board to Instruct Directors to National Association to That Effect.

D. W. GRIFFITH GIVES TALK

After a whirlwind meeting held at headquarters yesterday afternoon, the National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America went on record as unalterably opposed to legalized censorship in any form by passing the following motion, which was made by Mr. Hamburger of Chicago and seconded by Mr. Horstman of Boston:

"That the National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America hereby go on record as instructing their directors in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that they are to vote against any form of legalized censorship, as per resolution adopted at the National Convention held in Chicago in July, and furthermore the motion picture exhibitors go on record to the effect that they demand clean pictures from the manufacturers, thereby eliminating the necessity of having any form of censorship."

The producers' branch of the national association Tuesday resolved to oppose State and local censorship, but to favor Federal regulation of the picture industry. Branch No. 5, the general class, has, it is reported, voted to oppose any form of censorship. At the session of the National Association to be held today the problem will be up for discussion and in all probability the question of the stand to be taken by the organization as a body will be settled once and for all.

D. W. Griffith was present at the executive session of exhibitors yesterday and gave his views on censorship Federal and otherwise and expressed the opinion that Federal censorship would be a menace to the motion picture industry.

"If the power to censor pictures is placed in the hands of the Federal Government," he said, "there will be no chance to appeal. If you appoint a body of five men to sit in Washington and judge absolutely, and they declare that a picture shall be cut, it will be cut, and stay cut. There will be no redress.

"The way," he continued, "to do away with unclean pictures or plays is by public opinion. If the censorial power over films is placed in the hands of the Federal Government, the restrictions will become more and more drastic until the business is crushed. With merely local censorship it might be possible for the exhibitor to get justice in time, but if three or five men in a national board with possibly narrow ideas about such things, say a picture shall not be played, it will not be played. That will end it.

"I would perhaps suffer less than many of the smaller film men, because, in the event of Federal censorship, I could and would get the best lawyers, I would even go to the President if necessary, to the Congressmen and others, to get them to pass on my picture. I might succeed in getting my picture through. But the small man has neither time nor money to fight with."

Congressman Martin W. Littleton, who was also in attendance, spoke at length upon the subject, showing first how the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Pure Food law, which have been occasionally referred to as parallel with censorship, are in no way comparative. The Commission, he said, began as a very slender power to regulate rates of roads running through several States and later became a great power. The Pure Food law, he asserted, grew out of a very great problem—the public health.

As to pictures," he said, "we know perfectly well the question lies at the hearthstone. It is a subject debated at every dinner table. Everybody may see a film. The temperaments and tastes of every household must be considered. It is peculiarly a question of the States; the morals of the people rest in the hands of the people.

"If the censorship bill passed and you could be sure you had one authority to deal with, and providing you admitted the correctness of the principles of censorship, it might be favorably considered. But as it is you would only be jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

Would Be Burden.

"Federal censorship would only become a burden on the States and would not take one whit from their power. It is the State's function and Federal censorship would not oust State censorship.

"The only logical censorship," Mr. Littleton went on, "lies in community censorship. If an indecent picture is shown or produced here it can be stopped. The license bureau, the police by statute, can stop it. And every State has a law against the exhibition of indecent pictures.

"You may be sure that if Mr. Griffith here started to produce an objectionable picture and the court said that it should not be produced it would not [illegible] any contention against [illegible]

THE SUN, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1916.

MOVIE MEN PLAN POLITICAL CRUSADE

Leaders Will Vote To-day Against Federal Censorship, It Is Believed.

Federal censorship is the important and about the only sharply defined issue on which the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, now in session here, is divided, and the sense of that body as a unit on the subject will be determined by vote to-day.

The industry, generally speaking, is opposed to censorship of any kind on the ground that it is fundamentally un-American and unconstitutional, but the directors of the producers' branch, who were in session recently, declared for Federal censorship as preferable to State or local censorship. Other branches of the industry, however, are emphatic against censorship of any kind.

The situation as analyzed by members of the board of directors is that fifteen of the thirty qualified to vote are instructed against censorship of any kind, five are instructed for Federal censorship and ten are uninstructed. It is highly probable that the meeting to-day will declare the industry strongly opposed to censorship.

"Not only will the industry put itself on record as opposed to censorship of any kind," said Arthur James of the Metro Pictures Corporation and a director of the association, "but we will immediately begin a national campaign in the 20,000 theatres of the country, reaching 20,000,000 people daily, to enforce our demands for the freedom to which we are entitled. Candidates, including even Presidential candidates, will be asked for a definite expression of opinion on the subject and we will be governed accordingly.

"It is improbable that all of the motion picture theatres, with their varied political views, could be united for either candidate, but they can be united on a thing which touches their pocketbooks like censorship."

Griffith, Sennett and Ince, the great triumvirate in the motion picture business, each equally vigorous in opposition to censorship, have been invited to address the meeting of the board of directors before the vote is taken.

Cranston Brenton, chairman of the executive committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, charges the distributing group in the industry with being responsible for the Federal censorship plan for purely selfish and commercial reasons on the ground that the Federal board's approval will help them to sell the pictures.

[illegible]

SEPTEMBER 20, 1916.

THE SUN, WEDNESDAY

GRIFFITH FOE OF CENSORSHIP.

Movie Producer Lines Up With Exhibitors in Fight.

D. W. Griffith, producer of monster motion picture spectacles, yesterday lined up with the exhibitors in the fight against Federal censorship.

"If the proposition were not so absurd we might almost believe that the theatrical men of the country, unable to check the growth of the movies in any other way, are lining up behind this legislation to throttle the industry," said Mr. Griffith.

"Every State has ample laws to take care of the decency and morality of plays, books or movies. The directors do not care what a lot of stock jobbers or commission merchants may advocate, no matter what titles they confer on themselves. They are concerned with things which may hamper them in their work. The movie fan is also directly interested, because he is normal and he knows what is good and bad, and he patronizes the good every time, without having to be legislated into thinking rightly."

SEPTEMBER 21, 1916

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL.

D. W. Griffith in the interest of the directors of motion pictures throughout the country lined up yesterday with the exhibitors in their controversy with the so-called producers' branch of the motion picture industry in the fight against Federal censorship.

"If motion picture directors are to progress they cannot be hampered by laws which do not mean anything," he said. "The absurdity of three or four men sitting in final judgment on all artistic undertakings is so childish it is astonishing to think that any one would advocate it.

"Directors do not care what a lot of stock jobbers or commision agents may advocate no matter what titles they may confer upon themselves. They are concerned with things that may hamper them in their work. The exhibtor who comes in direct touch with the public also knows this and naturally is in sympathy with the directors. The movie fan is also directly interested because he is normal and he knows what is good and bad and he patronizes the good every time without having to be legislated into thinking rightly."

SEPTEMBER 21, 1916.

NEW YORK TIMES.

OPPOSE FEDERAL CENSORS.

Picture Exhibitors to Fight Against Policy at Today's Meeting.

At a meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to be held this morning in the rooms of the association in the Times Building a question of great importance to the film industry will be settled. The question is the policy to be adopted by the association in regard to the censorship of motion pictures.

Representatives of all branches of the industry will be present. There is by no means a unanimity of opinion on the subject, since in preliminary meetings various policies have been upheld. Some of the producers have declared themselves in favor of Federal censorship as opposed to State and local regulation, while other prominent producers are opposed to Federal censorship on the ground that there will always be local regulation, and the opinion of the community should be allowed to determine what pictures should be shown. This latter view proved to be that also of the exhibitors at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Exhibitors' League held last night.

The exhibitors blame certain of the producers for the demand for censorship, alleging that the producers who have manufactured films of questionable moral tone are responsible for the mischief. At today's meeting the exhibitors will fight against the policy favoring Federal censorship.

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, the present accredited body, has all along opposed the passage of a Federal censorship law.

SEPTEMBER 21, 1916

THE WORLD

FILM CENSORSHIP AN ISSUE

Producers Oppose Local Revision and May Affect Campaigns.

Two meetings of motion picture men who are opposed to censorship were held yesterday, preparatory to to-day's meeting o fthe Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which will decide the attitude of the entire industry on the question.

The producers have voted to oppose Federal censorship although they are opposed to State and local censorship. If the association votes to-day against censorship, it will begin at once a nation-wide campaign. The screen will be used in the 20,000 motion picture houses of the country, reaching 20,000 persons daily (figures supplied by the association), in the Presidential, Gubernatorial and Congressional campaigns. President Wilson and Candidate Hughes have been asked for expressions of their attitude toward censorship.

[illegible] at you cannot lodge with any [illegible] men, certainly not with the National Government, a power which can [illegible] corrective power to regulate motion [illegible]tures. It would only harass and [illegible]noy. If 95 per cent. of the pictures produced are decent they would pay the traffic of the 5 per cent. of indecent films and the latter would go on just the same because of the inefficiency of the machine. If you had a censorship board controlled by the National Government you would be worse off than if you had one in each State."

Exhibitors Against Censorship.

Lee A. Ochs, president of the National Exhibitors' League, pointed out that the exhibitors have consistently fought censorship in any form and that if only clean pictures are provided by manufacturers there will be no need for censorship of any kind.

The meeting was well attended by members of the Executive Committee from various States, all of whom listened with interest to the speakers, asked many questions and finally passed the motion given. D. W. Griffith and Mr. Middleton will appear at the session of the national association to-morrow, it is believed, to talk on the subject.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1916.

THE WORLD: FRIDAY.

MOVIE MEN OPPOSE ALL CENSORSHIP NOW

National Association Directors Flatly Against State or National Regulation.

The Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at a meeting yesterday, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, that it is the sense of the Board of Directors of this industry that we are opposed to the legal censuring of any motion pictures in any State or in the Nation."

This, it was explained after the meeting, represents the attitude of the entire industry. The Board of Directors had power to settle the issue for the National Association, which includes producers, exhibitors, distributors, makers of supplies and equipment and others connected with the business.

According to the official statement of the association, it represents an investment of $500,000,000 and will use its influence in 20,000 theatres throughout the country, playing to 20,000,000 persons daily, to fight candidates who favor censorship at the coming elections. Both President Wilson and Justice Hughes have been asked to state their position.

Before yesterday's meeting the producers had approved of Federal censorship, but their attitude was changed during the day by the advice of counsel that Federal censorship will not stop local or State censorship. The exhibitors led the fight against any kind of censorship at all.

It is now the opinion of the entire industry that there must be no censorship of the movies outside of local police regulations which apply to the regular stage as well as the movies.

William A. Brady, President of the association, who represented the World Film Corporation, presided at the meeting. Other producers in attendance were Carl Laemmle of the Universal, William L. Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Company and Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players-Lasky. Among the distributors were Hiram Abrams of the Paramount, W. W. Irwin of the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay, E. A. MacManus of the International, P. A. Powers of the Universal and Richard A. Rowland of the Metro. Exhibitors from all over the country were present, led by their President, Lee Ochs.

THE SUN, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1916.

MOVIES TO FIGHT ANY CENSORSHIP

National Association Directors Turn Down Suggestion of Federal Law.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its board of directors yesterday declared itself opposed to the legal censoring of any motion picture in any State or in the nation. Federal censorship as an alternative to local censorship had been favored by some members, and the directors of the producers' branch of the industry had voted for Federal censorship, but after a long executive session of the directors yesterday in the offices of the association in the Times Building, it was unanimously decided to act as a unit in declaring against censorship in any form as "un-American and unconstitutional."

D. W. Griffith, director of monster spectacles, who came her from San Francisco, he said, partly to oppose Federal censorship, in addressing the members contended:

"Federal censorship means the end of the business as an art, as an industry and as a form of expression. Once established on the statutes, it could not easily be dislodged. Instead of considering Federal censorship as a possible means of avoiding State and municipal action, people would do better to devote their time to abolishing such censorship as they now have."

Federal censorship was championed by Arthur S. Friend, representing the Paramount, Lasky and Famous Players companies as the only way to avoid local censorship and police interference.

NEW YORK AMERICAN—FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1916

Movie Men Opposed to Federal Censorship

THE proposed "Federal censorship means the end of the motion picture industry as an art, as an industry and as a form of speech. D. W. Griffith made this statement before a meeting of producers, exhibitors and directors yesterday.

The meeting was held at the headquarters of the National Association of Moving Pictures in the Times building. William A. Brady presided.

Only Arthur S. Friend, representing the Paramount, Lasky and Famous Players organizations, favored a Federal censor. His advocacy was based on the theory that it would relieve the industry of State and city censorships and police interference. But this was denied by other speakers.

The board of directors, in executive session, resolved unanimously:

"That it is the sense of the board of directors of this industry that we are opposed to the legal censoring of any motion picture in any State or in the nation."

EPTEMBER 22, 1916

W YORK COMMERCIAL.

ederal censorship means the end of motion picture industry as an art, as dustry and as a form of speech." In words D. W. Griffith, who had hurried Los Angeles to throw his weight into ght against official interference in the of film production, addressed a meet- f producers, exhibitors and directors rday. The meeting was held at the uarters of the National Association ving Pictures in the Times Building. am A. Brady presided.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1916.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

OPPOSE LEGAL CENSORSHIP.

Movie Heads Unanimous Against Federal Bill—Griffith's Prediction.

A policy of opposition to motion picture censorship in any form was adopted at a meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held yesterday in the rooms of the organization in the Times Building.

There had been some supporters of a policy favoring Federal censorship before the meeting, but after the speeches these shifted and a resolution against legal censorship was adopted unanimously.

D. W. Griffith, who has been one of the most militant opponents to censorship, predicted a calamity if the Federal bill were passed.

"When Federal censorship is once established," he said, "what power is ever going to break it? Once established, who is there in this room who thinks he would stand any chance of arguing with the United States Government about whether Mary Pickford should smoke a cigarette in the first act, or whether any of the other actresses should wear a skirt two and one-half inches above their shoetops? Once that form of hypocrisy is put over the motion picture people I thoroughly believe from the bottom of my heart that Federal censorship means the end of the motion picture business as an art, as an industry, and as a form of speech."

NEW YORK HERALD SEPTEMBER 22, 1916.

The Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which represents every section of the industry, at a meeting at the association's headquarters, in the Times Building, yesterday unanimously declared against any form of legal censorship.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE

, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1916.

MOVIE MEN OPPOSE ALL CENSORSHIP

Directors of National Association So Express Themselves.

After debating the question for three hours yesterday afternoon, the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry expressed itself as being flatly opposed to film censorship in all its forms. The executive session followed a general meeting of exhibitors and manufacturers in the offices of the association, in the Times Building, in the course of which David W. Griffith and many others came out strongly against censorship.

William A. Brady presided over the general meeting, which was attended by picture men from all over the country. The film men were by no means unanimous in opposing censorship, some favoring Federal control and others legislation by the states. Arthur Friend, attorney for Paramount, Lasky and Famous Players, declared that Federal censorship was inevitable and that it should be accepted without complaint.

Mr. Griffith declared that censorship "would mean the end of the business as an art, an industry and a form of speech."

"Once established," he continued, "who in the trade could say whether Mary Pickford should smoke a cigarette in the first act or not? Instead of considering Federal censorship as a possible means of avoiding state and municipal action, people would do better to devote their time toward abolishing such censorship as they now have."

YORK SEPTEMBER 23, 1916.
THE MORNING
TELEGRAPH, SATURDAY,

WHY GRIFFITH IS AIDING WHITMAN

Famous Producer Says It Is Because Governor Vetoed Pernicious Censorship Bill.

NO PARTY MOTIVE INVOLVED

Will Show on Screen Constructive Work Accomplished by the State's Executive.

In his speech before the Exhibitors' League of Motion Pictures for America, D. W. Griffith, the motion picture producer, stated that he had planned to meet Governor Whitman next week and take some moving pictures of New York's chief executive, to be shown by the States exhibitors as an act of gratitude. In order to clear up some misunderstandings which this announcement caused, Mr. Griffith gave out a statement yesterday covering his position in the matter:

"I am for Governor Whitman because he vetoed a vicious censorship bill which not only would have forced the millions in this State who attend moving picture theatres to pay increased prices, but which would have done great damage to the moving picture industry.

"The Cristman-Wheeler bill was legislation which would not be attempted against the newspaper, the magazine or the stage production. It imposed a tax which would have crippled the producer and hampered the patron without preserving for either of them the right of redress or appeal.

"It is my duty to do all I can for a man who was big enough and broad enough to do what he did. I have offered him my services to show on the screen the constructive work he has done in his administration.

"There is nothing of party or politics in this; as a matter of fact, I am a Democrat, and out in Chicago I did all I could to bring about the re-election of Judge Cooper, a Democrat.

"Judge Cooper was opposed by newspapers, some civic organizations and a heterogeneous crowd of individuals, because he had decided that the moving picture had some rights before the law.

"Eighty per cent. of the moving picture theatres and enough of their patrons responded to enable Judge Cooper to run far ahead of the Democratic ticket. If Governor Whitman were a Democrat, or a member of any other party, I would feel it my duty to do just exactly what I have offered to do for him."

SEPTEMBER 23, 1916
NEW YORK TRIBUNE

Fighting the Censorship Blight.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is to be congratulated on its decision to fight all attempts to impose an official censorship, whether local, state or national. There can be no temporizing with the censorship idea. Any other course than a thoroughgoing, uncompromising fight against it wherever it is manifest would lead to a multiplication of evils.

Whether the production of motion pictures be considered an art or merely an industry, it is inevitable that more harm than good must come from any official censorship of pictures. The principle is undemocratic, repugnant to every conception of the liberty of thought and expression which good Americans cherish. As a promoter of morality or a protector of morals it is a lamentable delusion.

Moreover, as the late Mayor Gaynor frequently pointed out, official censorship is unnecessary. If a breach of decency and morality occurs, ample power is lodged in the police authorities to take action. In this city, moreover, the Supreme Court has just denied the application of a producer of a picture play for an injunction to prevent the License Commissioner from stopping it because it was indecent. The incident proves that the public is protected, under existing agencies, whenever there is ground for complaint.

A censorship could give no greater protection than this. It would afford infinite opportunity for mistakes in suppressing good as well as in permitting evil to slip through to the public. Worse than all, it would, if it worked thoroughly, prevent the public from deciding for itself what is good and what is bad—a denial of the opportunity for moral and mental growth, which must inevitably be worse than the effects of the negligible amount of really vicious material which now finds its way into circulation.

SEPTEMBER 23, 1916.
THE NEW YORK REVIEW

MOVING PICTURE INTERESTS OPPOSE ALL CENSORSHIP

National Association Passes Resolution Declaring Against Any Regulation.

The moving picture interests have come out against all censorship. At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, held on Thursday, the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, that it is the sense of the Board of Directors of this industry that we are opposed to the legal censoring of any motion pictures in any State or in any nation."

This, it was explained after the meeting, represents the attitude of the entire industry. The Board of Directors had power to settle the issue for the National Association, which includes producers, exhibitors, distributors, makers of supplies and equipment and others connected with the business.

According to the official statement of the association, it represents an investment of $500,000,000, and will use its influence in 20,000 theatres throughout the country, playing to 20,000,000 persons daily, to fight candidates who favor censorship at the coming elections. Both President Wilson and Justice Hughes have been asked to state their position.

Before yesterday's meeting the producers had approved of federal censorship, but their attitude was changed during the day by the advice of counsel that federal censorship will not stop local or State censorship. The exhibitors led the fight against any kind of censorship at all.

It is now the opinion of the entire industry that there must be no censorship of the movies outside of local police regulations which apply to the regular stage as well as the movies.

William A. Brady, president of the association, who represented the World Film Corporation, presided at the meeting. Other producers in attendance were Carl Laemmle, of the Universal; William L. Sherrill, of the Frohman Amusement Company, and Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players-Lasky. Among the distributors were Hiram Abrams, of the Paramount; W. W. Idwin, of the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay; E. A. MacManus, of the International; P. A. Powers, of the Universal, and Richard a Rowland, of the Metro. Exhibitors from all over the country were present, led by their president, Lee Ochs.

ENSORSHIP OF ALL KINDS SHOULD BE FOUGHT HARD

o Declares John R. Freuler, President of the Mutual Company.

GRIFFITH OPPOSES IT

igorous Telegrams Show Stand of Two Leaders of Film World.

"Treason and incendiarism" are the ds with which John R. Freuler, ident of the Mutual Film Corpora- denounces the movement and the behind the movement to gain an rsement of Federal censorship motion picture producers.

e Mutual president makes the dec- ion that his corporation and the ous film interests which he repre- will refuse to be allied with any up or organization which suggests proposes to stand for any indorse- t of any form of censorship.

r. Freuler flatly disputes the argu- t by a number of film men that eral censorship would be a protec- against the abuses of State and censorships.

r. Freuler has been kept informed proceedings at special meetings of National Association of the Motion ture Industry in New York, and his Chicago office has directed rous protests against the move- t which aims to represent the mo- picture industry as willing to ac- Federal censorship.

and the Mutual Film Corporation be found fighting censorship in form as long as we have any share he picture industry, and as long as e is any censorship, existing or pro- d," said Mr. Freuler.

r. Freuler's attitude, and that of d Wark Griffith as well, is indi- d in their recent exchange of tele- s which are quoted here. Mr. ith wired to Mr. Freuler:

great crisis confronts motion pic- industry through secret effort that been carried on by minority of pro- s for Federal censorship law g the membership of National As- tion of Motion Picture Industry. al meetings are being pushed gh to railroad an indorsement can be presented at Washington presentative of desires of entire try. We know from investigation action is not representative and whatever has been done favoring deral bill has been acceded to ghtlessly at behest of this active rity. You must realize with me Federal censorship will not do with State censorship.

know from our personal deal- with State and city boards these two years that each resents sug- n of interference from any board e their own locality. They will t Washington think for them. As tter of law, it is not true that l censorship will do away with censorship, for it is the constitu- right of every State to retain wer of censorship even if a Fed- oard is established so that effect er is only to double tax and to sh a censorship from which, un- tate censorship, there can be no .

lieve firmly that Federal censor- ill mean eventual strangulation motion picture industry. The meeting of National Association e held tomorrow night, and if convictions permit a wire from ould be of great service. You address answer to me at 807 re Building.

ned) D. W. GRIFFITH."

reuler's reply follows:

nsider any effort to represent e motion picture industry favors hip in any form, guise or color ing less than incendarism and .

nt to go on record now with laration that the Mutual Film tion and the other film inter- ich I represent will never at e, under any conditions, sub- or participate in any proposal t censorship in any form. We ing and will continue to rm of censorship ex[illegible] State or [illegible]

Campaign Against Censorship

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which represents half a billion, having unanimously declared against any kind of legalized censorship, has already begun a country-wide campaign against the political advocates of it.

Through the work of the Exhibitors' League of America, which is an active, aggressive affiliation of the national association, Senator Cristman of the Thirty-second senatorial district of New York, author of the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill, vetoed by Gov. Whitman, was overwhelmingly defeated in the primaries by Theodore Douglas Robinson, nephew of Col. Roosevelt. The issue was made squarely on motion picture censorship.

In the twenty-five theatres of the distrct slides containing announcement and slogans were flashed on the screen at each performance, and it is estimated that during the week immediately preceding the balloting more than 250,000 people in this rather sparsely populated district had been appealed to by messages from the screen. They were told that Senator Cristman—if he has his way—will cause the price of admission to be advanced in all of the houses. His bill, as a law, would have caused a loss to the industry in this state of a round million dollars a year.

In appreciation of his veto of it, David Wark Griffith has announced that he will aid Gov. Whitman's campaign by most effectively filming him, and the state exhibitors, as a man, irrespective of politics, will lend their aid.

The national association will ascertain the position on censorship, if possible, of every candidate for governor in the country, for the state legislatures, and the views of aspirants to seats at the national capital. The attitude of the great body, with its fifty-odd classes of membership, is fully expressed in the following addresses—from the most eminent producer, the head of the exhibitors, the counsel for the association and a field agent who has spoken in every capital in the country. Each touches a salient angle, and was made before the recent meeting of the board of directors at the headquarters in this city.

the censorship issue, on which he insists there can be no compromise.

"As a matter of fact, we will fight censorship of any sort, by whomever imposed. It is an insult and an offense to consider that the national motion picture industry should be subject to censorship any more than the Associated Press or the United Press or the International News Association should be subject to censorship. Most emphatically the Mutual will not submit to such control without a determined fight against the injustice of it.

"I say deliberately that any man who is in the picture producing business and who is willing to accept the principle of censorship is a menace to the business and utterly opposed to the best interests not alone of his own industry but as well to those of the public. If the motion picture industry is to be censored from any direction I say we may as well abolish the industry."

templated, city, State or [illegible]

Any man or any interests which suggest acceptance of Federal censorship as a lesser of evils is guilty of suicidal error and ignorance.

Any film man who stands for such a policy should not be in the motion picture industry and will not be for long.

"Acceptance of any form of censorship would mean the violation of the primary principles of Americanism and a surrender of our right to do business. If there should be censorship, then there should be no pictures. Our rights and those of the free press are equal and identical.

"The Mutual Film Corporation and its allied interests will not be associated in any relation with any organization which stands for or proposes any compromise on the censorship issue. We shall fight to the everlasting finish for our principle.

"Further, there is no possible value, even temporarily, in acceptance of Federal censorship as a foil against State censorship, since it is established beyond question, just as you point out, that the States would still retain whatever censorship power they may have.

"You are authorized to use this statement for publication or in any manner that you deem fit.

"JOHN R. FREULER.
"President Mutual Film Corporation."

Mr. Freuler reiterates his position on National Association Solid Against Censorship

Directors of Recently Formed Body Representing the Whole Industry Unanimously Decide Against Any Form of Legalized Censorship—Meeting Enthusiastic and Harmonious—Strong Speeches by D. W. Griffith and William A. Seabury

At an enthusiastic meeting held in its room in the Times Building last Thursday the board of directors of The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, by a unanimous and harmonious vote, went on record as opposed to legalized censorship of any kind.

Practically the whole day was given over to a discussion of the censorship question. At the morning session of the board it was declared an open meeting for the purpose of giving those prominent and important men in the industry who were not members of the board a chance to express their views. The proponents of a legalized Federal censorship or regulation were given the first hearing, and while they one and all expressed their aversion to censorship as a principle, they advocated Federal control as a palliative for present conditions. Their main argument was that censorship in some form or other was bound to come, and that such being the case, it would be better to have it in some centralized body, such as a Federal board of control, rather than submit to a widely diversified state and local censorship, each with a different standard. The trend of their arguments was that Federal regulation would prevent the formation of state and local boards of censors. Each of the gentlemen who spoke on this side of the question stated at the beginning of their arguments that, irrespective of their own opinions, they would agree to unqualifiedly stand by the action of the board when the question came up for a decisive vote.

Strong Speech by Griffith

There were four principal speeches made against censorship in any form. They were made by D W. Griffith, Lee Ochs, president of The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, Stephen J. Bush, and William A. Seabury, counsel of the Association. Mr. Griffith made one of the most convincing and interesting speeches heard on the question. Commencing at a period in the history of the world five hundred years before the birth of Christ, he showed the manner in which Gautama Buddha was censored by the priests of his period, and then, following down through civilization, convincingly set forth by concrete examples in history the manner in which every new movement, invention and idea which has had an effect on aiding and improving civilization had been censored. "Once Federal censorship is established what power can break it?" he said. "Who will stand a chance of arguing with the United States Government? Who would be able to object if the censors objected to Mary Pickford smoking a cigarette in the first act? I believe that Federal censorship means the end of the motion picture as an art, an industry and form of speech." Mr. Griffith then read a large number of telegrams, the most important of which was from the Motion Picture Directors Association of America, comprising every director in Los Angeles, stating that they were opposed to censorship in any form.

Seabury Presents Legal Aspects

Mr. Bush made an exceedingly strong speech, bringing out the fact that "censorships breeds censorship; it begets censorship, and you will have multiform censorship, all varieties and all kinds of censorship." William A. Seabury, general counsel for the Association, spoke on the legal aspects of the question, saying in part: "The arguments of every man who advocates any form of censorship are based exclusively on the question of expediency, that if they get Federal censorship it is going to abolish state or local censorship. That is highly a matter of opinion, but I have no hesitancy in saying that it will have no such effect at all." Mr. Seabury then went on to point out and prove conclusively that the Congress of the United States really had no right to interfere with this question at all, his arguments being based on a recent decision of the Supreme Court whereby a motion picture film ceased to be a subject in interstate commerce when it came into a state for the purpose of exhibition and was placed either in the hands of an exchange for delivery to its exhibitor or received by an exhibitor direct for exhibition." Continuing, he said: "I am convinced that there is only one way of dealing with this subject, and that is from the standpoint of public education. Funds are not needed for the purpose of political chicanery, but they are needed for the purpose of properly putting before the public what censorship means."

Mr. Ochs told of the manner in which the New York Local of the Exhibitors League of America had defeated the nomination of Senator Cristman at the primaries. Concluding, he said: "I want to say to you that the exhibitor is the best judge of who should be the censor. We come in contact daily with the public and with our patrons, and if we don't show pictures that are clean they will not be patrons of ours any longer. You can put on a smutty picture and you can get a lot of money, but I want to say that it kills your house for one, two and three days afterwards, and the sooner the exhibitor realizes it the better he will be."

Following the morning session the directors went into executive session later in the afternoon, and after a long meeting, in which every phase of the question was discussed, came out unanimously against censorship of any kind.

Zukor Explains Position

Following the meeting Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, made a statement giving the reason for his change of attitude. He said:

"I fought for the passage of a Federal bill because I believe that by its enactment motion picture producers and exhibitors could conform with one set of rules, instead of being subjected to the varying restrictions of the number of state and local boards that now exist. It was my conviction that if the government maintained a board it would have the respect and confidence of local boards, in time eliminating them entirely. Such a result would be far more desirable than the existence of many boards, as a single standard would enable producers easily to avoid the presentation of objectionable subjects. I am now advised by the legal board of the National Association, however, that creation of a Federal board would not eliminate the state and municipal boards, and would, in fact, encourage such local bodies in places where they are not now maintained, because of the love of home rule inherent in every state and municipality. Under the circumstances, I intend to be guided by this legal advice.

Those present at the meeting were William A. Brady, World Film Corporation; Carl Laemmle, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Company; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Jesse Lasky; Lee Ochs, President of the Exhibitors League of America; Hiram Abrams, Paramount Pictures Corporation; Walter W. Irwin, V-L-S-E; E. A. McManus, International Film Service; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corporation; Louis F. Blumenthal, Auditorium theatre, Jersey City, N. J.; Maurice A. Choynski, Newberry theatre, Chicago; Thomas Furniss, Brunswick Amusement Company, Duluth; Frederick J. Harrington, Pittsburgh; Peter J. Jeup, Detroit; Louis L. Levine, Regent theatre, Brooklyn; Charles H. Phillips, Milwaukee; Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; Samuel H. Trigger, Tremont theatre, New York; A. P. Tugwell, Los Angeles; Donald J. Bell, Bell & Howell Company, Chicago; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; J. H. Hallberg; Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Lithograph Company; E. S. Porter, Precision Machine Company; William A. Johnston, Motion Picture News; Fred J. Beecroft, New York Dramatic Mirror; W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World; Paul Gulick, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; F. C. Gunning, Widow; Arthur James, Metro Picture Corporation; David Wark Griffith, creator of "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance"; Thomas H. Ince, builder of "Civilization"; Theodore Mitchell and J. J. McCarthy, representing Griffith interests; F. A. Parson of Pathe; Louis Frank, of Chicago; J. A. Barrie, Los Angeles; J. S. Sweeny, of Philadelphia; William Wright, Kalem Company; Messrs. Graham and Isenberg, Alfred Hamburger, Chicago; Mr. Sherwood of the National Board of Review; William M. Seabury, counsel of the National Association; Albert Strauss.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1916.

FILM MEN WILL TACKLE HUGHES ON CENSORSHIP

By GORDON TRENT.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is going to sound Candidate Charles W. Hughes on the question of film censorship to-morrow. A meeting was arranged for a delegation from the picture trade through ex-Senator Colby at the Essex Country Club in West Orange, N. J., where the visitors will be guests at luncheon.

Walter E. Edge, the Republican candidate for Governor, will be a guest of honor and is expected to speak regarding censorship.

Walter W. Irwin, chairman of the executive committee, who presented the cases of the association to President Wilson, will be spokesman for the delegation, which will be made up as follows:

William A. Brady, president of the National Association; Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers, Jesse Lasky, Hiram Abrams, Richard A. Rowland, Arthur James, William L. Sherrill, E. A. McManus, William A. Johnston, W. Stephen Bush, J. H. Hallberg, Frederick Hawley, Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, and Randolph Lewis, director of publicity of the association. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be represented by Lee A. Ochs, Louis F. Blumenthal, Samuel H. Trigger and Louis L. Levine.

THURSDAY Oct. 12
EVENING MAIL

MOTION PICTURE LEADERS WORKING FOR WHITMAN

1,000 Ft. Film to Be Made and Exhibited Free to Aid Re-election of Movie Mn's Friend.

By FREDERICK JAMES SMITH.

David Ward Griffith has launched a movement in motion picture circles to aid the re-election of Gov. Whitman.

Griffith states that the movement has been started entirely out of gratitude to the governor for vetoing the Christman-Wheeler bill, which would have imposed, manufacturers say, a prohibitive censorship and tax upon pictures.

A campaign film, a showing close-ups of the state executive in action, is to be prepared. It will be a thousand feet in length and will bear the title "The Executive of the State." The film will show Whitman at his desk, receiving state officials, etc. This will be released free to exhibitors in the state.

Special slide, advocating Whitman's re-election as a friend of the screen, have likewise been prepared.

Motion picture men expect that some 16,000 theatres of the state will, within a few days, be throwing the weight of their screens into the election campaign. In a special statement, Griffith says:

It is my duty to do all I can for a man who was big enough and broad enough to do what he did. I have offered him my services to show on the screen the constructive work he has done in his administration.

There is nothing of party or politics in this; as a matter of fact I am a Democrat, and out in Chicago I did all I could to bring about the re-election of Judge Cooper, a Democrat, who was opposed by newspapers, some civic organizations and a heterogeneous crowd of individuals because he had decided that the moving picture had some rights before the law. Eighty per cent. of the moving theatres and enough of their patrons responded to enable Judge Cooper to run far ahead of the Democratic ticket.

If Gov. Whitman were a Democrat or a member of any other party I would feel it my duty to do just exactly what I have offered to do for him.

Oct. 8-16
THE NEWARK MORNING LEDGER
BROAD AND MECHANIC STREETS
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY

Griffith Denounces Censorship

Written Especially for the Newark Ledger by D. W. Griffith.

There is no more reason for a censorship of motion picture productions than there is for a censorship of the newspapers, magazines, literature and art galleries of America.

I have held ever since this un-American thing first made its appearance that the moving picture is a form of speech entitled to all the freedom of other forms of speech and writing, as guaranteed by the Constitution.

The point in this movement that is so often overlooked is that the upholding of the laws pertaining to decency and morality is a police function. Every state in this union is amply fortified with all the laws that are necessary to regulate the motion picture theaters and the productions shown there.

Censorship is such a broad power to place in the hands of a select body of men that judging wholly from the limited experiences we have had where censorship now prevails, its increase in this country would mean the doom of artistic motion pictures.

Let these reformers who favor censoring the pictures once get hold and I insist that censorship begets censorship. It would mean the beginning of an era of beaurocracy and lead to heaven only knows where.

It is with great pleasure that I call your attention to the action of the allied motion picture industries taken in New York on September 22, when all the producers, exhibitors, directors and other allied interests of the national association went on record as unanimously opposed to any and all forms of censorship.

This date is going to be recalled in after years as a red letter day in the history of the motion picture art in America.

We have suffered wrongs in the past because we have temporized with a principle and adopted compromises as expedients.

I hope that the New Jersey exhibitors will take the first step in their state to start the good work going. Let us all stand together and fight this unwholesome and un-American thing. There is no reason why the motion picture should make any excuses. It is as pure and harmless as any form of dramatic expression the world has ever known. Simply because it tells the truth in the most forceful and direct way that modern science and art has devised, is no reason why it should be singled out and cuffed about by all the cranks and busybodies who like to run everybody's business along with their own.

Of course, there will be unscrupulous people who will try to get by with bad pictures, but they can be headed off. Let us keep our own houses clean. Cleanliness is a matter of good judgment and taste. It can never be legislated into anybody's head or heart. But the laws of decency and morality will take care of the offenders, and we can devote our time and work and hearts to do the good things that are worth while.

Can you imagine the feelings of a director toiling out in the wind and the sun and the heat trying to make a story live, with the ogre of a censor board sitting in some distant state and combing their reform beards with their fingertips waiting to pronounce sentence upon us before we have had a chance to do anything the people might approve?

If it were not so seriously menacing it would be ridiculously absurd. Let us realize this and keep up the good fight and show our strength, and I assure you we will soon hear the end of all censorship agitation.

CHICAGO EXAMINER, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1916.

MUSIC - SC

Censors Here Overruled by Eight Million People

J. J. M'CARTHY, general manager for "The Birth of a Nation," who has been in Chicago several days arranging for the hearing before Judge Gridley on the motion to make permanent the temporary injunction under which the Griffith production has operated in Chicago yesterday, pointed out several details in connection with this production that have not been dwelt upon. He said:

It is a matter of regret with us that we should be here now fighting for the future of "The Birth of a Nation" in the second largest city in America. It would seem that Chicago has troubles enough of its own just at present so far as the colored race question is concerned without our case being intruded into the affairs.

There is something timely in the subject, however. We have never mentioned one-tenth of the secret conniving and scheming that has been going on here, but of which we have at all times been aware.

• • •

HERE is a theatrical attraction that has been making stage history for America. We have played "The Birth of a Nation" to upward of 8,000,000 people. Our record is as clean as anything could be. We have been going ahead attending to our business, and not mixing up in the political schemes that have been hatched out to interfere with us, and now, after a run of nearly a year and with a record of half a million pleased patrons behind us, we are compelled to return to Chicago and face another attack upon our contract rights. If it were not so serious it would seem ridiculous enough to be almost unbelievable.

• • •

ACCLAIMED BY WORLD.

LET me point out a few things about "The Birth of a Nation" that are not known to the average citizen of your city. This play has been approved in every city and town of any importance in America. In addition we have played it in Europe, Australia and South America. Everywhere it has been acclaimed as a work of art that will endure because it is powerfully dramatic and historically interesting. I wish to pick out a few representative names for you of men who have seen this production and given it their unqualified indorsement. These friends are voluntary contributors to our cause.

As one instance let me point out the case of the late Richard Harding Davis. Mr. Davis as novelist, war correspondent and dramatist is credited with a pretty fair idea of what constituted good drama. The late Mr. Davis saw our production ten different times during the New York run. He would never accept a pass and always paid his way.

Do you suppose for one minute that a man of Mr. Davis' standing would be so enthusiastic over a production if there was anything wrong about it? He was too true and genuine an American to do anything like that. He was a man of strong convictions and when he saw big drama and truth he took off his hat to it.

• • •

PRONOUNCED GLORIOUS ART.

NOW look over this list of men who also gave it their praise:

Governor Hiram Johnson of California, who said: "It is the most glorious accomplishment in any art I have ever seen."

Dr. John Cavanaugh, president of Notre Dame University, invited us to present it to 1,200 of his students and wrote a glorious testimonial to the production, and we have framed in our office in New York the grateful appreciation of the student body of that educational institution.

Do you suppose for one instant that if there was anything unfair or prejudicial to a fair share of our population that such a body of young men under the mentorship of a great theologian and student of human nature could be induced to praise this work voluntarily?

Without detailed comment on their different expressions of praise let me point out some men who have come forward and given us their full support:

Major General John F. O'Ryan, in command of the National Guard of New York, now on the Mexican border.

Hon. Claude Kitchen, leader of the House of Representatives at Washington.

Vachel Lindsay, the poet and critic of Springfield, Ill.

Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York.

Governor Ralston of Indiana.

Mayor John Purroy Mitchel of New York City, Mayor Curley of Boston and the Mayors of more than 100 other cities in which we have played "The Birth of a Nation."

• • •

WITHOUT going into the many names, we are prepared to submit the list of United States senators who have indorsed it and the combined force will represent a majority of that august legislative body.

• • •

THE churches of all denominations have been our stanch friends. The Rev. Christian F. Riessner of Grace M. E. Church in New York presented the play before 1,500 Methodist Episcopal ministers of New York State and they indorsed the picture without leaving their seats.

• • •

OTHER eminent pastors were the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, the Rev. Father John Talbot Smith, the Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, the Rev. Thomas Squires and Rabbi Charles S. Fleischer. Here you will note the names of Presbyterians, Catholics, Unitarians, Episcopalians, Methodists and Hebrews. They are selected at random from more than a thousand such indorsements which we are prepared to file.

A few specific names I might mention are Dorothy Dix, who has more readers than any other woman writing for the newspapers today; Dr. David Starr Jordan, the famous pacifist and educator; James S. Metcalfe, the eminent critic of New York Life.

• • •

INDORSED BY CRITICS.

WE might mention every qualified critic of the newspapers and magazines of America and so on down the list of statesmen, writers, professional men of every calling and citizens of international reputation, but what is the further use? Back of these men are the millions representing nearly one-tenth of the total population of the country. It is utterly ridiculous to think all these people could be wrong. It is simply amazing that any one can be found to-day who is so steeped in prejudice as to be a party to any movement which has for its end the suppression of such an offering.

And so I say that Chicago, facing a condition which would have been deemed a political impossibility a few months ago, stands out as the one place in the country where a few narrow-minded people are willing to put their prejudices against the unqualified indorsement of these representative millions and to seek by devious and insidious means to suppress such a great work of art by a technical subterfuge.

CHICAGO HERALD, OCTOBER 23, 1916.

Film Fight Again in Court

Last week J. J. McCarthy and Theodore Mitchell of the Epoch Film Company made a trip to Chicago in the interests of "The Birth of a Nation." The dissolving of the injunction to prevent the exhibition of Griffith's masterpiece was only temporary, and now the battle must be refought.

"We ran along in New York at the Liberty Theater for forty-seven weeks and average $12,000 each week," said Mr. McCarthy. "Then came a demand for this attraction from every state in the Union. We never dreamed that we would meet with opposition. New York City, you know, is small on the map. But there are many people there. They respect their neighbors, consequently there was no dust stirred up when 'The Birth of a Nation' was presented in New York.

"Out here the people as not so old as in New York, and hence the inclination to suspect your neighbor because you do not know him. And some one in cleaning Chicago of its vices is mistaking virtue for vice. What a pity the politicians in power must clean the City of Chicago in this way."

+ + +

NEW YORK AMERICAN—OCTOBER 28, 1916

Attack on Whitman for "Movies" Censor Veto Causes Reprisal

Perkins Peppers McCormick, and Other Prominent Men Figure in Day's Campaign Gossip.

J. J. M'CARTHY, of the D. W. Griffith attractions, has called the attention of the New York Tribune to a discrepancy between its advertised policy of "First to Last the Truth—News — Editorials — Advertisements" and a political advertisement in its columns which flatly contradicts a recent editorial utterance in the same paper.

The advertisement made a violent attack on Governor Whitman, who, it charged, is receiving the support of the motion picture men because he vetoed the Censorship bill at the last session. The advertisement is headed: "Prostituting the Movies."

After reciting the great benefits to the moving picture industry by Mr. Whitman's veto, Mr. McCarthy says:

"Prostitution is an ugly word. Can it possibly apply to an act of gratitude in the light of the fact that the thing Governor Whitman did to arouse our gratitude was demanded by the Tribune in an editorial bearing upon the issue involved?"

ADVERT NEW YORK TRIBUNE, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1916

No. 18 No. 19 To-morrow

Must the Greatest State Have the Worst Government?

PROSTITUTING THE MOVIES

The Legislature of New York passed a bill last winter providing for the censorship of moving pictures by a state board.

Governor Whitman vetoed this bill and, in return, the moving picture interests are now broadcasting films designed to influence the citizens of New York to vote for Governor Whitman.

The surest way to secure censorship of moving pictures is to employ them in the defense of extravagant and incompetent public officials.

If we are to have movies of the Whitman administration let us have one showing Gov. Whitman and his appointees junketing out to California at state expense.

Let us have one showing facsimiles of the itemized vouchers for this junket. Gov. Whitman has appealed from a court order requiring him to make public the originals.

Let us have one showing Gov. Whitman signing the Mohansic plans and permitting hospital sewage to be dumped into New York City's drinking water.

Let us have one showing the agent of a casualty company coercing an injured workman, a proceeding which Gov. Whitman sanctioned by his amendment to the Compensation Act.

Let us have a movie of the barge canal showing political heelers who can neither read nor write working as gaugers—until after election.

Let us have one of Senator Brackett denouncing Gov. Whitman's record as "hopelessly inefficient and bad."

Let us have a movie of Gov. Whitman reading the New York Sun editorial of April 28, 1915, declaring:

> "The whole onus of the raid on the taxpayers rests to-day on the shoulders of Charles S. Whitman."

And finally let us have a movie of the New York taxpayer digging into his pocket to pay the $20,000,000 direct tax inflicted upon him through Gov. Whitman's confessed ignorance of state finance.

If the movies are going into politics let them show cold, hard facts instead of grateful fiction!

NON-PARTISAN LEAGUE FOR GOOD GOVERNMENT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Amos Pinchot, Robert H. Elder, Gilbert E. Roe, James Bronson Reynolds, R. B. Van Cortlandt, Phoenix Ingraham

Kenneth McEwen, Secretary, 30 Broad St., New York City

OCTOBER 28, 1916.
THE MORNING TELEGRAPH,

Movies and the Tribune.

In the New York Tribune, which boasts of the accuracy and fairness of its advertising columns, there appeared yesterday a display advertisement in which the slogan "Prostituting the Movies" appeared conspicuously in heavy type. The advertisement was sponsored by the Non-Partisan League for Good Government, and it was an argument intended to offset the influence of the moving picture campaign in Governor Whitman's behalf.

Having recalled that the Tribune had advocated Governor Whitman's veto of the censorship bill, an act which has caused the movies interests to indorse him and exhibit him broadcast on the screen, J. J. McCarthy, general representative for D. W. Griffith, rolled up his sleeves and wrote the Tribune the following letter of protest:

"I earnestly wish to call to your attention the indecency and unfairness of this advertisement.

"When a bill was jammed through both the House and Senate before the motion picture interests could have a fair hearing the only avenue left open to them was a public appeal to Governor Whitman. Responding to the outcry against any form of censorship being established in the State of New York, Governor Whitman vetoed the bill. If you will consult the files of the Tribune about this time you will find that the New York Tribune publicly called upon Governor Whitman to veto this bill.

"Motion picture interests, as an expression of their appreciation for the courageous stand taken by Governor Whitman in their behalf, decided to do what they could to let the lovers of moving pictures in New York know what he had done in their interests. Mr. D. W. Griffith lent his aid by making a human interest story showing what the Governor of a great State has to do in a day's work looking after the interests of the people he has been elected to serve. The entire cost was borne by Mr. Griffith.

"If a public official does an act which you appreciate, and you try to appear grateful by expressing your appreciation, wherein does this American act become allied with prostitution?

"There were no promises made regarding the movie support of Governor Whitman's act in vetoing the Cristman-Wheeler bill. The whole thing was voluntary and non-partisan. It simply narrowed down to an opportunity on the part of the motion picture people to show that they intend in the future to stand by their friends.

"Prostitution is an ugly word. Can it possibly apply to an act of gratitude in the light of the fact that the thing Governor Whitman did to arouse our gratitude was demanded by the Tribune in an editorial bearing upon the issue involved?"

Chicago Examiner
Hearst Bldg., Madison and Market Sts., Chicago, Ill.

This article is from the Chicago Examiner of

NOV 1 1916

From R. B. McKaird

MORE CREDIT FOR MOVIE.

AS NOTED in this column yesterday, the California movie interests claim they elected Wilson President. Now, New York screen folk boast they "put over" Whitman as Governor. They were for him because he vetoed the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill. To acomplish this, D. W. Griffith made a film showing the Governor at work. This was shown in 1,600 houses.

Undoubtedly the screen has become a tremendous force in politics, and its possibilities have just begun to be realized. Could we go so far as to imagine two great parties of the future—the pro and the anti movieites?

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1916.
MORNING TELEGRAPH,

WHITMAN FILM IS SEEN BY 900,000

D. W. Griffith's Political Picture Plays Important Part in Governor's Re-Election.

SHOWN IN 790 THEATRES

More Than Half of Houses in State Booked "A Day With Governor Whitman.

The motion picture is beginning to make itself felt as a political instrument of unestimable strength. In an accounting made last week by John C. Flinn, who was in charge of the distribution throughout the State of New York during the three weeks preceding the recent election of D. W. Griffith's film entitled "A Day With Governor Whitman," announcement was made that approximately 900,000 persons saw the picture.

It was the first time in the political history of New York State that a Governor running in a Presidential year led the head of his ticket by more than 40,000 votes. To what extent the propaganda, through the channels of the motion picture theatres throughout the State played part in this prerogative of course no one can say, but the managers of Governor Whitman's campaign for re-election declare that the industry's tribute to the Governor was a most important factor in the campaign.

When the Crisman-Wheeler censorship bill, having been passed by the State Legislature, was before Governor Whitman for signature last Spring a protest from the principal executives in the motion picture industry, representing all branches of production, distribution and exhibition in the form of a delegation appeared before Governor Whitman at Albany. The arrangements for this protest hearing were in the hands of Robert J. Rubin, representing the State Exhibitors Association; L. J. O'Reilly, International Film Service; Arthur James, Metro Pictures Corporation, and John C. Flinn, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The success of the protest in Albany is now a matter of history, as Governor Whitman, having heard logically presented the reasons why the Cristman-Wheeler bill should not be signed, vetoed the measure.

D. W. Griffith, for years one of the champions of the free screen, was so pleased at the action of the Governor that when he came to New York early this Autumn he volunteered to produce for exhibition throughout New York State a one reel picture entitled "A Day With Governor Whitman," which showed the intimacy between the chief executive at Albany and the men and women citizens of the State.

The entire movement for the printing and distribution of this film sprung from a desire on the part of a dozen or more men prominent in the industry to show in an effective manner their appreciation of Governor Whitman's veto of censorship.

It is estimated that the gross booking time of the film, which played in some theatres as long as a week and in others for a shorter engagement, was 1,185 days, something more than three years in actual time.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH,
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1917.

Griffith "Goes to War."

D. W. Griffith, creator of the military spectacles "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation," is going abroad to make a moving picture of the great world war now raging in Europe.

Announcement of this was made yesterday after the news developments of the past forty-eight hours indicated that America may become involved in the terrific struggle.

A year ago Mr. Griffith was approached by representatives of one of the warring nations asking him to make a series of pictures showing their side of the conflict. At that time the offer was refused because of President Wilson's proclamation of neutrality. The gathering war clouds now suggest that this restriction is liable to be removed at any moment. Mr. Griffith is assembling his staff of experts with a view of being prepared to hasten to Europe at the earliest opportunity. He has already mapped out a dramatic spectacle of the world's war, with actual battlefields as the background for his action, and aspires to make this an epic of the current conflict. The wonderful groupings and massing of great martial forces in "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation" suggest what Griffith can do with large bodies of men. With real war as the incentive and the American spirit dominant in its enlargement—in the event our soldiers become a part of the titanic struggle—a Griffith picture of such proportions should become of historical value.

and is ...
musical prog...

D. W. GRIFFITH RETURNS.

SINGING the praises of Southern hospitality, David W. Griffith comes back to town from Richmond, Va., where he was the honor guest at a banquet Monday night given by the Daughters of the Confederacy. The ladies honored Mr. Griffith in appreciation of his giving to the world that super-picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been heartily indorsed by the different Southern societies.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH,
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1916.

FILM MEN AGAINST CENSORS, HE SAYS

D. W. Griffith Replies to Claims of Congressman Hughes Over Motion Picture Legislation.

WOULD BE FATAL TO BUSINESS

Calls Attention to Records in New York City Where Laws Are Ample to Control Theatres.

D. W. Griffith, who has long led the fight against censorship of motion pictures in America, yesterday gave out a statement replying to the claims set forth in Washington dispatches to several New York newspapers, showing the ne wactivities of Representative Hughes, who is endeavoring to have his bill providing for Federal censorship considered by the present Congress.

"One may admire the persistency of these advocates of national censorship," said Mr. Griffith yesterday, "but the same cannot be said for the methods pursued by the proponents of this measure.

"I notice the latest advocate in favor of censorship that Congressman Hughes quoted in favor of his bill is W. H. Kemble of Brooklyn. Any one in the picture business can tell you that Mr. Kemble represents such a small interest in our business that the only impression gathered from this new move is that Congressman Hughes is in sore need of supporters when he depends upon such sources for encouragement.

Creates Wrong Impression.

"But the Washington dispatches which appeared in the papers this morning are calculated to create a wrongful impression that the real men in the motion picture business are in favor of a Federal censorship. The actual facts are directly contrary to this.

"The National Association of Motion Picture Industries is the representative organization of this business. It is composed of directors of motion picture plays, the manufacturers who control the great sums of capital invested in this business and the national league of exhibitors who control the preponderating majority of the theatres of America. Affiliated with them are the trade interests that are dependent for their livelihood upon the business in general. Thus you have the field thoroughly covered.

"Last October this association met to consider the different forms of legalized censorship which were then pending. Among these were the Hughes bill providing for a national censorship law. A resolution was unanimously adopted at this meeting in which the entire association went on record as opposed to all forms of legalized censorship. This settles the question once and for all as far as the men who are vitally interested in the motion picture industries are concerned. Among the men who voted for the resolution were several interested manufacturers who last Winter had been in favor of the Hughes bill, but had found upon investigation it was impracticable and opposed to the best interests of the business as a whole.

"These men who control the enterprise know best what is required of them. They are keenly alive to their responsibility to the public and to the investors who have their money in motion picture industries. They are on record officially, so that every one who is interested can ascertain the facts without trouble by writing to the secretary of the National Association and getting a copy of the resolution adopted.

Would Kill Business.

"Personally, I feel sure a further spread of censorship laws would kill the motion picture business. We men who toil in the sun and are working far into the nights to get the productions made have learned from bitter experience that censorship is a hampering blight. It will limit our imaginations and curtail our initiative. It has been proved time and time again that censorship does more harm than good by a hundredfold. It has also been proved in other industrial fields that national control or censorship does not remedy the situation as far as the individual States are concerned, but that censorship begets censorship.

"I regret that there are a few disgruntled peddlers in the motion picture business who can still raise a doubt as to the real requirements of the busines, but surely the men who have the best interests of the work at heart are qualified to know what is good for the business, and these men are unalterably and unanimously opposed to any forms of legalized censorship.

"I would also call your attention to the record in New York City, where there is no censorship of any kind. The control of our places of public amusement is a police function and there are ample laws to take care of any emergency that has arisen. Any one who cares to investigate the situation will find that the theatres of New York are kept as decent and clean as any in the country, and are a marked improvement over the theatres in other States and municipalities where censorial laws are in operation."

NEW BRUNSWICK TIMES
WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 1, 1916.

"BIRTH OF NATION" SEATS GO ON SALE TO-MORROW A. M.

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Opera House commencing on Monday matinee, March 6, for one entire week.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction when it was in New York, where it broke every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles.

A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

The sale of seats will open tomorrow, Thursday morning, at 9 o'clock.

MAE MARSH, IN THE GREAT SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT OPERA HOUSE HOUSE WEEK OF MARCH 6, MATINEES DAILY.

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

So strenuous is the fighting in the big battle scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," Hancock Opera House next Wednesday and Thursday, Wednesday and Thursday matinees, that the spectator has difficulty, it is said, in making himself believe it is not real battles that were photographed. There is apparent no such "faking" as is seen in the fights of "supers" on the regular stage in Shakespearean and other plays where battles are portrayed.

COLLEGE PRESIDENT SEES "BIRTH OF A NATION"

CLINTON, N. Y., Feb. 29.—Dr. M. W. Stryker, president of Hamilton college, after witnessing a performance of the "Birth of a Nation," addressed the students the following morning, saying that the spectacle was a masterpiece, both historically and mechanically. He then urged that all the members of the college see the picture if possible.

Dr. Stryker has been president of the college for the past twenty-four years. The most important feature of his presidency has been the erection of ten modern buildings on the campus. Hamilton has an alumnus at its head, as Dr. Stryker was a graduate of the class of 1872.

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

D. W. GRIFFITH

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in the spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or who can ever efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation simplified. The player and his mood become the great figure in such cases. In the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to the concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

"BIRTH OF A NATION" PRESENTED AT THE OPERA HOUSE ALL NEXT WEEK.

THE MOBILE NEWS 3/1

3,000 HORSES SHOWN IN RECORD-SMASHING FILM

There would be more horses than the present 3,000 shown in Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lyric this week, if the European war had not broken out when this part of the big production was being completed. The foreign drain on American horseflesh is something the average citizen has no comprehension of. Griffith had to beg, borrow and buy the horses for his big scenes and they were corralled from all parts of the country. He found agents of the English, French, Italian and Russian governments competing with him for these horses and while he only rented them by the day the foreign demand was so great that many shrewd horsemen forced him to buy at war prices in order to complete his picture within a given time.

"The Birth of a Nation" has taken Mobile by storm and there is every indication that the week's receipts will break all records at the Lyric. Two performances are given daily at 3 and 8:15 and seats are on sale at the box office for all performances.

Waco (Texas) News 3/1

"The Birth of a Nation.

The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Auditorium tonight for three performances. Never, in the most terrific scenes of the spectacle, is the romance, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," quite forgotten. In the battle of Petersburg, for example, the "little colonel" leads a thrilling charge against the command of his old school friend, Captain Stoneman. One of the brothers of Margaret Cameron falls a victim to war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. Elsie Stoneman and her brother, Phil, are present in Ford's theatre the night of the assassination of Lincoln. It is to save the honor of his sweetheart, Elsie Stoneman, that the "little colonel" leads the Ku Klux Klansmen in the most sensational ride ever staged.

The spectacle is in two parts. The first half exhibits the salient events of the civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy in Ford's theatre, live before the eyes of the spectator as vividly as did the actual events in the era depicted.

In the second half is shown the second uprising of the south, this time against the carpetbag regime. Horrors worse than those of war are enacted, and there springs up the "invisible empire" with its vast hordes of 40,000 men. The Ayran race is restored to its rights after a secret and terrible combat. It is in this half of the spectacle that Griffith tells for the first time accurately and vividly the true story of the Ku Klux Klan.

Waco (Texas) Times Herald 3/1

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Climaxes roll crest upon crest like ocean waves in a storm in "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Auditorium tonight for three performances, "Sherman's March to the Sea," "The Battle of Petersburg," the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, and the mad dashes of the Ku Klux Klansmen are only a few of the giant crests amid the 5000 waves of thrills.

As illustrative of the methods of D. W. Griffith, the producer of this mighty spectacle of civil war and reconstruction days, a few words may be said of the staging of the battle of Petersburg. Griffith drilled his regiments, numbering 18,000 men, as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith took advantage of this fortunate fact to use the tower as his field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand he installed a modern telephone switchboard. From it ran ten wires to ten corners of the field. These wires were placed in conduits underground, so that the men and horses participating in the battle should not get their feet entangled in the steel threads.

When everything was ready for the camera, Griffith took his place in the tower. His eyes sweeping the whole field, he telephoned instructions every minute to his sub-directors. They obeyed him as quickly and unquestioning as do the soldiers of Joffre or Von Kluck. The result will astound audiences as they have audiences everywhere else.

AMUSEMENTS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

No other industry in the same given time ever grew as rapidly in America as the business enterprises that are commonly classified as motion picture industries. In capital invested and financial returns from those inventions the moving picture is now the fifth greatest combination in America.

The thing began as a five cent enterprise. In 10 years' time it has steadily grown until today great institutions all over the land are devoted to the manufacture of moving pictures. Millions are invested in some of the finest theaters in the world. Hundreds of thousands find employment in the different branches of the work. Even high finance has taken notice of the once lowly "movie" and films are now a common stock for dealings on the great exchanges of the country. The one man who has done more than all others to dignify the new form of art is David Wark Griffith, whose tireless energy and art are responsible for the first two dollar moving picture "The Birth of a Nation." It is estimated that before this great production has exhausted its earning capacity it will be seen by 10,000,000 people in America. Later on it will exceed these figures in the other countries of the world. It is conservatively estimated the big attraction will ultimately earn over $8,000,000. Not a bad income on an original investment of $500,000. This prospect stamps "The Birth of a Naton" the greatest piece of theatrical property the current century has brought forth if not the greatest winner of all ages.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen here again at the Academy of Music for one week beginning Monday, matinee, March 6. There will be matinees every afternoon at 3 o'clock and the night performances will begin promptly at 8:30. Seats will go on sale Friday morning at the theater box-office.

Charlotte (N.C.) Observer 3/1

Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Charlotte, one entire week beginning Monday matinee March 6th. Daily matinees.

Mobile (Ala) Register 3/1

The score of "The Birth of a Nation" now at the Star theater, which is known as the first significant accompaniment written for a photodrama, includes many of the finest compositions extant as well as popular plantation ditties of antebellum days. In addition to the original music supplied by the eminent composer, Joseph Carl Breil, one hears "Comin' Thro' the Rye," "Bonnie Blue Flag," "Dixie," "My Maryland," excerpts from Suppe's "Light Cavalry Overture," Weber's "Der Freischutz Overture," Bellini's "Norma Overture," Greig's "Peer Gynt," suite in "The Hall of the Mountain King," Mozart's mass in C and many others. Theatergoers who cannot arrange to view this spectacle week days should remember it will be shown twice daily next Sunday.

Memphis (Tenn) Scimitar 3/1

TEMPLE THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music, will play the Temple theatre next Monday and Tuesday nights and Tuesday afternoon.

This is the great offering that opened a new era in the theatres of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, and Los Angeles, where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many, many months. Despite great opposition the play has never been suppressed, but has met the approval of censor boards, judges, municipal authorities, publicists, editors and clergymen everywhere. It is pleasing to be able to note the fact that a metropolitan production of the finest quality and elaboration will be shown here.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theatre, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the secnod half of the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northener, Elsie Stoneman, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cam- and that of the Unionist captain, eron the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story.

But the great out of doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousand human actors and 3,000 thousands of participants. Eighteen horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company of 50.

Knoxville (Tenn) News 3/1

At Staub's.

"Three little maids from school," eighteen, nineteen and twenty, are the heroines of "The Birth of a Nation" because their eyes register on that elusive strip of celluloid known as a film. Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper are the "Three Little Maids" It was David W. Griffith who discovered this talented trio. He first gave them a searching eye examination as carefully as an optician might do. After he had assured himself that their eyes would register he took up the for him easy task of teaching them to act. That part was more easy, for after all he did not want them to act but to be natural.

The important thing is that they got their big chance because their eyes registered. Why it is that some people's eyes "take" better than others cannot be explained. It is an elusive thing that the cinema camera requires of its subjects. Poets might rhapsodize over the most beautiful eyes in the world and yet those very eyes might not register on the screen. Many a prominent stage star has been a failure in pictures for this very reason. The camera is merciless. It has no respect for histrionic reputations. It has been said that for an actress to acquire the technique to play Juliet she must be so old that it is difficult for her to look the part. To be Juliet on the screen one must have youth. The camera will not stand for shams.

That is why Griffith makes his own stars in the three principal feminine roles in "The Birth of a Nation" he had to have youth. That is why he took Mae Marsh and Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper. They had youth and beauty and soul. Griffith did the rest. And so today the "Three Little Maids" are drawing salaries that sound fabulous—more than $100,000 in the aggregate.

Return engagement of three nights and three matinees at Staub's theatre, Knoxville, beginning Thursday, March 2nd.—Adv.

Star 3/1

WYSOR GRAND.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's mighty masterpiece, commences a return engagement at the Wysor Grand tomorrow night. There will be matinees Friday and Saturday at the last performance will be given Saturday night. This wonderful spectacle of the American military era is eminently suited to the present with the great war in the minds of all. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstandings; heroes fought over wide-stretching areas; the great all-loving heart of the President and the little men who after his death thwarted his far-seeing plans; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction—these through a succession of themes the warp out of which impinges as vividly in 1916 as 1861.

Never before has America's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on stage, screen, panorama or canvas. It is the highest patriotic entertainment ever staged and it inculcates the lesson of national solidarity with sledge hammer strokes. It is a powerful plea for patriotism. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent acting and perfect photography, the national appeal of the music and the marvelous of the mechanical effects combine to make an offering satisfactorily to all classes of the theatre-going public. The blending of history, romance and emotional power proves irresistible as the titanic events sweep in the form of a whirlwind. In [illegible], as specifically [illegible] in a [illegible] to

Nashville (Tenn) Banner

"BIRTH OF A NATION" RETURNS THURSDAY

Commencing tomorrow night will be the three days return engagement of D. W. Griffith's magnificent production, "The Birth of a Nation." There will be matinees Friday and Saturday and the engagement must positively end with Saturday night's performance. This will be the last engagement here this season.

While "The Birth of a Nation" is universally known as the first $2.00 picture it should be remembered that there were many good seats at 50 cents and $1 at all evening performances and that at the matinees the best seats are only $1.

The Ku Klux Klan, which forms such an interesting part of "The Birth of a Nation," was organized as a secret and social band in the state of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word Kuklos, meaning circle. The third word, Klan, was added by the members who were in many instances descended from the Scotch who settled in Virginia and the Carolinas. In subsequent years when the Klans went forth to put down the desperadoes who swarmed down from the North to grab everything in sight in the South the riders adopted the emblem of the firy cross which the Scotch Highlanders had long used as a call to battle in the early days of war in their native land.

"The Birth of A Nation."

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the Academy of Music for one entire week, beginning next Monday matinee, March 6th. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theatre at every performance.

Matinees will be given every afternoon throughout the engagement, starting at 3 o'clock. The night performances will begin promptly at 8:30. The advance seat sale begins on Friday morning at the theatre box office and already the interest displayed by the theatre goers of Charlotte and within a radius of 100 miles of this city indicate that all attendance records will be broken.

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever efface from memory the [illegible] ner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation [illegible] fied. The player and his mood be[illegible] the great figure in such cases. [illegible] the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight cost of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily with eight or ten performances a week and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in the figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's trysting we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In a drama the trees wave in the breeze and blades of grass damp with the dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

His Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

...ident Lincoln signing the call for volunteers. . . A thrilling scene ...e Birth of a Nation" at the Opera House week beginning Monday March 6th, matinees daily.

...SSASSINATION OF ...LNCOLN SHOWN IN "BIRTH OF NATION"

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Opera House all next week starting Monday matinee was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small, but interesting, detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington, April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the War President in of Lincoln signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious states. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of pardon. As this scene opens, the gaously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a middle-aged lady dressed in sombre black who is awaiting a hearing. She kneel to him, but he gently lifts her up and talks to her, reads the petition and signs the paper giving to her the life of her son. After the Appomattox surrender a leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the south for its rebellion, "I shall treat them as if they had never been rebels," is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the hand of John Booth's maniac act. That sudden and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the player of the great President, has been widely commended for the dignity, dignity and pathos of his characterization. Seats are now on sale.

Mae Marsh as the "Pet Sister," in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Auditorium tonight.

At Staub's.

It is long, says the poet, and outlasts empire or emperor. Occasionally, however, art ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the sceptre and remakes the world. This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at Staub's theatre for three nights and three matinees, starting this afternoon. "The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of civil war and reconstruction.

The story embraces beautiful romances of Northern and the Gray; Ben Cameron the Confederate and his northern sweetheart, Elsie Stoneman, Capt. Phil Stoneman, U. S. A., and Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie. Among the principals of the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Robert Harron, Wallace Reid, George Seigmann, Raoul Walsh, Mary Alden, Gaye, John Lynch.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, opens at engagement of three performances at the Temple theatre Monday night. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northener Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown. The great out of doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra and supplemented by part singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old wartime tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments," of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Spottiswoods Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch.

The Ku Klux Klan, which forms such an interesting part of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Star Theater, was organized as a secret and social band in the State of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The word Klan was added by the members who were in a large percentage descended from the Scotch who settled in old Virginia. Theatergoers who cannot arrange to view the spectacle week-days will be interested to know that it will be shown afternoon and evening this coming Sunday. Seats for these performances and next week's are now on sale.

WYSOR GRAND.

David W. Griffith, foremost of directors, is conceded to have established a new art with his celebrated production, "The Birth of a Nation," which will begin tonight a three days' return engagement at the Wysor Grand Theater. This realization of civil war and reconstruction days by means of motion picture, music and mechanical effects overshadows in its greatness all of the spectacles of the older stage art and has won the most extraordinary encomiums from the critics. It has been fiercely opposed by certain elements that did not like its true interpretation of American history but it has received the overwhelming endorsement of over five million people that have witnessed it. The battle scenes pictured in the civil war part of "The Birth of a Nation mark the supreme achievement of motion photography up to date. The intensely vivid skirmishes and hand-to-hand struggles are not only well planned but well acted. You actually see death in some faces as the men fall in close combat. But the most thrilling sight of all is that of the battles conducted on a big scale in vast stretches of field and valley. The impression made upon the spectator is that of viewing gigantic military movements from some great mountain. Other great historic scenes include skillful facsimiles of Lincoln's first call for volunteers; Lee's surrender to Grant; Sherman's march to the sea and President Lincoln's assassination in the crowded Ford's Theater, Washington. The second part of the spectacle is devoted to the Reconstruction days when the South uprose a second time and threw off the carpetbagger-negro tyranny. The Ku Klux Klan are the protagonists of this part of the story. Their wild rides, rescues of harried whites, and their snatching of victory from the jaws of defeat, are represented on a vast scale with thousands of men and horses and with the infinite spirit, dash for which Mr. Griffith's spectacular work is so remarkable.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING TO OPERA HOUSE

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the Opera House in the near future.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the Opera House at every performance.

A play within a play is a form of dramatic construction which has often been utilized by dramatists since the early days of the drama. Perhaps the earliest, at least the most notable utilization of this detail, so far as the English-speaking stage is concerned, is the player scene in Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

The most pretentious scene of this kind ever shown is pictured in David W. Griffith's drama, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Star for a limited engagement. Griffith's scene is the reproduction in historic and dramatic detail of Ford's theater, Washington, D. C., on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth. Though but an incident in the story of this spectacle, this scene is complete within itself. From a technical viewpoint, it is one of the most interesting achievements in the annals of the American stage.

In the language of motion pictures production, it is known as a "studio scene," and it is the largest interior set ever built for a motion picture story. To the last detail the scene is an exact reproduction of Ford's theater at the time of the tragedy.

Among other works consulted for historical facts was Nicolay and Hay's "Abraham Lincoln, a History." It will be recalled that the authors of this history were Lincoln's private secretaries during his term as President. Other interesting and necessary details were furnished by old prints, prompt books of the play, "Our American Cousin," the piece in which Laura Keene was appearing the fateful night; surviving actors of the cast of this comedy; and eye witnesses of the tragedy.

Eyes That Register on the Screen

"Three little maids from school" eighteen, nineteen and twenty—are the heroines of "The Birth of a Nation" because their eyes register that elusive strip of celluloid known as a film. Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper are the "Three Little Maids." It was David W. Griffith who discovered this talented trio. He first gave them a searching eye examination as carefully as an optician might do. After he had assured himself that their eyes would register he took up the task of teaching them to act. That part was more easy, for after all he did not want them to act but to be natural.

The important thing is that they got their big chance because their eyes registered. Why it is that some people's eyes "take" better than others cannot be explained. It is an elusive thing that the cinema camera requires of its subjects. Poets might rhapsodize over the most beautiful eyes in the world and yet those very eyes might not register on the screen. Many a prominent stage star has been a failure in pictures for this very reason. The camera is merciless. It has no respect for histrionic reputations. It has been said that for an actress to acquire the technique to play Juliet she must be so old that it is difficult for her to look the part. To be Juliet on the screen one must have youth. The camera will not stand for shams.

That is why Griffith makes his own stars. In the three principal feminine roles in "The Birth of a Nation" he had to have youth. That is why he took Mae Marsh and Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper. They had youth and beauty and soul. Griffith did the rest. And so today the "Three Little Maids" are drawing salaries that sound fabulous—more than $100,000 in the aggregate.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Academy of Music for one entire week beginning Monday, matinee, March 6th. During the engagement, matinees will be given every afternoon starting at 3 o'clock. The night performances will begin at 8:30 promptly. Seats for all performances go on sale tomorrow.

SIX

'BIRTH OF A NATION' ARRIVES IN CITY

Tonight will mark the beginning of the three days' return engagement at the Wysor Grand of David W. Griffith's world-circling triumph, "The Birth of a Nation." There will be matinees Friday and Saturday. This will be the last engagement here this season.

A member of the United States Senate recently said: "Anyone contemplating war should see this picture. I sincerely believe it will do more to deter people from engaging in war than anything written or spoken on the subject in years."

Never before has war in all its horror been pictorialized so vividly. Sherman's devastating march to the sea, the capture and burning of Atlanta and the battle of Petersburg are shown with the vividness of reality. The whole period of the civil war is luminously recreated. Then follows the baneful period of reconstruction when the ex-slaves, carpetbaggers and scalawags combined to bring sorrow and suffering to the Southland. Running through this wondrous historical spectacle are two romantic love stories of surpassing heart interest.

In the cast are Henry B. Walthall as the gallant "Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as the Cameron Sisters; Lillian Gish, as Elsie Stoneman, and Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as her brothers; Spottiswoode Aiken, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Wallace Reid, George Seigmann and many others.

One of the most delightful features of the entertainment is the symphony orchestra of thirty picked musicians.

The Ku Klux Klan which forms such an interesting part of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Star theater, was organized as a secret and social band in the state of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The inception of this famous and historic band, its mission and what it accomplished, the rehabilitation of ... shown in the reconstruction ... the Griffith drama.

...e and Grant at Appomattox, "Birth of a Nation," Auditorium today matinee and night.

The Birth of a Nation.

Cheers roll crest upon crest like ocean waves in a storm in "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Auditorium today matinee and night. "Sherman's March to the Sea," "The Battle of Petersburg," the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomatox, the assassination of Lincoln and the mad dashes of the Ku Klux Klansmen are only a few of the giant crests amid the 5000 waves of thrills.

As illustrative of the methods of D. W. Griffith, the producer of this mighty spectacle of civil war and reconstruction days, a few words may be said of the staging of the battle of Petersburg. Griffith drilled his regiments, numbering 18,000 men, as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith took advantage of this fortunate fact to use the tower as his field headquarters. From its lofty eminence he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand he installed a modern telephone switchboard. From it ran ten wires to ten corners of the field. These wires were placed in conduits underground, so that the men and horses taking part in the battle would not get their feet entangled in the steel threads.

When everything was ready for the camera, Griffith took his place in the tower. His eyes sweeping the whole field, he telephoned instructions every minute to his sub-directors. They obeyed his as quickly and unquestioning as do the soldiers of Joffre or Von Kluck. The result will astound audiences as they have audiences every-

D. W. Griffith, the man that created "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Charlotte, one solid week beginning Monday matinee, March 6th. Matinees daily.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Playgoers of Charlotte and nearby towns who are planning to see "The Birth of a Nation," which is booked for a return engagement in this city for one entire week beginning next Monday, matinee, March 6 should bear in mind that the advance sale will be conducted at the theater box-office beginning tomorrow morning.

Expecting an unusual rush Manager John L. Crovo, has arranged to keep the box-office open from 10 a. m. until 6 p. m. each day, and seats for all performances will be placed on sale at the same time.

During the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," matinees will be given every afternoon beginning at 3 o'clock and the night performances will start promptly at 8:30.

"The Birth of a Nation" is breaking theatrical records everywhere and it is one of the most important attractions that has ever been seen in the South. The return engagements are atracting larger crowds in every city that has been favored with return dates and judging from the interest being shown here, Charlotte will be certain to rank favorably with Richmond, Norfolk, Atlanta, Birmingham and other metropolitan cities.

It is expected that "The Birth of a Nation" will attract close to 10,000 visitors to this city. Special trains have been secured to carry the big crowds that are coming from Rock Hill, Chester, Lancaster, York, Gastonia, Monroe, Wadesboro, Concord and Salisbury and other towns within a radius of 100 miles of Charlotte.

Mail-orders for seats from out of town will be accepted and filled when accompanied by money-orders payable to Mr. John L. Crovo, manager, Academy of Music Charlotte.

Charlotte (N.C.) News 3/2

...g battle scene in D. W. Griffith's masterpiece "The Birth of a Nation" Academy of Music, Charlotte, one ... beginning Monday matinee March 6th. Matinees every day.

MARCH ... 1916

NEW BRUNSWICK TIMES

LINCOLN PICTURED IN BIRTH OF NATION

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Opera House all next week starting Monday matinee was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small, but interesting, detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington, April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the War President is of Lincoln signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious states. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appomattox surrender the leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the South for its rebellion, "I shall treat them as if they had never been away," is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great President, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization. Seats are now on sale.

Daylorhyles Times 3/2

BIRTH OF NATION HERE MAR. 10-11

Twelve Thousand Feet of Film Tell Romantic Story of War Between the States

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the New Opera House, March 10, and 11, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly 3 hours, Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism while the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the War between the States and the Reconstruction of the Southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Chas. Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a Brigadier General of the Confederate Army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly directions made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama after panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes o the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scens of splendor

Press 3/12

THE TAYLOR

The Sentimental Sentry In "Birth Of A Nation" Opera House 10-11

A great deal of film comedy is horse play, but "David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the Hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire' 'order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the naughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles away look.

Paul LeBlanc, is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and plays comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt, before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to apepar as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habliments to which they are unaccustomed.

3/12 (Ny)

SARANAC LAKE NEWS

RAY BROOK

"Birth of a Nation" Presented at Ray Brook San.

"The Birth of a Nation," that wonderful photo-play and drama, which is probably the most talked of play of its kind, was presented through the courtesy of M. D. W. Griffith, its producer, at Ray Brook Sanatorium to an unusually large audience on Tuesday evening. The play started at 7:45 P. M., and continued until 11:15 P. M., 12 reels being shown. This Griffith masterpiece besides being educational, is highly interesting and entertaining. It is a complete pictorial story of some of the most momentous years in the history of the United States— a story that presents the principal events before, and during the Civil War, and also during the reconstruction period, in a way impossible to the written story. To appreciate its magnitude it must be seen and to see it is to become one of its many millions of admirers.

It is without question one of the biggest, and most inspiring patriotic entertainments ever devised. That Mr. Griffith spared no expense to realize his ambition, one can judge from the fact that in order to correctly show the assassination of President Lincoln he reconstructed in minute detail the interior of Ford's Theatre, Washington. Another costly replica, historically correct, is the Assembly Chamber of the South Carolina Legislature, with that body in session.

Mr. Woods, the chief electrician of the Griffith concern, traveled to Ray Brook in charge of the production. In introducing the "Birth of a Nation," Mr. Woods gave a slight synopsis of the story on which the play is based, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, also a few statistics of the tremendous cost, time, and effort it took to produce this wonderful, soul-stirring play. Ray Brook in fact deem it a great honor in seeing this play, as Mr. Woods in part said that this play has only been shown in private five times, including its presentation before the President of the United States at the White House, the Press Club in New York, the Methodist Convention of Ministers in Pennsylvania, before the Saint Vincent De Paul's Society at Brooklyn, N. Y., and at the Sanatorium at Ray Brook. This being its last time that it ever will be shown in private. The film is then to be shipped to England, to be shown in public.

It seemed that every house in the neighborhood contributed its quota to the audience, the hall being crowded. The excellence of the play was well demonstrated by the fixed attention the audience gave to the picture during the long session of three and a half hours.

There was no doubt judging from the remarks heard after the performance, regarding the appreciation felt by all who saw it, of the magnaminity of Mr. D. W. Griffith.

Among those present were the Board of Trustees of the Sanatorium.

3/3

AUSTIN AMERICAN:

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle which returns to the Hancock Opera House next Wednesday afternoon for four performances, is the latest and most imposing theatrical production in the history of the American stage, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music [illegible] the absence of speech, whilst the story of the screen unfolds in [illegible] of film the thrilling romance of the war between the States, [illegible] reconstruction of the South. [illegible] idea of its magnitude may be [illegible] from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3000 horses took part, and that the staging of this great outdoor [illegible] cost $500,000.

Austin Texas American 3/3

"The Birth of a Nation."

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to, the unique offering at the Temple Theater next Monday and Tuesday nights and Tuesday afternoon.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular states, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to the "Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great out of doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and forty-five minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil war and reconstruction days to the final real union of south and north in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the case are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Matinees will be given every afternoon at 3 o'clock and the night performances will start promptly at 8:30. Seats are now selling at the theatre box office for all performances.

Saranac Lake (N.Y.) Adirondack Press 3/3

Famous Film Drama at Ray Brook.

About 400 patients, employes and staff members saw "The Birth of a Nation," the greatest film drama ever produced in America, here Tuesday night. The occasion was a private exhibition of the film, given by courtesy of D. W. Griffith, the producer, following an appeal made to him by Mr. Benjamin Nabel, chairman of the local entertainment committee.

The showing of "The Birth of a Nation" marks an epoch in entertaining features at Ray Brook. The motion drama which has stirred to enthusiasm the most sophisticated audiences throughout the country, produced a similar effect here. Almost every human emotion is portrayed somewhere or other as the picture unrolls, from the biggest national psychology to the littlest whim of a petulant girl; from the lowest depths of ruthless villiany to the utmost grandeur of patriotic ideal.

Present to enjoy the picture were members of the hospital board of managers, and a few Saranac Lake business men who are advertisers on the Ray Brook picture screen. The institution is under deep obligation to Mr. Griffith for the presentation of his wonderful film here, and to Mr. Nabel for his initiative in placing the matter before Mr. Griffith. This is the fifth private presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," the first having been for President Wilson. Announcement was made Tuesday night that there will be no more private presentations anywhere.

Saranac Lake (N.Y.) News

MARCH 2, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SHOWN AT RAY BROOK

State Hospital Patients See Big Griffith Film on Tuesday Evening Last

The patients at the State Hospital at Ray Brook, with about a dozen invited guests from Saranac Lake, saw the big Griffith film, "The Birth of a Nation" on Tuesday night.

Except for the Ray Brook performance, the film, said to be the biggest and most costly ever produced, has never been shown outside the larger cities. The twelve reels lasted from eight to after eleven o'clock.

Knoxville (Tenn) Sentinel 3/3

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" UPON SCREEN AT STAUB'S

Return Engagement of This Monderful Picture of Civil War Period.

"The Birth of A Nation," D. W. Griffith's realistic and speculatar photoplay is at Staub's theater for three days. The acting, the settings, and the equipment displayed in this wonderful production make it by far the greatest marvel of the film world. The audience Thursday night alternately swayed from laughter to tears. Applause was unrestrained at the exciting moments of the thrilling play, and the whole audience seemed in sympathy with the shadow actors upon the screen. "The Birth of a Nation" is a remarkable portraiture of the metamorphosis of the old south. The days before the war are delightfully and realistically pictured. The Cameron home and its surroundings in Piedmont Carolina seems to be lifted from life, so true is it in every detail to the type which it represented. The whole play is based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and follows the dramatic incidents of the novel with remarkable fidelity.

The story is one of which every American has a right to be proud. The story of an unconquerable people who fought against odds to build up a nation, and who suffered much in the building. The Ku Klux Klan, the invisible empire which was a factor in the south during the reconstruction days, is pictured in all its mystic strength. Two delightful love stories are interwoven until they become a part of the plot itself.

The historical incidents portrayed are correct. The assassination of Abraham Lincoln is one of the ponts of highest intensity in the whole play, and its setting is superb. The interior of Ford's theater in Washington was reproduced for the play. All in all "The Birth of a Nation" is the greatest story of the great tragedy of the sixties and the pictures does full justice to its theme. It came to Knoxville for matinee and night performances, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

"The Birth of a Nation" Here All Next Week—Will Attract Thousands of Visitors.

Many of the crtics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Academy of Music for one entire week beginning Monday, matinee, March 6th.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular states, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great out-of-doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and forty-five minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through civil war and reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the case are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henaberry, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Matinees will be given every afternoon at 3 o'clock and the night performances will start promptly at 8:30. Seats are now selling at the theatre box office for all performances.

Chattanooga Times 3/3

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

It is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart of one man who compassed within himself the resources of the [illegible] experience, breadth and [illegible] Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" [illegible]

New Brunswick N.J. Home News

EFFECTIVE SCENE IN "BIRTH OF NATION" IS CLEVERLY PLAYED

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Opera House all next week, with a matinee every day, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" [illegible] Congress in Lincoln's time, [illegible] a guitar to solace a wounded [illegible] officer in the Patents Office hospital.

"I haven't seen you long,' says the little Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron," but I have carried you about with me for [illegible] and years." He displays a [illegible] daguerreotype of the girl, [illegible] she had given her brother, [illegible] fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid [illegible] in the second half of the [illegible] of which shifts to South [illegible] they are sweethearts [illegible] time of the second Southern [illegible] To portray the fine [illegible] womanhood, throughout the whole troublesome era, is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photograceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm —at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil War and Reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of Reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

MARCH 3, 1916. CHARLOTTE DAILY OBSERVER

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

HOW do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and hold on to it till you are middle aged, then marry and rear a family, releasing fame from your grasp and finding joy in a quiet, secluded country home?

Not so bad, you say, for some bookish individual who isn't attractive anyhow and hasn't a chance at the sweets of life? But utterly preposterous for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life program for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics; not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology;" not even a suffragette; but a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly in "The Birth of a Nation," running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her pursuer!

Too Busy For Love Affairs.

Yes, sir. Little Mae Marsh, the blue eyed, the golden haired, the adored, the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "up stage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no fur topped boots, no lip rouge.

If that time old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument, for at the first glance and after a minute's conversation any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great civil war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now, when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dignity that just escapes being primness and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same unwilling repression and expression of emotion that make the girl of the [illegible] so adorable and that go so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that have characterized any play on stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been, "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now give me sensible togs, lots of work and a typewriter to compose plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage, or, rather, it would have taken courage, had I been of a wavering disposition."

She is still frail looking and still slender, but graceful as a fawn and with some of that pretty creature's characteristics—the quick intelligence, quick movements, alertness, and when she is off guard, when she forgets she is being interviewed, when she is not constantly reminded by the whispers and stares of passersby that she is a heroine of the films, she is entirely natural. Apropos of that, she says it is on the screen that she is really her most natural self and that it is in conventional life she finds herself acting.

"I suppose," she says, "that sort of subconsciously I have the idea that I must show a difference in my manner, but I have done so much of the picture work and so thrown myself heart and soul into it that it is really difficult for me to separate myself from it."

"But"—with the little quizzical look that suggests laughter and tears and other things at the same time—"I suppose it's that way with every one who makes any sort of success out of what he undertakes, though my work is really nothing more than play to me, because I am so enthusiastic about it. I shall be perfectly content to be a moving picture actress all my days; that is"—hastily—"provided I can continue to live in California.

"I wrote Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working, I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty, and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

"I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully, only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake. I was at school at the Sacred Heart Convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried: 'Oh, don't! Don't, sister! I won't do it again.' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to get us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures, and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Appleple Mary in 'Home, Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and the Law,' or 'Tolerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother at the same age I am now, twenty. It is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr. Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is a most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children."

The conversation shifted to faith, finally to faith in prayer.

"When I have prayed for anything I have always gotten it"—again Mae Marsh was seriousness itself—"provided I was good."

Mae Ma
She quir

H

hold on to then mar ing fame
ty in a c
Not so ish indivi how and of life?
anybody beauty charm.
Very guesses life progr
a female not a writ tween Mor ogy;" not very lovely of Mae Mar fans—the ly in "The
for her lif plunging o ner!
Too
Yes, air.
ered, the the flatter whom Da hardt of more elec feet of fi thousand stage" m fur topped
If that sonality discussion are lucky they are end of the glance and ation a this gir ma of Grif dre in tha within hal

...W. 3/4

...of a Nation."

...pectacle, "The Birth ...W. Griffith utilized a ...re for the first time ...nship to the enlarge- ...ed themes. It is the ...fitted to the screen ...synchronization was ...pted to this story that ...ery important part of ...of narrative. The ...nged by Joseph Carl ...nt months with Mr. ...e was making the pic- ...ht his thematic ideas ...nne that Griffith would ...was working out his big ...It is perhaps the most ...ever devised but is a ...are in the production. ...s Nation" will be seen ...Academy of Music for ...k beginning next Mon- ...March 6. Throughout ...t matinees will be giv- ...noon starting at 3 ...night performances will

St. Louis (Mo) Times 3/4

"Birth of a Nation" Tomorrow at Olympic.

At the Olympic Theater tomorrow afternoon David W. Griffith's spectacular triumph, "The Birth of a Nation," returns for a limited engagement. This remarkable picture has converted "one-night stands" into week stands and "week stands" into sensational "runs." It played here 13 weeks this year. There are too many scenes and incidents for the human eye and mind to fully grasp the first time and patrons return for more. The story is absorbing in its interest, the spectacular scenes are wonderful.

David Griffith supplies the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: A new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects. He used half a great State for his locale; 150 years of American history as his subject; 18,000 people as his actors; 3000 riders and steeds as his cavalry; 5000 scenes instead of a few scenes or a few hundred. He has produced an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's soul," the times of Civil War and Reconstruction.

THE GREAT EMANCIPATOR AS SHOWN IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION-STAR

Buffalo - Enquirer 3/4

Of particular interest to play-goers is the Star theater's announcement that commencing tomorrow, "The Birth of a Nation" will give twice daily, performances, Sundays as well as week days. The local engagement of this remarkable spectacle will positively close March 18th, so that there remains but two more weeks of opportunity to view this pictorial masterpiece. After the closing of the play it will not be shown here again this season. "The Birth of a Nation" is never presented at any but first-class theaters or at prices less than is customarily charged for leading theatrical attractions.

So far crowded houses have greeted every performance of this photographic play here and, judging from the splendid advance sale, the remainder of the engagement will help credit to the unusually successful record of this piece another engagement of wonderful attendance.

The success of this remarkable pictorial representation of our nation's birth reads like a romance. It has been welcomed in every section of this country and Canada, crowded houses have featured its every appearance and all classes of people have become its patrons and enthusiastic admirers. No theatrical production of the present century has given as many consecutive performances or played to as many people in ten months' time as has "The Birth of a Nation."

In every city where it has appeared, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Boston, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and St. Louis, in particular, it has established, as it has in the metropolis, a new record for number of performances given and length of stay. In the world of the theater it has made history and demonstrated that it is more popular than the greatest English speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama.

Buffalo N.Y. 2 3/4

Star—"The Birth of a Nation."

Of particular interest to playgoers is the Star theater's announcement that commencing tomorrow, "The Birth of a Nation," will give twice daily, performances, Sunday as well as week days. The local engagement of this remarkable spectacle will positively close March 18th, so that there remains but two more weeks of opportunity to view this pictorial masterpiece. After the closing of the play it will not be shown here again this season. "The Birth of a Nation" is never presented at any but first-class theaters or at prices less than is customarily charged for leading theatrical attractions.

So far crowded houses have greeted every performance of this photographic play here and, judging from the splendid advance sale, the remainder of the engagement will help credit to the unusually successful record of this piece another engagement of wonderful attendance.

The success of this remarkable pictorial representation of our nation's birth reads like a romance. It has been welcomed in every section of this country, and Canada, crowded houses have featured its appearance, and all classes of people have become its patrons and enthusiastic admirers. No theatrical production of the present century has given as many consecutive performances or played to as many people in ten month's time as has "The Birth of a Nation."

In every city where it has appeared, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Boston, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and St. Louis, in particular, it has established, as it has in the metropolis, a new record for number of performances given and length of stay. In the world of the theater it has made history and demonstrated that it is more popular than the greatest English speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama.

BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF GIGANTIC SPECTACLE AT OPERA HOUSE NEXT WEEK

MIRIAM COOPER.

Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Charlotte, one week beginning Monday matinee, March 6th. Matinees daily.

Premier performance, March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also several weeks in Los Angeles and eight weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art, suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 in actual production expenses, and took eight months to produce. Story covers in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to destroy. In the picture Sherman's [illegible] to the sea. Lee and Grant, [illegible] Appomattox; Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the [illegible] details for the [illegible] Reconstruction pio- [illegible] South Carolina [illegible] series of wild [illegible] commandeer- [illegible] cost $10,000. [illegible] theat- [illegible] be han- died and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty-foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every board of censors with one exception in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, Governors of States, Judges, Publicists, Diplomats, Educators and Clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatrical entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of History's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation re-born" as the result of war between the states and reconstruction. "The Birth of a Nation" is at the Opera House all next week, with a matinee every day.

AMUSEMENTS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music, will play the Academy of Music for one week, beginning next Monday. This is the great offering that opened a new era in the theaters of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many, many months. Despite great opposition the play has never been suppressed, but has met the approval of censor boards, judges, municipal authorities, publicists, editors and clergymen everywhere. It is pleasing to be able to note the fact that a metropolitan production of the finest quality and elaboration will be shown here.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the War Between the States. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theater, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Paul Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrument music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company of 50.

The engagement opens with a matinee Monday afternoon and matinees will be given each day, starting at 3 o'clock. The night performance will begin promptly at 8:30. Seats are now selling fast at the theater box office for all performances.

3/4

Star Theatre.

Of particular interest to playgoers is the Star Theatre's announcement that commencing tomorrow, The Birth of a Nation, will give twice daily, performances, Sundays as well as week days. The local engagement of this remarkable spectacle will positively close March 18th, so that there remains but two more weeks of opportunity to view this pictorial masterpiece. After the closing of the play it will not be shown here again this season. The Birth of a Nation is never presented at any but first class theatres or at prices less than is customarily charged for leading theatrical attractions. So far crowded houses have greeted every performance of this photographic play here and, judging from the splendid advance sale, the remainder of the engagement will help credit to the unusually successful record of this piece another engagement of wonderful attendance. The success of this remarkable pictorial representation of our nation's birth reads like a romance. It has been welcomed in every section of this country, and Canada, crowded houses have featured its every appearance and all classes of people have become its patrons and enthusiastic admirers. No theatrical production of the present century has given as many consecutive performances or played to as many people in ten month's time as has The Birth of a Nation. In every city where it has appeared, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Boston, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and St. Louis, in particular, it has established, as it has in the metropolis, a new record for number of performances given and length of stay. In the world of the theatre it has made history and demonstrated that it is more popular than the greatest English speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama.

THE EVENING REVIEW, BAYONNE, N. J.

Riches and Fame First. Then She'll Get Married

MARCH 4, 1916
AUSTIN AMERICAN

"The Birth of a Nation."

The spirit of the South, as interpreted by a Southerner, runs through "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Hancock Opera House next Wednesday afternoon for four performances—two matinees and two nights. D. W. Griffith, creator of this mighty spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction days, is a native of Kentucky, the son of J. W. Griffith of the Confederate Army.

The producing of "The Birth of a Nation" was a labor of love with Griffith. As a lad he drank in greedily the Civil War narrative as it fell from the lips of his father and other bronzed veterans who called at his father's house to talk over the thrilling days of battle. As he grew up there came the poet's vision of the entire struggle. In the prime of manhood awoke the genius to make the vision a reality and "The Birth of a Nation" resulted.

Mar 4
EVANSVILLE JOURNAL-NEWS

Wells-Bijou.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the Wells-Bijou Sunday, March 12, beginning a four days' engagement. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theater at every performance.

Mar 4

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

HOW do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and hold on to it till you are middle aged, then marry and rear a family, releasing fame from your grasp and finding joy in a quiet, secluded country home?

Not so bad, you say, for some bookish individual who isn't attractive anyhow and hasn't a chance at the sweets of life? But utterly preposterous for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life program for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics; not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology;" not even a suffragette; but a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly in "The Birth of a Nation," running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her pursuer!

Too Busy For Love Affairs.

Yes, sir. Little Mae Marsh, the blue eyed, the golden haired, the adored, the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "up stage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no fur topped boots, no lip rouge.

If that time old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument, for at the first glance and after a minute's conversation any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great civil war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now, when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dignity that just escapes being primness and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same alternating repression and expression of emotion that make the girl of the screen so adorable and that go so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed delinquents that have characterized any play in stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quite and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers with all depending the qualities in hers if that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to save all your energy when you're young and work that will leave you free at thirty to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Experts Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother, don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Hamlin would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been, "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything as hard as I could. When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered.

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tea parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll be myself for a change and attend them. But for now give me something lots of work and a big character to impersonate plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, and so naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the distinctive process of many girls who are set to earn their living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it almost steadily, doing nothing else. Or, rather, it would have been strange, had I been of a waver and doubter.

"Since I [illegible] children, but [illegible] I am and with [illegible] charm [illegible] quite [illegible] and [illegible] she is [illegible] I [illegible] by the whispers and [illegible] of the [illegible] the [illegible] on the [illegible] that [illegible] her [illegible] conventional [illegible] she finds herself [illegible]

"I [illegible] other sort of [illegible] I have the idea that I [illegible] a different [illegible] manner, but I have [illegible] of the picture [illegible] and [illegible] myself heart and [illegible] that it is really difficult for [illegible] to [illegible] it."

[illegible] the pride [illegible] look [illegible] laughter and tears and [illegible] at the same time—"I suppose it's that way with every one who takes any sort of [illegible] out of what he makes, though my work is really nothing more than play to me. [illegible] I am so enthusiastic about it. I shall be perfectly content to be a moving picture actress all my days; that is, hardly—provided I can continue to live in California.

"I wrote Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts will become a still greater one, primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into a coldy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary with not working, I spent it. I had some lilies and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. An automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I saw the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining trade. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirit of twenty, and her vacation was as much of huge importance to her, as big events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

"I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was a conductor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully, only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake. I was at school at the Sacred Heart Convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried: 'Oh, don't! Don't, sister! I won't do it again.' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to get us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures, and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Appleple Mary in 'Home, Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and the Law,' or 'Tolerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother at the same age I am now, twenty. It is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr. Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is a most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children."

The conversation shifted to faith, finally to faith in prayer.

"When I have prayed for anything I have always gotten it"—again Mae Marsh was seriousness itself—"when I was good."

Cincinnati Post 3/5

St. Louis (Mo.) Times 3/5

AT THE STAR.

The Birth of a Nation Continues Its Triumphant Career.

For the first time this season the Star theater today opens its doors for a theatrical performance. The unusual success of The Birth of a Nation at the Star has created a demand for Sunday performances and so two have been arranged for today, and two for next Sunday. Playgoers who have yet to view this famous pictorial spectacle should note the fact that the engagement here will terminate in two weeks and that after March 18th it will not be seen again in Buffalo. Despite contrary statements this historical drama is never shown at prices less than are customarily charged for leading theatrical attractions.

Judging from the crowds that have attended every performance so far, the local engagement will add another record to the credit of this drama.

The success of the Griffith spectacle is more than national, for in Canada its patronage has reached amazing figures. In every city where it has appeared, the small cities as well as the large, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Saint Louis, Pittsburgh and Los Angeles, it has established, as it has in New York city, a record for the number of consecutive performances given and length of stay. In the theatrical world it has mad history.

Olympic Theater.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's epic of American history, will return to the Olympic Theater for a limited engagement beginning with the matinee this afternoon, with performances twice daily thereafter.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the States. In the second half is presented a story of reconstruction days.

Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku-Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. There are 5,000 distinct scenes. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This music is played by a large orchestra carried on tour.

Mississippi-Blätter, Sonntag, den 5. März

Olympic.

Heute abend kehrt das große Filmdrama „The Birth of a Nation" nach dem Olympic-Theater zurück, um vier Wochen dort zu verbleiben. Obwohl das Stück hier schon 200mal aufgeführt worden ist, hat sich offenbar die Nachfrage noch nicht erschöpft. Es ist aber auch ein großartiges Schauspiel. Nie zuvor hat man solche Masseneffekte gesehen, wie die hier auf die Leinwand geworfenen Schlacht- und Straßenszenen.

Bekanntlich liegt dem Werke der bekannte Roman „The Clansman" zugrunde, worin geschildert wird, wie der Ku-Klux-Klan den Süden von der unter den „Carpetbaggers" eingeführten Negerherrschaft befreite. Griffith aber hat in „The Birth of a Nation" auch die Zeiten vor dem Kriege geschildert, sowie einige der markantesten Episoden aus diesem selbst. Die Aussöhnung zwischen Nord und Süd, die Neugeburt der Nation, bildet den Abschluß des Ganzen. Was aber „The Birth of a Nation" besonders interessant macht, ist die historisch getreue Wiedergabe der darin erscheinenden historischen Figuren.

Unser heutiges Bild zeigt die beiden großen Heerführer des Nordens bezw. des Südens, wie sie in dem Stücke erscheinen. Die von einem 30 Instrumente starken Orchester ausgeführte Begleitung trägt nicht wenig zu dem stimmungsvollen Eindruck des Ganzen bei. Täglich finden zwei Vorstellungen statt.

[American] 3/5 Post

AUSTIN

'Birth of a Nation,' Showing at the Hancock This Week, Cost $500,000 to Produce

Facts about "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle of Civil War and reconstruction days, which returns to the Hancock Opera House Wednesday afternoon for four performances, speak more eloquently of its merits than any words can do. Based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," it tells the true story of the South that culminated in the formation and the chivalrous deeds of the "invisible empire," far more vividly and eloquently than the written or the spoken word can ever tell it. Throughout it all there runs a double thread of the most beautiful romance ever conceived by an American novelist or dramatist.

"The Birth of a Nation" contains 5000 scenes, presents 18,000 actors and 3000 horses, cost $500,000 and eight months of hard labor to produce and presents during the two hours and forty-five minutes of its exhibition a complete and vivid summary of the most intensely interesting period of American history.

Glimpses of some of the greatest battles of the Civil War are seen, culminating finally in a detailed view of the battle of Petersburg, which was, perhaps, the most picturesque of the war, not even excepting Gettysburg. In the staging of this battle hundreds of bombs, some costing as much as $40 each, were exploded and the effect, accompanied by a realistic roar of cannon, is described as terrific.

Atlanta is reproduced exactly as it was in 1864 and the storming of the famous old Southern city by General Sherman is one of the incidents of his memorable march to the sea, which Mr. Griffith has vividly visualized. The night photography for the storming of Atlanta and for the Petersburg battle was invented and perfected by Mr. Griffith at a cost of $5000.

Lee and Grant are shown at their memorable meeting at Appomattox, which put an end to the strife between the North and the South, which paved the way for the birth of a new and united Nation. The old Nation of Washington and Jefferson was little more than a league of sovereign States. The new Nation was destined to become strongly centralized and to take its place as the mightiest power on earth.

But even with the amicable adjustment of the difficulties between the armies of Lee and Grant the way for the new Nation was not smoothly paved. There was a mighty difficulty to be met in reconstructing a Union that had been so violently torn asunder. Lincoln's proposal was to readmit the seceding States at once on their old footing—or rather to act as though there had never been a severance. He was for the binding up of the wounds immediately.

Unfortunately, however, the hand of an assassin stilled the mightiest heart that ever beat in an American breast and the tragic night at Ford's Theater is reproduced by Mr. Griffith to the smallest detail. Enemies of the South obtained control in Congress. The carpetbaggers swarmed into a land that held out such splendid promise to crooked politicians. The result was an agony more terrible than war and led to the formation of the invisible empire. The terrific climax of "The Birth of a Nation" comes in the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans on their errands of vengeance and mercy. In the staging of these rides, an entire county of Southern California was commandeered for a day by Mr. Griffith at a cost of $10,000. More than twenty-five thousand yards of cloth were consumed in the making of the Ku Klux costumes.

Each of the 5000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" is accompanied by musical and sound effects, making the spoken word unnecessary. Indeed, more than one critic has said that spoken words would destroy the tenseness of the illusion. For the rendition of the musical score, which is said to be on the high plane of grand opera, a complete symphony orchestra is carried.

SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS

Birth of a Nation Plays Return Date

Facts about "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction days, which returns to the Grand Opera House for a week starting Monday night, March 13, speak more eloquently of its merits than any words can do. Based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," it tells the true story of the South that culminated in the formation and the chivalrous deeds of the "invisible empire" far more vividly and eloquently than the written or the spoken word can ever tell it. Throughout it all there runs a double thread of the most beautiful romance ever conceived by an American novelist or dramatist.

"The Birth of a Nation" contains 5,000 scenes, presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses, cost $500,000 and eight months of hard labor to produce, and presents during the 2 hours and 45 minutes of its exhibition a complete and vivid summary of the most intensely interesting period of American history.

Glimpses of some of the greatest battles of the Civil War are seen, culminating finally in a detailed view of the battle of Petersburg, which was, perhaps, the most picturesque of the war, not even excepting Gettysburg. In the staging of this battle, hundreds of bombs, some costing as much as $80 each, were exploded, and the effect, accompanied by a realistic roar of cannon, is described as terrific.

Atlanta is reproduced exactly as it was in 1864, and the storming of the famous old Southern city by General Sherman is one of the incidents of his memorable march to the sea which Mr. Griffith has vividly visualized. The night photography for the storming of Atlanta and for the Petersburg battle was invented and perfected by Mr. Griffith at a cost of $5,000.

Lee and Grant are shown at their memorable meeting at Appomattox, which put an end to the strife between the North and the South, which paved the way for the birth of a new and united Nation. The old Nation of Washington and Jefferson was little more than a league of sovereign States. The new Nation was destined to become strongly centralized and to take its place as the mightiest power on earth.

But even with the amicable adjustment of the difficulties between the armies of Lee and Grant, the way for the new Nation was not smoothly paved. There was a mighty difficulty to be met in reconstructing a union that had been so violently torn asunder. Lincoln's proposal was to readmit the seceding States at once on their old footing—or rather to act as though there had never been a severance. He was for the binding up of the wounds immediately.

Unfortunately, however, the hand of an assassin stilled the mightiest heart that ever beat in an American breast, and the tragic night at Ford's Theater is reproduced by Mr. Griffith to the smallest detail. Enemies of the South obtained control in Congress. The carpet-baggers swarmed into a land that held out such splendid promise to crooked politicians. The result was an agony more terrible than war, and led to the formation of "the invisible empire." The terrific climax of "The Birth of a Nation" comes in the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans on their errands of vengeance and mercy. In the staging of these rides, an entire county of Southern California was commandeered for a day by Mr. Griffith at a cost of $10,000. More than 25,000 yards of cloth were consumed in the making of the Ku Klux costumes.

Each of the 5,000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" is accompanied by musical and sound effects, making the spoken word unnecessary. Indeed, more than one critic has said that spoken words would destroy the tenseness of the illusion. For the rendition of the musical score, which is said to be on the high plane of grand opera, a complete symphony orchestra is carried.

BUFFALO COURIER, WEEK ENDING MARCH 5, 1916.

Great ballroom scene in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Star theater this week. The inserted picture is Miss Miriam Cooper, one of the charming women featured in the great spectacle.

STAR—"BIRTH OF A NATION."

For the first time this season the Star theater today opens its doors for a theatrical performance. The unusual success of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Star has created a demand for Sunday performances and so two have been arranged for today, and two for next Sunday. Playgoers who have yet to view this famous pictorial spectacle should note the fact that the engagement here will terminate in two weeks and that after March 18 it will not be seen again in Buffalo. Despite contrary statements this historical drama is never shown at any but first-class theaters or at prices less than what is customarily charged for leading theatrical attractions.

Judging from the crowds that have attended every performance so far, the local engagement bids fair to add another record engagement to the credit of this drama.

The success of the Griffith spectacle is more than national in scope for in Canada as wall as in this country, its patronage has reached the most amazing figures. No theatrical production of any country or century has given as many performances in ten months as "The Birth of a Nation" has, or has been seen by as many people. Without question it is the most widely discussed play of modern times. In every city where it has appeared, the small cities as well as the large ones such as Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Los Angeles, it has established, as it has in New York city, a new record for number of consecutive performances given and length of stay. Everywhere crowded houses feature its engagements. In the theatrical world it has made history and demonstrated the fact that it is more popular than the great English-speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama.

"Birth of a Nation" Coming.

A return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," the moving picture drama which scored such a tremendous success when first presented, is announced at the Grand for a week, beginning March 13. This mighty production by D. W. Griffith has commanded more attention probably than any screen drama so far filmed in the history of moving pictures. As the name implies, it is literally a chapter taken from the birth of the United States, the play being founded on Thomas Dixon's book, "The Clansman."

A feature which produced probably the greatest comment of all is a reproduction of the Battle of Gettysburg, filmed on a stage five miles broad. Another is the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, which is produced with a fidelity to history which makes it startlingly real. A third is the gathering of the Ku Klux Klans, the Southern secret organization which strove against carpet-bagger rule following the Civil War. Throughout the whole runs a romance of love and chivalry. The spectacle is rendered double realistic by thousands of sounds and electrical effects, especially devised for the production, and a musical score that is interpreted by a special symphony orchestra.

Walthall Who Takes Part of Hero in Birth of a Nation

Henry Walthall, Star of Film Play

St. Louis Times 3/5

SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS: SUNDAY MORNING, MARCH 5, 1916.

ONE OF DRAMATIC BIG SCENES IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION

The "Little Colonel" at Petersburg in the great spectacular picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand Opera House.

Charlotte N.C. News 3/5

"The Birth of A Nation" To Be Staged Here For One Entire Week Opening With Matinee Tomorrow

Theatregoers and movie fans of Charlotte and nearby towns are planning to turn out in great numbers to witness D. W. Griffith's remarkable photo drama "The Birth of a Nation" which will be seen here for one entire week at the Academy of Music opening with a matinee Monday afternoon. Throughout the Charlotte engagement matinees will be given every afternoon starting at 3 o'clock. The night performances beginning promptly at 8:30.

Special trains will be run to this city from Rock Hill, Chester, Lancaster, York and Kershaw to handle crowds that are coming to Charlotte. Concord, Salisbury, Mooresville, Davidson, Statesvill, Gastonia, Monroe, Wadesboro, Rockingham and other towns in this vicinity will send four or five hundred people each. It is expected that close to ten thousand visitors will be in Charlotte next week to attend the performances of "The Birth of a Nation."

When "The Birth of a Nation" was shown here last November the Charlotte News, under date of Tuesday Nov. 16th had the following review of the production.

Birth of a Nation was Stupendous.

Greatest photoplay of Old South, Civil War and Reconstruction, and most gripping and inspiring yet presented here.

"The Birth of a Nation," seen for the first time at the Academy of Music last night was the greatest presentation of one of the greatest framas in the South's history that has thus far been given to the public as a grand photoplay.

From the beginning of the photoplay showing Southern home-life till the last sweep of the Klu Klux Klan across the vista, the affair held interest, emotional, well-nigh overwhelming at times, and the presentation, lasting from 8:30 till 11:30 last night, was witnessed by a large house.

The great picture is based on the story in "The Clansman," and in the begining it is announced on the screen that the purpose is to destroy the desire for war by showing the horrors, and in this latter purpose the play was unparalleled, unless some great artist should be able to depict the European war and its horrors.

Among the notable pictures were the trench-fighting, part of this at night and the shelling of the opposing armies; the pictures of Lincoln; and the tragedy of Lincoln's death, the South's hardest blow.

Reconstruction.

But for real excitement, when the nerves tingle and the applause grows uprorious at times, let one choose the presentations of reconstruction scenes, and the reign of terror that threatened the whole South till the "Invisible Empire," of the Ku Klux Klan appeared on the scene, beginning with the conception of the idea to its fullest realization, when the mysterious riders saved women, children and a whole town from the dangers of a mob of negroes incited by the carpet-baggers.

Pictures are the Best.

Nothing approaching in extent and artistic preparation has prehaps ever been in this city. The pictures are

SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Evansville (Ind) Courier-News 3/5

"The Birth of a Nation" will play a return engagement here for four days, beginning Sunday matinee, March 12.

PRODUCING A PLAY ON A STAGE FIVE·MILES·LONG

AUTO FROM WHICH PICTURES OF THE ONRUSHING K KLUX RIDERS WERE TAKEN.

SCENE AFTER THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG.

MR. GRIFFITH DIRECTING ACTORS FROM TOP OF SIXTY FOOT TOWER.

D. W. Griffith's Great Idea and How He Worked Out Historically Accurate Battle Scenes With 18,000 Actors and 3,000 Horses

N observing officer of a moving picture corporation was watching rehearsals for a little film drama one morning seven years ago when a complication developed, and it was patent that, as arranged for, the idea, in the language of the studio, would not get over. One of the players in the company, a slender young leading man, went up to the producing director and said, "Why wouldn't it be done so and so?" indicating his plan.

The producing director nodded emphatically. "Right!" he said, and it was right. Whereupon the observing officer first mentioned turned to the actor, saying seriously, "Why don't you try producing, Griffith?"

"I wouldn't mind having a chance to work out a few little ideas," was the answer.

At the Liberty Theater, New York, during the last several months people were seven years of the stage—now in road companies, now in repertoire, all always had a little bit of a sore spot over that. I know a little bit more about stage management than I know. The short story writing was not extra profitable, and I came back to New York from the country and found the moving picture game growing.

He began writing moving picture scenarios then at $5 and $10 apiece, that was all right if you could turn out enough of them. The scenarios, however, in the physical aspects of them suggested as they need in those days, and the young man added moving picture acting to his other work. He went into the company of a corporation, the first one mentioned, studied the game as it was then, saw that it might be made an art and lobbied his idea until the officer listed him make the suggestion to the producing director, whereupon another era was born.

There is no doubt the young manager grew a little more ambitious about that time. The corporation for which he worked had not been particularly successful, although today it is worth millions, but there was something in it wise enough not to impose any rules or regulations on the new director.

In the generation further on there was a great grandfather in the Revolutionary war. Before that time there were Griffiths in Virginia.

After the war, of course, the Griffiths of Kentucky had, like many other families, mainly their memories to live on—memories and the prospects of a farm on the edge of the blue grass. The boy was born in that situation and received his education at the nearby country school.

The wonder year came to the boy at twenty. In the meantime he had always liked to act in the dialogues at school Friday afternoons and a little later when they gave the plays at the Literary Society. In one event also he went out into the world he graduated to Louisville and very promptly applied for a position with a modest little stock company which is now the very glorious Fenis [illegible] was was a day of a young girl with her ancient Italian guitar another hor to talking about details, "Sabotage and Democracy" a great cast, for I had [illegible] the world an [illegible] thousand [illegible] It was madness. He [illegible] you know it [illegible] he now that within the last few days I have been approached by a [illegible] which has asked me to do the same thing and they have not [illegible] heard not worry about a little [illegible] like Sherman or Sheridan if I need it."

By this time it is apparent Griffith had swung into his stride, and a year ago or a little more came "Judith of Bethulia" about Jewish people, where they built forty foot concrete walls, wide enough to have a battle on.

Then came "The Clansman." It seems that the chief problem after for, as Mr. Griffith was changed from one company to another, and according to reports he did so at a salary that would pay the President's yearly salary of $75,000 and more. He wouldn't talk about that. In any event he had not worked long [illegible] Jikson book handed [illegible] to him to read. He read it and lost interest in [illegible] the travail of the civil war.

"I saw a chance to tell the story of were professors of colleges, were asked to work out the correct historical data. There not merrilows with veterans of the civil war on most important points, recourse to maps and reports down at Washington and finally a patient county by county tour of Louisiana Mississippi, Alabama and North Carolina until Piedmont was discovered.

Then came the location of the battlefields, after which the veterans with their maps went forth to lay out a battlefield just as it was at Petersburg and just as it was in point out of the march of Sherman's army from Atlanta to the sea. Where approved territory was found the experts went to work upon it.

If a road wound this way, if there was a brook or a river or a house or a barn that road brook, house and barn were found or put in. If a town was needed along came an army with its corps of builders, and the town was put up just as some gray haired old man remembered it.

They remembered barrages and a town, two towns were put up in a day and one night, the [illegible] remembered the burning of a town by night, something must be done about that. [illegible]

[illegible] Petersburg, Atlanta, Mississippi, Alabama and North Carolina until Piedmont was discovered.

Then came the location of the battlefields, after which the veterans with their maps went forth to lay out a battlefield just as it was at Petersburg and just as it was in point out of the march of Sherman's army from Atlanta to the sea. Where approved territory was found the experts went to work upon it.

If a road wound this way, if there was a brook or a river or a house or a barn that road brook, house and barn were found or put in. If a town was needed along came an army with its corps of builders, and the town was put up just as some gray haired old man remembered it.

They remembered barrages and a town, two towns were put up in a day and one night, the [illegible] remembered the burning of a town by night, something must be done about that. [illegible]

Ford's Theatre Reproduced In Actual Size and Five Southern Towns Built and Burned For the Sake of a Moving Picture

that by the time he had finished his long term of study Mr. Griffith did not use a scrap of paper, a book or a memorandum, yet he had arranged it all in his mind.

The great multitude for the flight from Atlanta and the town scenes were not actually under employment longer than two weeks. Then it may be added that the expenses ran far up into the thousands every day.

"The only way we could handle them was by military discipline," said Mr. Griffith. "We laid out a camp for the whites and a camp for the blacks. We set up the commissaries. Then we divided our forces into sections, each section commanded by a captain, who had his staff under him. That is how the picture was worked out.

"Every section leader in the big battle scenes or the town scenes kept his men in hand and was ready, and to the best of a signal under telephone orders the action began. The air filled with smoke—the soldiers appeared as if in a real fight.

"Trains of panic stricken refugees wound over the hills in flight, and then they stopped.

"We used the greatest number in all the scenes where they appear without reference to the position the pictures appear in the production," said Mr. Griffith. "That is always done. The multitudes were taken first and gradually the number was cut down until at last we had only the principals in their scenes.

"Some of the scenes which appear in order today were taken three or four months apart. That made more trouble, but it had to be done that way. You must remember exactly what

"I wouldn't mind having a chance to work out a few little ideas," was the answer.

At the Liberty Theater, New York, within the last several months people have stood in a line which stretched from the box office nearly a whole block, suffering for the privilege of paying $2 a seat, in many cases, to see nothing but a moving picture drama. The man who produced that $2 movie is the man addressed in the studio seven years before, the man who said he had a few little ideas to work out.

He was Griffith then, now he is David Wark Griffith, for whom even the most surfeited regular dramatic critic had words of praise when that movie had its first night in New York and of whom also other men who study and observe rather than direct declare that he has raised the film drama to an art with a capital A and that he has unfolded new possibilities, pioneered in hitherto unsuspected fields.

In brief, Mr. Griffith took "The Clansman," a novel by the Rev. Thomas Dixon, and from it evolved an ambitious spectacle for the camera in which, working on a stage roughly speaking five miles long and two miles deep, he employed altogether 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses. He delineated battle scenes conducted according to the records preserved in the War Department at Washington, using artillery, cavalry and infantry as they were used in a real battle of the civil war.

His artillery duels were real artillery duels, his cavalry charges were passed by the men who participated in such a charge fifty years before. His men died as men had died in the trenches of the South, and they suffered just as the men who did suffer said they had. He built or caused to be built no less than five complete Southern towns, faithful to the last architectural detail, and he burned three of them.

He massed and handled great mobs as history said the real mobs acted. He reproduced one theater exactly life size and delineated the great national tragedy of the assassination of President Lincoln just as history says it occurred. He built the legislative halls of a Southern State and with an actual still photograph as a model brought back to life a scene in that chamber fifty years ago. Above all, throughout two hours and forty minutes he ran the threads of a love story.

Thus it was that Mr. Griffith leaned back in his chair puffing contentedly at an after luncheon cigar, taking his first vacation in about fourteen months. He was at that moment digesting, among other things, four questions which would take several hours to answer.

"Who are you?"

"Where did you learn how?"

"How did you do this?"

"What will come after?"

Mr. Griffith told how he was born in Kentucky some thirty odd years ago, the son of Jacob Wark Griffith, a brevet Brigadier General of the Confederate army. His family comes near to being eligible for about all the patriotic societies, for his grandfather was Captain Daniel Griffith of the war of 1812.

were seven years of the stage—now in road companies, now in repertoire, all the time getting up a little. He played with Gertrude Coghlan, Walker Whiteside and finally Nance O'Neil, in the last year a leading man.

Something else happened. In an odd moment on the road the young actor had written a short story or two and some verses. He came back to New York and sent them to a magazine, which promptly accepted them. Then he wrote a play, "The Fool and the Girl," and James K. Hackett took it. Another great romantic drama was begun and its acceptance promised. This was in the latter part of 1906 and the early part of 1907.

"That ended the stage for me," he explained. "No more of the hardships. I was going to be an author and draw down royalties. I woke up in about five months.

"The Hackett play failed, and I have was was a day of a young girl with her ancient Italian guitar singing her little song of life, "God's in His Heaven; all's right in the world."

Then came "The Merchant of Venice," rather ambitious; "A Blot in the Escutcheon," "Beach of Falesa," pointed fancy; "Lines of White on Sullen Sea," all of which led to "Oil and Water," written by Mr. Griffith himself. A little more ambition and then came "A Corner in Wheat," the first pictures of which were modeled directly on Millet's "Gleaners," and the audience liked that.

"Just about that time," he put in, "it came to me that a wonderful thing could be done with 'The Life of Christ.' The divine tragedy has a universal appeal, and adequately done with reverence it could not fail of approval." He laughed. "I submitted my idea, and it was approved, but when I got the travail of the civil war.

"I saw a chance to tell the story of how they suffered through what I believe to be the most dramatic period in the history of the country—reconstruction. There was a chance to show what the South thinks of Lincoln [illegible] his own volition degenerate into the human being who made the Ku Klux Klan necessary, but rather he was seduced by the unscrupulous adventurers, who exploited a situation for their own selfish ends.

"There was nothing of race in my idea, and may I say there is nothing of race antagonism in my production. It is simply the pictorializing of an epoch."

Taking the book, reading it and dreaming about it, however, did not do the work. There were eight months of incubation. First three men, and they

"Was it difficult to get the actors?"

"No," replied Mr. Griffith, "not difficult, but tedious. You see we advertised in the newspapers that we wanted so many persons, men, women and children. We [illegible] sections.

"How about the negroes?"

"They were the easiest. The negro is a natural actor, and I do not mind saying that among the 4,500 of them we took out of the fields, out of the shops and from every other place we found some with remarkable talent. A producer some day may put forth the tragedy of the negro on the film—he will find men and women of that race fully competent."

Of course, it was explained, they did not use the 18,000 persons all the five or six months they were actually photographing the drama. While it is true

The headquarters alluded to in the battle scenes was a sixty foot tower in front of the whole scene. It was there that George W. Bitzer, [illegible] Mr. Griffith says, [illegible] set their cameras. Every scene, it may be said, was taken six times.

Finally when every move of every section had been gone over again and again in rehearsal, when the soldiers knew when to charge or fall back, when to die or drop, even when the artillery knew the exact second when to wheel into action and the cavalry had its time schedule perfect, even to the exact place where a horse must stumble or fall, the section leaders came to headquarters.

Back in the hills the thousands were waiting. They dashed back to their commands. Word came that all

"You remember that case where the negroes are shot and fall when the Ku Klux come into the town. The [illegible] over them as they lie in the street. It [illegible] the horses and their riders are the best trained obtainable. We had up with some men. 'Boss, we won't do that for less'n $5 a day,' they said. They got it.

"Take another case in the Confederate invasion of the town. It may be recalled that a man shot falls from the roof of a front porch head first on the ground. Many think the fall is made by a dummy. A real man does it and practiced it in a fire net until he got his fall just right, timed exactly as it had to be done to fit in with the scene.

"There is one case where a rider coming out of a house makes a flying leap into the saddle over the tail of his horse. That took time, and it does not show, but the man who did that had to jump over a railing encumbered by a robe.

"Many things were done in the work that do not appear in the film. There are twenty-five field guns in the battle scene pounding away, and they were too far away for the eye of the camera. Houses are burned of which you catch only a vague glow, people are fleeing over the hills and you can hardly see them."

The actual work was all over in five months, Mr. Griffith said. From their first camp they went to California for interiors and the honeymoon scenes, the allegories and theater scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln.

"The theater was the exact size of Ford's in Washington," Mr. Griffith explained, "and it was an exact duplicate. Old prints gave us every detail even down to the appearance of Laura Keene and her company in 'Our American Cousin.' We sought long before we got a man who could satisfy us as President Lincoln, and every man who became a member of his Cabinet was required to look like the original in size and general makeup.

"It was there that detail became almost overpowering. Men who lived in the old days were besieged. How did this man walk; how did he gesture; how did he wear his clothes; did he have any mannerisms? I tell you it kept a great many people awake nights. We took the famous painting of the surrender of Lee, and we never laid it down until I believe that every man in it had an exact double before our cameras."

Thus it all came out. There were more months as the film was perfected and made ready for the public. But at last it was done.

"Now what is the future of the moving picture?"

The man being interviewed lifted his hands. "Why, there are no limits to its possibilities in artistic work. This is only child's play."

MR. GRIFFITH, CONSULTING WITH G. A. R. VETERANS FOR DETAILS OF SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA. AMPLIFIED HISTORICAL RECORDS WITH INTERESTING REMINISCENCES.

TEMPLE DAILY TELEGRAM, TEMPLE, TEXAS, SUNDAY MORNING, MARCH 5, 1916

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid amount of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

EVANSVILLE COURIER MARCH 5, 1916

Wizard Who Staged "The Birth of a Nation"

Genius of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work Has Placed Him So Far Above His Fellows, Is Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy"

There is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices and has got the so-called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is 35 and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the civil war, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep"

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fans knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up. On observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain, just as in the big crashes of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by a flash of field flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is work, and he seeks relaxation in dancing. There is a story going along Broadway that recently Griffith turned down an offer from the manager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the trotters. The director enjoyed the compliment but he did not tell the Boniface why he couldn't afford to take the job. The offer came at the close of a fourteen hour day of hard work in the studio and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh, and he is always when off duty

He has written several [illegible] but he is committed against silent drama. He looks upon [illegible] youngest sister of the movies and hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Color

The director has a fine sense of the tone and color of pictures. He sees dramatic situations in terms of tone and color. It was this tribute which supplied the music score to "The Birth of a Nation." The tedious and torturing method he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he would tone to every action and unconsciously hummed the several tunes that now form a part of the wonderful score which Breil has produced so well to this stirring action. The notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Breil while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and for the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him and after taking portions of the [illegible] all over the country he would in the late nights in the studio at California, and there worked out a dramatic sequence the story as it was to be folded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, situations, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling them in narrative form. Not a bit of inaccuracy got by him. As an example of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a Spanish uniform.

"Great heavens! What was I thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years with a half starved and half clad army. Go back and get a battered uniform, and let's do it all over."

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly [illegible] persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its position. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and boost this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which they never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be presented at the Wells-Bijou [illegible] the first four days of next week.

MAE MARSH
as Flora Cameron
in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

THE EVANSVILLE COURIER

AMUSEMENTS
RETURN ENGAGEMENT OF MIRACLE MOVIE

—•—

"Birth of a Nation" Will Be Here All This Week — Matinee Tomorrow.

The long looked for return engagement of D. W. Griffith's remarkable film drama, "The Birth of a Nation," will begin tomorrow at the Academy of Music opening with a matinee at 2 o'clock and the night performance will begin promptly at 8:30. Throughout the week's engagement in Charlotte matinees will be given every afternoon.

Manager John L. Crovo is anticipating record-breaking crowds during the week and requests that all who are planning to attend any of the performances to secure their seats early. The advance sale of tickets, is the largest in the history of Charlotte theatricals and everything points to capacity houses ruling at every performance.

The Charlotte Observer under date of Tuesday, November 16, had the following review of "The Birth of a Nation," when this wonderful attraction played here:

MIRACLE MOVIE FULL OF THRILLS.

"Overwhelming in its stupendousness, gripping in its appeal, masterful in its portraiture and profoundly thrilling in its delineation of a great historical epoch, "The Birth of a Nation" stirred the immense audience that thronged the Academy of Music last night as no other play has done in years. The photoplay drama came to Charlotte heralded as one of the modern wonders of the world—certainly in the realm of motion picture art—and right well did it measure up to all expectations. A more stirring picturization of a historical evolution could hardly be imagined.

"Local interest was augmented by reason of the fact that the writer of the triology of novels on which the picturization was based, is a North Carolinian—Thomas Dixon, author of 'The Leopard's Spots,' 'The Clansman' and 'The Traitor,' and the scene of the drama is located in piedmont Carolina. The manner in which the play was produced, the completeness of the arrangement of every detail, and the staggering force with which scene followed scene and climax followed climax makes 'The Birth of a Nation' the most famous picture of the day. A splendid orchestra of 30 pieces added the auditory appeal, the music being selected and adapted to the scenes as they flitted by. The combination of the visible and the audible was highly effective.

"The picture will be here today and tomorrow, two performances being given each day. The indications are that each seat for the entire four performances will be sold before the doors open. Two hours and 40 minutes are required for the play.

"Prof. D. D. W[illegible]e, head of the department of [illegible] and economics at Wofford Co[illegible] recently saw the picture and had [illegible]llowing to say about it:

"The st[illegible] of the thing perhaps [illegible]ve everything else.

"Why [illegible] my opinion [illegible]ion' the first [illegible] may that exactly, either for so many things impress me so powerfully that I hardly know where to start,' said Doctor Wallace. 'The stupendousness of the thing perhaps stands out above everything else. I was very much in the same state of mind as a prominent minister who sat near me; he seemed unable to believe that he had actually seen what he had. It seemed impossible that such a stupendous drama could have been placed within the four walls of a house. I was swept along on the mighty current of the years 1860 to 1876 with mind and emotions at such a pitch that I felt like I needed a rest.

"'I believe that any man, no matter what his prominence, who had lived through the great tragedy of the war and Reconstruction would understand it better seeing the thrilling romance, the dramatic power, the mighty passions of men, that have made our history, how blind and dull we are to the greatness, the deep springs of motive, of the life we live in. Every American is indebted to those who have made our history so vivid. Its grip will stay with me as long as I can remember.

"'Of course from the standpoint of technical skill, many of the high-class pictures leave little to be desired. "The Birth of a Nation" is wonderful in this regard. The get-up of the leading actors makes one feel as though Lee, Grant, Lincoln, Thad Stevens, Stanton, Seward, Andrew Johnson was actually before you.

"'Yes, there are some horrible things in it; but there are horrible things in life, and I don't know that we are going to get rid of them by pretending that they are not there. Taken all in all, it is something that no American, certainly no Southern man or woman can afford to miss. I took the whole family except the baby and if it comes along after she's big enough, I'll take her, too.'

"There were many situations last night that evoked vigorous applause. A goodly number of old soldiers were in the audience and when the strains of 'Dixie' were heard there was a shout which was echoed and re-echoed again and again."

A Scene in "The Birth of a Nation"

SCENES IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE SEEN AT TEMPLE AGAIN

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" at Temple Theatre Two Days, March 6 and 7.

San Antonio Texas Light 3/5

b-
to re-peace r the us of tream divid-that this m in reach-is all ple

ne

The
been such k is new lt to

St. Louis Post Republic

"BIRTH OF NATION" STARTS RIGHT OFF WITH USUAL CROWD

Good-Sized House Cheers and Storms and Howls and All but Drowns Orchestra.

Not many weeks ago a moving picture established a theatrical long-run record for St. Louis. It did it at the $2 scale. The last performance turned people away.

Last night "The Birth of a Nation" returned. A good-sized audience at the Olympic Theater cheered and stormed and howled and all but drowned a huge orchestra as if at the premier of what was destined to be the greatest dramatic success of the country.

It is apparent that St. Louis has taken up its enthusiasm over the Griffith epic where it left off and appears ready to grant another long run.

Few are unaware of the film's theme—that it is a screen production of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," that it deals with the reconstruction peroid in the South, that it has caused ceaseless condemnation from the negro race, that it has the biggest battle scene or scenes ever attempted, that it has been seen in all big cities and is still running in many with all the success it took for itself at its first filming.

The production last night was just as complete as when first seen here. An orchestra of 30 played. Much of the appeal of the picture is through the incidental music. It almost puts words into the actors' mouths and it does put powerful realism into the boom of cannon, the turmoil of the Ku Klux Klan clashes with the black and white trash, almost ever flicker—but no, for the thing that founded the success of "The Birth of a Nation" is that it has no flickers—it is perfect photography.

The Olympic engagement is announced as a limited one. Perhaps the only "limited" feature will be the capacity of the house.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HERE AGAIN; NEGRO VIEWS ADDED

Olympic Well Filled for Both Presentations of Movie Masterpiece Yesterday.

With no apparent diminution in popularity, "The Birth of a Nation," D. W Griffith's movie masterpiece, began a return engagement at the Olympic Theater yesterday. There were few vacant seats at the matinee and evening performances.

An added feature, not seen when the film was produced here before, is a series of pictures showing the progress of the negro race since the Civil War. These include motion views of educational activities at Hampton Institute, a negro college at Hampton, Va.

SAN ANTONIO LIGHT

"Birth of a Nation."

That the sensation created by "The Birth of a Nation" the length and breadth of the United States is not to be confined to this country alone has become evident through experiments that are being made in foreign countries, and the indications are that this gigantic spectacle, which opens a return engagement for a week at the Grand Opera House next Monday night, will sweep the world. It was feared by the producers that "The Birth of a Nation" might have a limited appeal, conditioned by a thorough understanding of the struggle between the Northern and Southern sections of the United States and the questions of race involved in the reconstruction period. But a test made in Canada proved the fears to be groundless. The spectacle was taken into Eastern Canada, which is as much a foreign country as any kingdom of Europe. The Eastern Canadians accepted "The Birth of a Nation" as enthusiastically as did the people of New York and Boston and Chicago. On this showing, companies being organized for the invasion of England, Australia, South Africa, South America and other foreign sections. One, indeed, has opened in England, and another is on its way to Australia.

New Brunswick, N. J. DAILY HOME NEWS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE OPERA HOUSE TO-NIGHT

The Surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomatox, a Dramatic Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Opera House All This Week. Matinee Every Day.

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," will open a week's engagement today, matinee and evening at the Opera House. The first class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 15 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the south—these personage and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered States. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny "demies" of the theatric boards. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux "rides" right out in the open, which surpass in thrills any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a "short cast" drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 20,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of out-door nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from the lightest comedy to desperate tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art-form of drama-spectacle—with music.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama to be presented in a regular theatrical way and at the usual first-class scale of "two-dollar top" prices. No advance will be made on these prices on tour. The facts that one and a half million people have already witnessed it, and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half a year in the simultaneous productions of New York, Chicago and Boston, prove that the biggest claims in its behalf are justified by the popular verdict. Despite opposition, at various times, it should be added, "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censor boards everywhere; upheld when attacked by decisions of courts of record; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any other entertainment ever offered to the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the reconstruction de

March 6th 1916

TERRE HAUTE TRIBUNE

By Hugo O'Brien.

"The Birth of a Nation," beyond question the biggest theatrical entertainment of the decade, is back for a brief engagement at the Grand opening this afternoon. Tremendous interest in the engagement is shown in the mail orders that are coming in from cities within a radius of 100 miles of Terre Haute. Matinees will be given today, Tuesday and Wednesday at 2:30 and night performances will begin promptly at 8:15. The traction lines will put on extra cars to take care of out of town patrons.

Over in Muncie where "The Birth of a Nation" has just concluded a return engagement, fifteen extra cars were pressed into service to take care of Saturday night's commuters.

Indiana has been particularly good to Mr. Griffith's spectacle by the way. The box office takings during the first three weeks in Indianapolis were over $31,000. During the return engagement of two weeks the receipts reached $19,000. Muncie kicked in to the extent of $10,000 during the engagements of three days each. The Ft. Wayne engagement of one week yielded over $12,000. Anderson and Richmond paid $11,000 to see "The Birth of a Nation." Lafayette, $4,900 for five performances, South Bend nearly $32,000 for eleven performances. Terre Haute has not been behind other Indiana cities in showing substantial appreciation of the great spectacle, the takings during the first week here were nearly $12,000. It is estimated that over two and a half million people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the east. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of half a million dollars.

Evansville (Ind) Courier 3/6

Birth of a Nation

"The Birth of a Nation", D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, that is coming again to the Bijou Sunday afternoon Mar. 12, for a four day's engagement, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the states and the reconstruction of the southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Warthall, who plays the heroic role of the little confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a brigadier general of the confederate army.

New Brunswick (N. J.) Times 3/6

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION," OPENS WEEK'S ENGAGEMENT AT THE OPERA HOUSE TODAY

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," will open a week's engagement today, matinee and evening at the Opera House. The first class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 15 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the south—these personage and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered States. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Clan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny "demies" of the theatric boards. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux "rides" right out in the open, which surpass in thrills any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a "short cast" drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 20,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of out-door nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from the lightest comedy to desperate tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art-form of drama-spectacle—with music.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama to be presented in a regular theatrical way and at the usual first-class scale of "two-dollar top" prices. No advance will be made on these prices on tour. The facts that one and a half million people have already witnessed it, and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half a year in the simultaneous productions of New York, Chicago and Boston, prove that the biggest claims in its behalf are justified by the popular verdict. Despite opposition, at various times, it should be added, "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censor boards everywhere; upheld when attacked by decisions of courts of record; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any other entertainment ever offered to the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the reconstruction de

3/6

The Birth of a Nation" opens a three-day return engagement tonight, and matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday. D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle of the film world needs no introduction to Terre Hauteans, having fared unusually well on its previous engagement of one week. Taken in part from "The Clansman," the production is one that is worth seeing, both from the dramatic and spectacular point of view.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a production that will thrill, if ever a production did thrill. It's entertaining powers are remarkable and are greatly assisted by the wonderful music from the large symphony orchestra. The wierd calls of the trumpet during scenes showing the Ku Klux Klan in action will send a "chill" up the back and the action of the entire production is such that it will hold one interested throughout.

"The Birth of a Nation"

The romance of the "little confederate colonel," Ben Cameron and the Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Union captain Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, are two threads of continuous interest throughout "The Birth of a Nation," which, at the close of its second triumphant tour of this city, opens a return engagement next week at the Grand Opera House, Monday. Never, in the most memorable scenes of the spectacle, is romance, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," quite forgotten. In the battle of Petersburg, for example, the "little colonel" leads a thrilling charge against the command of his old school friend, Captain Stoneman. One of the sisters of Margaret Cameron falls victim to war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. Elsie Stoneman and her brother, Phil, are in Ford's Theatre the night of the assassination of Lincoln. It is to save the honor of his sister's heart, Elsie Stoneman, that the "little colonel" leads the Ku Klux Klan men in the most sensational scene ever staged.

May 6

EVANSVILLE JOURNAL-NEWS

Birth of a Nation.

A great deal of film comedy is horseplay, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Bijou March 12 to 15 inclusive, proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laughmaker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look. Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate for the period of 1864.

Mar 6

LOUIS TIMES

TH OF NATION" N AT OLYMPIC; HAWK' TONIGHT

Hopper Scores at Amer- Billie Burke "Packs 'Em t King's—Melodrama at p.

irth of a Nation" returned the Olympic Theater for a gagement. This film, which ed by authorities to be the photo-drama ever produced, ed, matinee and night, by nes.

with the period of national mediately preceding the Civil Birth of a Nation" reaches with the assassination of Lincoln. The murderer, the fatal shot at the Presi- the rear of his box, and then the stage of Ford's Theater, a cry, disappears. Every in- nected with the assassination in faithfulness to history. of the Civil War campaign h is shown, with a remark- rdment of Atlanta at night. shells are seen bursting high ity. They fall and set fire to houses. In this scene alone ldings erected for the picture oyed. Thousands of refuges n flight from the stricken after young white women insulted and some of them little Colonel organizes the lan, whose object is to take ous power away from the Governor and avenge the ites. Thousands of white- and men are employed in of the clan. The pictures striking realism, how they mble far into the country, upon towns, disarm the ne- sh swiftly away.

AMUSEMENTS

THE WONDERFUL SPECTACLE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS TODAY.

Everything is in readiness for the opening performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music today matinee, while the advance sale is satisfactory, there has been a tendency here, as in other cities where the spectacle has been shown, to buy for the latter performances and Manager Crovo is fearful many will be turned away before the engagement ends. Much confusion and disappointment can be eliminated if patrons will buy their tickets in advance and attend the earlier performances so fas as possible.

The Griffith spectacle is founded upon "The Clansman" and it exhibits the salient events of the war between the States. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theater, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime — is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of "little Confederate Colonel" Ben Cameron, with Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactments of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen here at the Academy of Music for this entire week. Matinees will be given every afternoon at 3 o'clock and the night performances will begin promptly at 8:30. Seats for any performance during the engagement can be purchased now at the theater box-office, where the advance sale is being conducted this week.

Charlotte News Mar. 6th '16

"Nein"

Col. George C. [illegible] following on a saloonkeeper named McDermott, says The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

McDermott followed suit and the man, and they say he would "set 'em up" about as often as anybody else. One day a crowd had collected, and one man, a German, ordered drinks.

McDermont followed suit and the customer reciprocated. Then he started out, and as he did so he queried,

"Das ist [illegible]"

[illegible] ation in Germany had been [illegible] in County Mayo. About all he knew in that language was "Yah," so he said it enthusiastically.

When he was gone McDermott bemoaned the fact that his customer had not paid, and was informed that he had told the man that it was "all right."

Mac made a few more inquiries and learned the opposite of "Yah," "Here after it is 'nein' for me," said he.

Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" Academy of Music, Charlotte One Entire Week with daily matinees beginning Monday, March 6.

Charlotte, N.C. News Mar. 6th '16

"The Birth of a Nation" Engagem[illegible] Opens Today.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectac "The Birth of a Nation" begins its e gagement at the Academy of Music t day. There will be two performance daily at 8:30 and 3 p. m.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York city where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated in the Civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation, its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands; 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background; 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil war are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eye-witness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as can not be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to pasison and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are over-run by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly-garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to heir rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

MARCH 7, 1916.
BUFFALO ENQUIRER

STAR THEATER

"The Birth of a Nation."

Although it is starting upon its third week at the Star theater, there was no indication yesterday that the public is losing interest in "The Birth of a Nation," the most wonderful motion picture ever staged. Every seat at the Star was taken last evening and the indications are that the crowd will keep coming all the week. Many people are seeing the show twice, as it is so wonderful it can hardly be appreciated the first time one sees it.

This is one of the strongest plays that has ever been arranged for the screen, aside from the stupendous manner in which it was produced. It deals with a theme that always awakens fire in the blood. Different persons, of course, have various ideas concerning it and are stirred to different emotions. It deals with the problems of the early days after the Civil War, the carpet baggers and the Ku Klux Klan. At the same time the picture tells a story of war, a story of the awfulness and horribleness of it. It shows plainer than one could ever tell the possibilities that might arise even now if the country were thrown in a state of war. The insults offered to the women in the picture by the negroes are vividly depicted.

This and next week will be the last time "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown in Buffalo this season. It is believed this superb picture would draw crowds for a month more but the bookings run out in two more weeks. The picture is being shown twice a day at the Star.

Buffalo, N.Y. ?
March 7th 1916

Star Theatre.

The third week of the Birth of a Nation was ushered in at the Star Theatre yesterday by two capacity audiences. This great film play has created a big sensation among theatre patrons here and a great many who seldom visit the theatre ordinarily are numbered among the audiences at the Star Theatre at each performance.

David W. Griffith's great masterpiece is a correct portrayal of some historical events. The Civil War and the stormy period of reconstruction following the American war, the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln, the final Piedmont and Lee and Grant clasping hands at Appomattox are among the important scenes of the production.

The Birth of a Nation is a magnitude of war and battle that demands and holds the attention of the onlooker every minute and in this production the music plays an important part. The enlarged orchestra plays music from works by the great masters and every effort was made to fit the music to the picture.

The Birth of a Nation will be seen at the Star Theatre all this week, twice daily including two performances on Sunday, and next week will be the closing week of the Buffalo engagement of this wonderful production.

By Mique O'Brien.

The question, will the "Birth of a Nation" arouse as much enthusiasm during its return engagement at the Grand as it did during that epoch-making first week in January? was answered in the affirmative yesterday afternoon and last night.

Last night's audience, which was rather top heavy, the balcony being packed to the walls, was probably the most enthusiastic that has yet viewed

During the running off of the second half of the picture the cheering was almost continuous.

One mighty roar that lasted fully fifteen minutes greeted the maneuvering of the mounted ku klux klan.

"Why, this outburst reminds me of the scenes that were enacted in Music hall, Cincinnati, during the convention which almost nominated Blaine for the presidency," remarked Col. William Penn. "Isn't it fine to hear an audience cut loose like that? Sounds like a long-drawn out rebel yell, doesn't it?"

Apparently the majority of the people present last night came to the theatre without prejudice. There were quite a number of veterans of the civil war who were guests of Manager Smith, D. W. Griffith and Freddy Zwiefel, producer and manager of "The Birth of a Nation," and the Tribune, but they came to be entertained and they certainly were entertained as never before within the walls of a theatre. Everybody applauds the ku klux klan. Their movements are so sensationally dramatic as to compel recognition. "The Birth of a Nation" is really a wonderful show, the greatest entertainment I have ever seen. The lessons in history, the educational part of it, will continue to call forth plaudits and yards of comment, but I must continue to regard it purely as a show. That magnificent symphony orchestra is still about 60 per cent of the show. The fine stage effects, too, help wonderfully.

"The Birth of a Nation" engagement opened with a matinee for the first time in the history of the picture. The best seats for tonight and tomorrow night will be sold at a dollar apiece for the first time.

...le of Ne...
...ago. On t...
...being orga...
...England, Au...
South Am...
...ections. On...
England, a...
Australia

Terre Haute Post
Ind. March 7th

COST $25,000 TO SNAP CLANSMEN RACE IN MOVIE

Exercising the same charm over the audience, "The Birth of a Nation" opened a return engagement at the Grand Monday afternoon. Matinee and night performances are scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday. The engagement closes Wednesday night.

The inside of how Director Griffith was able to acquire control of township roads is here told for the first time in Terre Haute.

An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads.

The county authorities were appealed to. They finally consented to mark off 10 square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic for the day. Pedestrians were also warned off. David Griffith, with the authorities' permission, remade such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye, to make them look southern. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen.

Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick.

March 7th 1916

TERRE HAUTE STAR,

D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," opened its second engagement at the Grand Opera House last night and was offered to an interested audience. The great photoplay is to be presented in Terre Haute three days, matinee and night performances today, and two performances Wednesday. During this brief stay there are many people who will see it for the second and third times.

The greatest picture of its kind, "The Birth of Nation" deals with the civil war period of our history, while most of the action is that of the "carpet baggers'" regime in the south. The liberated slaves are shown under the influence and leadership of northern white men, who were responsible for many of the scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation." This point is brought out clearly by Griffith.

Henry Walthall is seen in the role of the "Little Colonel," bravely fighting for the south in the war. Back to his old home, he returns, and finds everything sadly changed. With others, he organizes the Ku Klux Klan and out of the disorder is brought the new law of the masked riders, until the ring dominated by the northerners is completely broken.

There are great war scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," historical scenes of unusual interest and fidelity to detail, and wonderful acting on the part of the principals. Lillian Gish is the northern girl, the sweetheart of Ben Cameron, and Mae Marsh is the little sister of the Little Colonel, who plunges to her death from the high cliff, while Miriam Cooper is the older sister.

March 7th 1916
EVENING REVIEW, BAYONNE.

CAVALRY RAIDS IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Opera House all next week, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—he producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work. The seat sale opens tomorrow, Wednesday, at 9 a. m. and the box office will be opened daily from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m.

March 7th 1916

BUFFALO COURIER

Star—"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's great photoplay masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," began the third week of its Buffalo engagement yesterday at the Star theater, crowds continuing to be large and enthusiastic. In fact, the reception Buffalo has accorded this remarkable production is said by those in charge of the performances to be as enthusiastic as that given it in all large cities where it has been seen.

There has been much favorable comment from the thousands here who have sat through the nearly three hours it takes to produce the film vision of momentous events in the nation's history. "The Birth of a Nation" is regarded almost unanimously as a correct portrayal of events of peace and war with which the millions of school children in the United States should be familiar

Some conception of the gigantic task undertaken in putting this big drama on the screen may be had when it is considered 18,000 people were employed in framing it and eight months were required to complete all details. Stage settings are perfect and no item of expense in costuming or in obtaining talent was spared to make the exhibition realistic.

The assassination of President Abraham Lincoln in itself is a masterpiece in this great motion-picture endeavor, but it is merely an item among the thousand and one scenes that go to make up the complete chronicling of events that take the audiences through the stormy period of reconstruction, following the great Civil War.

The surrender of Lee to Grant is as realistic as if the pages of history had been turned back and the two great heroes were present in person.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at two performances a day for the rest of this week and all of next, including next Sunday. It is said "The Birth of a Nation" will not come to Buffalo for a return engagement.

Seen On the Screen

Grant and Lee at Appomatox, a Scene in "The Birth of a Nation"

March 7th 1916
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

CROWDS FLOCK TO 'BIRTH OF A NATION' AT STAR THEATER

Beginning the third week of its Buffalo engagement, "The Birth of a Nation," the most stupendous motion picture production ever conceived, drew another capacity audience to the Star Theater last night. And, as at the performances of this stirring film the audience sat tense and expectant through the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan, sat back impotently as the scene showing Lincoln's assassination was flashed before them and looked with interest on scenes showing the development of momentous affairs in the nation's growth.

Never in the history of Buffalo has a presentation enjoyed so long or so prosperous a run as is promised for the "Birth of a Nation," both by the attendance during the past two weeks, last night's attendance and the advance sale of seats for the remainder of the week.

Photographically, "The Birth of a Nation" is the finest film ever produced. As a story there may be differences of opinion and judgment, but as a spectacle all agree that it is the most comprehensive and ambitious ever presented.

This week will be the last chance Buffalonians will have to view this spectacular film.

March 7th 1916
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

Star—"The Birth of a Nation."

The interest that is being taken in "The Birth of a Nation," the stupendous motion picture play being shown at the Star, was evidenced by two capacity audiences yesterday. The house was filled at the matinee and in the evening. Yesterday this wonderful screen play, the product of David Griffith, opened its third week here and it was announced that the sale of tickets for next week had started off heavy.

One of the noticeable features about "The Birth of a Nation" is that every act is depicted minutely and the scenes are vivid. When Lincoln is shot by Booth during the course of a performance in the Ford theater in Washington, the panic that followed is comprehensively portrayed.

The story is impressive beyond the usual use of the word. Of course it forms opinions and is naturally followed by discussions, but it is generally recognized as the greatest film ever shown.

March 7th 1916

NEW BRUNSWICK TIMES,

GREATEST OF THE PHOTOPLAYS NOW AT THE OPERA HOUSE

he Opera House the audience ight applauded the Stars and and the advance of the Union but not a whit more heartily hey applauded the gallant fight Klans for the rescue of those ced by carpet-bag despotism. deed of the negro desperadoes sulted in the Southern maiden's thrilled every heart with horthe conduct of the mulatto lieugovernor won general execrabe loyalty and worth of others negro characters received unadmiration.

plain fact is that "The Birth of on" is history. It tells of the War and the days of reconstruc- It is as if one sat in the window looked out to behold the most atous twenty years that this y ever saw or ever will see, for atter, pass in procession before es. There is much to sadden ive—very much that one wish otherwise. But it cannot ended or blotted out and should . It is there and will remain forever.

who attempts to review this n the small space which a news- accords him is simply attempt- e impossible. It reaches high mark in the art of the photo- There have been other pro- s equally large and some per- were camera man and director lone possible work, but none in a story so vibrant with human t has been told upon the screen n art at once so massive and so ite.

re are thousands of scenes and more thousands of people and . Great armies fight their battles real fields. A whole city burns one's very eyes. Regiments hand to hand battles in the es. Mobs surge up and down ity streets, not a few supers, you, but hundreds upon hun- of people. One sees a whole leg- e in session and again sits less as the ranks of the Klan y. Why, the vastness of it all nply staggering.

ally astonishing is the minute- f the detail. Every sword, every er, every musket, every cannon those battle scenes are exact rep- of weapons used in the Civil War. costumes are those of the fash- f the "sixties." The battles and es were laid out on the actual of Civil War conflicts by en- s who were guides, by maps and s in the war department at ington. Those who remember the Theatre in the national capital t reproduced last night in the est detail and were amazed at emarkable picture of the per- nce at which President Abra- Lincoln was slain. But why spe- further? This photoplay stands est of the microscope.

re have been many war plays e, but none that so vividly em- zes the horrors of war as this one of course, has war been de- d upon so large a scale or with merciless realism. It is especeffective as a peace advocate in masterly way in which it con- s the warriors at home and those the battlefield. The audience thrills as the armies clash sud- gives way to tears of pity as the women and children, the real war sufferers, are seen cowering and hungry at home. Such contrasts are thrown upon the screen more than once or twice, and in every case create the profoundest impression.

But, perhaps, the fundamental virtue of the play, at least from an ethical standpoint, is that it gives the people of this country a better understandi of each other. It enables us to r trace our way to the "sixties" and f things through each other's eyes. We of the North behold the men and women of the South as they really were, and quite understand the justice of their attitude in the days of the unwise "reconstruction" which we forced upon them. We find it in our hearts to excuse the fierce fight which they made against "carpet-bagism," and more than half suspect that had we known as much then as this play reveals our reconstruction policy would have been far more successful because shaped more in accordance with southern ideals. At any rate, seeing how cruelly we misunderstood them then our love is all the more abounding now that our eyes are opened.

The Music.

In making the score of the play the composer skilfully interwove first the old Southern melodies with themes of his own, and then proceeded to take not only from the great music dramas of the world, but of its sacred music as well.

One leaves the play with the strange weird, melodic calls of Wagner's "Ride of the Valkeries" and "Flying Dutchman" ringing in the ears. This is because the call, sounded in reeds and trumpets in the rush of the "Ku Klux Klan" are modifications of these themes. This call is sounded most impressively, and more than any stage mechanism, brings right to the mind the rush of legions of men. It brings convincingly to the auditor as well just what the author intended to bring, the idea that these men of the play had of an absolute consecration to a cause that they believed to be a holy one. The call, with all of its fire and venom, is most exalting .

In the part of the picture showing Sherman's march to the sea, it is of course, accompanied by "Marching Through Georgia." But in the treatment of this the arranger has brought the music to symphonic proportions. There is an intiphonal harmony—one that tells of the devastation in the path of the warlike force. In this, as in other parts of the music of the picture, the arranger of the music has risen to greatness. Then, too, in other battle scenes the music is that of Grief, a part of his "Peter Gyni" themes being adapted to the terrific action of the play. Again, in turmoil, some of the crescendos of Wagners works are used.

Naturally, again and again, familiar negro melodies creep into the score. These are skilfully welded into the harmonic whole and become a part of the picture. One forgets that it is a picture and is held oneself a part of the play.

Next, perhaps, in importance to the Wagnerian call, in the ride of the masked horsemen, is the adaptation of the "Gloria," from one of Mozart's masses at the conclusion of the play. While the orchestra renders this all else fades into [illegible]

Twin City Daily Sentinel Winston-Salem

MARCH 7, 1916.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK

Those who failed to see "The Birth of a Nation" when it played its record runs in the principal cities in the United States will have an opportunit, to see it at the Auditorium, Winston-Salem, where it will be seen for three nights beginning Monday March 15, matinees Tuesday, Wednesday; seat sale opens next Friday. "The Birth of a Nation" established a record everywhere it has been shown and when it closed at the Liberty theater, New York City, recently, it made a record that is one which will stand in the annals of the theatrical world for many years The run at the Liberty theater, New York city, continued forty-five weeks without a break. The total number of consecutive performances was 620. During the summer months there was a supplementary engagement at the Brighton Beach, which is part of the Metropolitan district. This engagement was for fourteen weeks with 182 performances, making a total of 802 consecutive performances in New York. In addition there have been eighty four performances of the spectacle in theaters in Brooklyn and the Bronx. These, however, are not counted in the consecutive run.

In round numbers, 616,000 people saw the production at the Liberty theater; 196,000 witnessed it during the run at the seashore and approximately 60,000 have attended performances for it in the outlaying theaters of Greater New York, making the total attendance to date for that city 872,000. By computing this with the census reports for New York city it will be seen that approximately one in every seven residents of the city has attended the local presentations. The uniform scale of prices for the run was 25 cents to $2 at nights and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees. The average was about 75 cents a head. It will be seen by this that New York paid over $600,000 for this one form of entertainment. This is a record never reached by any other attraction in the city. The record of "The Birth of a Nation" is the more remarkable when it is known that simultaneous with the New York run engagements were also under way in other important points of the country. It ran for 300 performances in Boston, the record there: 280 performances in Los Angeles, Cal, the local record; 450 times in San Francisco and still play which is also a record; 200 times in Philadelphia, 100 times in Pittsburgh, local record; 160 times in St. Louis, a local record; and has turned 428 times in Chicago, which is second to the longest run ever known there, which it will likely surpass before the end of the Windy city engagement. At the same time other companies have been touring the country. To date it is conservatively estimated that nearly five million people have seen this great production in America. It is also passing thru a London run, which totals nearly 20 weeks. Additional companies are being formed for Australia and South America while two others are touring Canada at present. As soon as conditions warrant in Europe additional companies will be sent on tour in Russia, France, Germany, Spain and Italy.

M Salem Journal

ay Morning, March [illegible]

IRTH OF A NATION AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK

se who failed to see "The Birth Nation" when it played its record in the principal cities in the Unit tates will have an opportunity e it at the Auditorium Winston- lem where it will be seen for 3 ights beginning Monday March 13th matinees Tuesday Wednesday seat sale opens next Friday, "The Birth of aNation" established a record everywhere it has been shown and when it closed at the Liberty theater New York City, recently, it made a record that is one which will stand in the annals of the theatrical world for many years. The run at the Liberty theater New York City, continued forty five weeks without a break. The total number of consecutive performances was 620. During the summer months there was a supplementary engagement at the Brighton Beach, which is part of the Metropolitan district. This engagement was for fourteen weeks with 182 performances, making a total of 802 consecutive performances in New York. In addition there have been eighty four performances of the spectacle in theaters in Brooklyn and the Bronx. These, however, are not counted in the consecutive run.

In round numbers, 616,000 people saw the production at the Liberty theater, 196,000 witnessed it during the run at the seashore and approximately 60,000 have attended performances for it in the outlaying theaters of Greater New York, making the total attendance to date for this city 872,000. By computing this with the census reports for New York City it will be seen that approximately one in every seven residents of the city has attended the local presentations. The uniform scale of prices for the run was 25 cents to $2 at nights and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees. The average was about 75 cents a head. It will be seen by this that New York paid over $600,000 for this one form of entertainment. This is a record never reached by any other attraction in the city. The record of "The Birth of a Nation" is the more remarkable when it is known that simultaneous with the New York run engagements were also under way in other important points of the country. It ran for 300 performances in Boston, the record there; 280 performances in Los Angeles, Cal. the local record; 450 times in San Francisco and still play which is also a record; 200 times in Philadelphia, 100 times in Pittsburg local record; 160 times in St. Louis a local record; and has turned 428 times in Chicago, which is second to the longest run ever known there, where it will likely surpass before the end of the Windy city engagement. At the same time other companies have been touring the country. To date it is conservatively estimated that nearly five million people have seen this great production in America. It is also passing through a London run, which totals nearly 20 weeks. Additional companies are being formed for Australia and South America while two others are touring Canada at present. As soon as conditions warrant in Europe additional companies will be sent on tour in Russia, France, Germany, Spain and Italy.

Mar. 7 THE EVANSVILLE PRESS Ind

Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" Astounded Stage Managers

VILLAIN IN "THE B IRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" appalled the manager of the older theater. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" is infinitesimal. For Griffith, in staging "The Birth of a Nation," used nature for his background, 150 years of American history as his subject, 18,000 people as his actors, and no less than 3,000 mounts of cavalry in the celebrated "rides" of the Ku Klux Klan.

After it was all completed, he had an operatic score prepared and provided orchestral music worthy of Wagner. The motion picture spectacle in which these marvelous things are done will be shown here at the Wells-Bijou theater four days only, beginning Sunday matinee, March 12. The engagement will close Wednesday night, March 15.

Mar 7

EVANSVILLE JOURNAL-NEWS

Birth of a Nation.

An early attraction at the Wells-Bijou will be D. W. Griffith's wonderful production, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins its engagement on Sunday afternoon, March 12. This mighty spectacle has turned the theater records of America topsy-turvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not so much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression with an operatic accompaniment in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothing like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished again until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

There will be two performances daily during this engagement of four days, beginning Sunday, March 12. Seats on sale Wednesday.

[illegible] COURIER

[illegible] art invented by [illegible] producing the [illegible] Birth of a Na- [illegible] Bijou for four [illegible] 12, has enabled [illegible] any stage spec- [illegible] "The Blue Bird" [illegible] the high-water [illegible] They sink [illegible] this epic of [illegible] its 5,000 scenes, [illegible] 1,000 riders and 200,- [illegible] of eight months [illegible] expenditure of [illegible] stage, such as [illegible] the Enemy,' [illegible] seem tame [illegible] of "The [illegible] the Griffith [illegible] sheer beauty [illegible] grandeur. [illegible] Ku Klux Klan [illegible] of avenging [illegible] the moonlit [illegible] punch in [illegible] history in [illegible] to both [illegible] historical [illegible] the con- [illegible] romantic [illegible] It is the [illegible]

MARCH 7, 1916
EVENING REVIEW, BAYONNE,

laddin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

e Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and never far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,000 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

"The Birth of a Nation" to Return to the Kentucky.

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Kentucky three nights commencing Thursday March 16th, with matinees Friday and Saturday, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was mad[illegible]st and indict Lee for treason who knew Lee's nobility o[illegible] and how he had fulfilled to [illegible] ter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

A special symphony orchestra of thirty is carried by the spectacle.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Kentucky commencing Thurs[illegible] arch 16th.

3/8
Dr Nine
Terre Haute Grand

By Mique O'Brien.

really see the last perform-the Birth of a Nation" to be this city, at the Grand, to-

, but probably not.
rth of a Nation" is too valu-ce of theatrical property to performance will be the h given in Terre Haute withonths. This really is a mar-ord when you come to think vid Warfield and Maude Ad-epertoire would hardly have long.

ic continues to be a wonder-active feature of the show, mposed by Joe Brill, son of nt Pittsburgh attorney. As er he first attracted atten-he wrote the score for Ede's "The Climax." The score Birth of a Nation" is rather the nerves of the musicians, six and a half hours of close to cues. Max Naylor, the ute drummer with the organ-ays he is learning to like his for the first week or so he one out of the musicians' pit ry performance perspiring as emerging from the hot room ish bath establishment.

Charlotte Daily Observer
Mar 8th 1916

Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, big scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

Twin City Sentinel
Winston Salem (NC) 3/8

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK.

An early atraction at the Elks' Auditorium will be D. W. Griffith's wonderful production "The Birth of a Nation" which begins its engagement on March 13. This mighty spectacle has turned the theater records of America topsyturvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression with an operatic accompaniment in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothing like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished again until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

The advance sale of tickets opens Thursday at the box office for all five performances. No telephone reservations can be made nor any tickets laid aside unless paid for. Mail orders with remittance are being filled now for city or out of town patrons.

Twin City Sentinel
Winston-Salem
Mar. 8th 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT ELKS' AUDITORIUM

In each of the large cities where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" which will be seen at the Elks' Auditorium next week was produced last summer, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box office. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theaters, these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared. "Oh, there won't be any advance sale" said the boxoffice attendant wearily when asked about an engagement. It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—not vaudeville to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicago's State, Boston's Tremont street, looked like times again, with the box office receipts doubled and the lines of "The Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the curb or even to the next corner. The same phenomenon has been repeated in all the other cities which the play has visited the present season, means, of course, that the high-class theater is not moribund. Only the touch of David W. Griffith's master wand has been required to infuse it with life. Seats went on sale this morning at 10 o'clock.

Mar. 8th 1916

ALO EVENING NEWS:

At the Star "The Birth of a Nation" is celebrating the third week of its engagement by continuing to crowd the theater twice daily. The big spectacle ends its visit here next week Saturday. This coming Sunday there will be a matinee and evening performance for those who like amusement on this day. In response to the demand from other countries to see this historical drama, special representatives have sailed for Australia and South America to make the necessary arrangement to tour these countries.

DAILY HOME NEWS March 8, 1916

Maud Adams of Moving Pictures is in "Birth of Nation" at Opera House

MARCH 8,

TER HAUTE STAR

Last chance today to see "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle, will make its last appearance at the Grand Opera House in two performances, matinee at 2:30 o'clock and at 8:15 o'clock. "The Birth of a Nation" is making what probably will be its last appearance in this city. The production is given this time as on all previous engagements and the large symphony orchestra provides beautiful music to accompany the picture.

D. W. Griffith took "The Clansman" as the basis of his great achievement and around the Dixon story he arranged a film spectacle that stands alone in its particular line. Henry Walthall has the leading role, that of the "Little Colonel," and shows his remarkable ability as an actor without an equal in the films. In the cast with him are such favorites as Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Bob Harron, Mariam Cooper, Mary Alden and many others.

st two showings of the big e, "The Birth of a Nation" view at the Grand Wednes-
The last performance will be Wednesday night at the d.

Charlotte News

MARCH 8, 1916.

"The Birth of a Nation."

avid W. Griffith's epoch-making ctacle, "The Birth of a Nation," acting record breaking crowds to Academy of Music this week.
re the spectacle is being shown ry afternoon starting at 3 o'clock each night at 8:30.

his work, partly from the nature the new art, partly from the oppo-on aroused, has excited keener iosity than any other offering of current season and the extra-nary advance sale indicates that playhouse will not prove nearly e enough to accommodate the er throngs.

The Birth of a Nation" tells by and music the story of a nation orn through the storm and stress internecine strife. Instead of the to six scenes of the convention-lay, its technique permits of film-literally thousands of scenes covering a wide range of his-and characters. Slavery, the prime se of the war, Lincoln's call for ps to subdue the Southern states, ball on the eve of Bull Run, and first triumph of Confederate s; the devastation wrought by rman's march and the awful or-of the siege of Petersburg, Lee's ender to Grant at Appomattox; assassination of the federal prest; the harsh radical policy to stricken South; the uprising of Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow the carpetbagger regime—these t factors and events pass in re-before the thrilled spectator.

he love interest of the play is d on the friendship between the erons, of South Carolina, and the emans, of Pennsylvania, two fam-involved in the struggle. Ben eron, the gallant Clansman of Dixon stories, appears in the role omantic hero, the piquant North-girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the hee, Mr. Griffith took most of the es in the great out-of-doors, where re pained the backgrounds and men directed the battle cam-ns. The notable indoor scenes,
Ford's theatre on the night of Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Ap-atox, and the South Carolina leg-re of 1870, are exact fac-similes e originals. Altogether, it is the time in art-production that his-in the large has been presented ing pictures. To do this, many e amount of time, energy and ually devoted to amuserprises had to be used.

MAE MARSH in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," at the Opera House All This Week.

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Opera House, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama, is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousand characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the young sister in this appealing story. The California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls.

WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL
MAR. 8th '16

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK

An early attraction at the Elks' Auditorium will be D. W. Griffith's wonderful production "The Birth of a Nation" which begins its engagement on March 13. This mighty spectacle has turned the theater records of American topsyturvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression with an operatic accompaniment in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothing like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished again until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

The advance sale of tickets opens Thursday at the box office for all five performances. No telephone reservations can be made nor any tickets laid aside unless paid for. Mail orders with remittance are being filled now for city or out of town patrons.

Mar 8

SAN ANTONIO LIGHT

Great Film Has Appeal.

When a producer of theatrical entertainment finds that his work makes a strong appeal to women, he instantly draws a long, free breath, for he knows he has a financial success. Strange as it may seem to those who have only heard about the "Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Grand Opera House Monday night, without seeing it, David W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle of the civil war and reconstruction days makes just the appeal that spells millions. This accounts for the very noticeable fact that the matinees at the Grand last November were as well attended as the night performances, and that fully 70 per cent of the patrons of these matinees were women. Even at night, women predominated in the audiences, the percentage being about sixty to forty.

FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE OPERA HOUSE ALL NEXT WEE

EVENING REVIEW, BAYONNE, N. J., THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1916

ARTIST'S VIEWS ON 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

A well-known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils—water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation." The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Utopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment, in "The Birth of a Nation," of the contrasting theme of the misery of war, wan, skeleton-like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the lean emaciated figures are bare to the wrist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled up victims of a battlefield. Arms are raised in entreaty to heaven. Bodies, legs and arms (as it were) shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who sense the mighty thought, the deep emotional appeal, in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

"The Birth of a Nation" is to be presented at the Opera House all next week with daily matinee performances, the advance sale of tickets is large already.

Evening Review Bayonne N.J. Mar 8th 1916

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS NEXT MONDAY

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Opera House all next week, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photo-play.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great Generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed. Seats are now selling at the Opera House for the entire engagement.

Evening Review Bayonne N.J. Mar 9

SCENES WHICH ARE REPRODUCED IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WHICH IS BEING OFFERED AT THE OPERA HOUSE ALL NEXT WEEK.

Mar 9

Birth of a Nation" which opens a three days engagement at the Grand Opera House this evening. Two performances will be given both Friday and Saturday.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

D W Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" begins its engagement at the Grand Opera House tonight. There will be two performances daily tomorrow and Saturday at 2:15 and 8:15 p. m.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. In New York City the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated in the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshaled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacles have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage while his a vast territory for background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country readway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10,000 square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is so real as if you were an eye-witness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great efforts in either is a story as tender and true as love and mercy can be pictured. There are tender smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are torn asunder by the demons of war; loyalties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed violence.

VINCENNES MORNING COMMERCIAL 3/9

"Birth of a Nation."

In each of the large cities where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Wells-Bijou for a return engagement of four days beginning Sunday, March 12, was produced last summer, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box offices. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theater these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared. "Oh, there won't be any advance sale!" said the box office attendant wearily, when asked about an engagement. It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—not words—to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop, Boston's Tremont Street looked like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of "Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the curb or even to the next street. The same phenomenon has been repeated in all the other cities which the play has visited the present season. It means of course that the high class theater is not moribund. Only the touch of David Griffith's master wizardry has been required to infuse it with life. Seats are now selling.

A PICTURE ALL SHOULD SEE

"The Birth of a Nation" Is a Great Historical Production—Seat Sale Now in Progress.

Unfortunately as it happens with all large attractions the false report is liable to be started that "all seats are sold" for "The Birth of a Nation." Everyone who desires to do so should see this great spectacle. Twelve hundred and fifty people can be accommodated at each performance, 6, 250 people for the five shows. Do not hesitate but get your tickets at Miller's Book Store.

During its run of sixteen weeks in Los Angeles, Cal., D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" broke every record ever known in that section of the country. It was the longest run ever recorded by any stage attraction. During its stay at the Auditorium, the largest theatre in the city, the attendance ran over 250,000 which is more than two-thirds of the total population of the city. It is doubted if ever in the history of American theatricals a stage offering ever played to such a percentage of the total population.

Tickets are selling for all performances, three nights, beginning tomorrow Thursday, March 9, 10, 11. Matinees Friday and Saturday.

CHARLOTTE NEWS MARCH 9, 1916.

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look pale this might have seemed like a fairy story. At present it is a reporter's notebook sketch of events, and there is a sordid lack of money in it.

Three of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

Evening Times
Baltimore Daily
Sun. Mar. 9th '16

HENABERY A MODERN LINCOLN

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the War President is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his Cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appomattax surrender the Leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the South for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away," is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great President, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization.

Durham N.C.

MARCH 9, 1916
MORNING HERALD.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Among all of the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Academy of Music March 16, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the south in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the south had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9 under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Academy of Music for three nights beginning Thursday, March 16, with matinees Friday and Saturday. The seat sale will be held at Blacknall's drug store.

Winston-Salem Journal
March 9th 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT ELKS' AUDITORIUM SOON

In each of the large cities where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" which will be seen at the Elks' Auditorium next week was produced last summer, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box office. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theaters, these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared. "Oh, there won't be any advance sale!" said the box-office attendant wearily when asked about an engagement. It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—not words—to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop, Boston's Tremont street, looked like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of "The Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the curb or even to the next street. The same phenomenon has been repeated in all the other cities which the play has visited the present season. It means, of course, that the highclass theater is not moribund. Only the touch of David W. Griffith's master wizardry has been required to infuse it with life. Seats go on sale this morning at 10 o'clock.

...n of a Nation" Drawing Immense Crowds.

...Birth of a Nation" is attracting both crowds to the Academy ... this week where it is being ...ice daily. It is the largest ... important production of a ... it not a word is spoken ... the two hours and forty-... tes performance. Music ... the absence of speech, me... effects and realism, whilst ... of the screen, David W. Griffith ... in 12,000 feet of film the ... romance of the war between ... and the reconstruction of ... Some faint idea of its ... may be had from the facts ... acts and 3,000 horses ... staging of this ... half a mil... While the ... seat ... been enormous for ... performances there are ... tickets to be had at the ... box-office.

Mar. 9th 16
New Brunswick N.J.

DAILY HOME NEWS

"BIRTH OF NATION" JUST WHAT REAL WAR LOOKS LIKE

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" now at the Opera House a thrilling association with the issues of today. The great crisis of 1861-'70 as pictured in the play have their lesson for the Americans of today. The North and the South in internecine struggle; the strategy of the Petersburg campaign and of Sherman's march to the Sea; Lee's surrender to Grant, and the aftermath of war in the Reconstruction period—all these form a serial of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interest. Out of the terrible conflict a new nation, united by spiritual as well as geographical ties, was born. The fire of American patriotism never burned brighter than it burns today, and the play which shows the evolution from the past to the present is welcomed at its first local presentation here.

BUFFALO EVE. TIMES
MAR. 9th 1916

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third successful week of twice daily performances at the Star Theater, will end its engagement next week Saturday. This coming Sunday there will be an opportunity to see the famous spectacle in the afternoon as well as in the evening.

Mar. 9th 16

BUFFALO ENQUIRER

At the Star, "The Birth of a Nation," is celebrating the third week of its engagement by continuing to crowd the theater twice daily. The big spectacle ends its visit here next week Saturday. This coming Sunday there will be a matinee and evening performance for those who like amusement on this day.

Mar. 9th 1916

ST. LOUIS REPUBLIC

Olympic Theater.

"The Birth of a Nation" again is filling the capacious Olympic Theater at almost every performance, with every promise of keeping it up for some time to come. There is no use trying to fathom a cause for the condition beyond the entertainment itself. It is what the people want, and the best evidence of the truth of this statement is the way they are buying it every day at the box office. It is announced for a "limited run," but D. W. Griffith threw away all "limits" when he created the masterpiece itself, and if it keeps up like it is doing at present, it will run the balance of the season.

LY HOME NEWS New Brunswick, March 9, 1916

Birth of Nation" Producer Had to Pay Big Price to Overcome Obstacles

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at the Opera House this week, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locals were applied to. They finally consented to mark the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $35,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

THE TIMES-PICAYUNE.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS HERE SUNDAY

Wonderful Film of Reconstruction Days Begins Sunday Night.

"The Birth of a Nation," a powerful combination of film, music and realistic stage effects depicting the part the South played in the Civil war and reconstruction will be the Tulane Theater's offering next week, starting Sunday night. Except on Sunday, when the entire day will be required for installing the spectacle, a matinee will be given every day. Seats are now on sale for all performances.

Aside from its own importance, "The Birth of a Nation," is notable as the last attraction of the season at the Tulane. Its sensational nation-wide sweep has stamped it as the most wonderful theatrical entertainment of the present generation and nothing could serve as a stronger climax to the legitimate season. Hundreds have been turned away wherever it has been shown and the producers have been flooded with demands for return engagements.

"The Clansman," a successful novel and play from the pen of the Rev. Thomas Dixon was drawn upon by Griffith for the stirring heart interest of his film epic, but he has far surpassed Author Dixon in his portrayal of scenes and events of the Civil war and reconstruction periods.

Instead of a small company of actors he employed 18,000 people and 3000 horses on a great outdoor stage and instead of the conventional four or five scenes "The Birth of a Nation" shows no less than 5000. Among these are: "Former President Lincoln signing his first call for volunteers," "Sherman's march to the sea," "the Confederacy's last stand at Petersburg" and "Lee and Grant at Appomattox."

The rise and noble deeds of the "Ku Klux Klan" also are shown and it might be added that the Griffith spectacle has done more to bring about a better understanding of this body of patriots than any history or propaganda has ever been able to do.

While it is true that film plays an important part in the production, it cannot be kept within the picture play classification. The services of fifty people are employed in each presentation and two carloads of special electrical and stage equipment are used. A symphony orchestra of thirty is carried by the company and is heard continuously through the three hours that the spectacle runs. The score is fitted to the scenes and it runs the entire gamut of human emotion.

"The Birth of a Nation" Returns to The Kentucky Theatre.

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Kentucky theatre for three nights starting Thursday March 16th and matinees on Friday and Saturdayday, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "great commoner" who led congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the patent office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate, colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy.

The spectacle carries the same splendid orchestra of thirty that appeared here with it last fall.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
PHOTOPLAYS.

"The Birth of a Nation," Olympia. Civil War and Reconstruction film.

BUFFALO COMMERCIAL

D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, The Birth of a Nation, is playing to large audiences this, the third week of its engagement, at the Star Theatre. There are many interesting scenes in the production and it is a correct portrayal of some historical events. Two performances will be given daily. The Birth of a Nation will be seen at the Star all next week.

Appomattox Now a Scene of Ruin.

Grown up with underbrush and scrub pine is the spot that marks "the end of the war" when General Grant and General Lee, the opposing commanders, firmly clasped hands, and Grant said, "Let us have peace." There are few of the comrades still left who remember that bright, sunshiny day at Appomattox Court House, when the two Generals, flanked by other generals of their commands, went into the Wilmer-McLean house and arranged the terms of surrender that meant the end of the war and the return of the citizen armies to their civilian occupations.

Out of the beaten track as it is Appomattox has fallen into ruin. The famous apple tree is now preserved only in memory and in the quatrain cited so memorably by Roscoe Conkling in the Republican Convention of 1880. The quiet little county seat of Appomattox had slumbered in obscurity until April 8, 1865, when it took its place in history, to be forever remembered in connection with the names of the great leaders of the Civil War and the end of the Lost Cause.

Few of the old houses are remaining in the little village. Unlike other famous battlefields, there has been no attempt to preserve the spot that marked the most important event of the great American conflict.

Because of this condition the lifelike reproduction of the surrender of Gen. Robert E Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant at Appomattox Court House in David W. Griffith's, "The Birth of a Nation," is particularly interesting and valuable. The place is hallowed ground in the story of America and it is unpleasant to learn that fire and flood, vandal hands and public indifference and want of care have brought desolation to the spot whose name so appeals to both North and South, there united in lasting peace. It is to be regretted that this place of peace has not received the attention of those who have labored to erect monuments in historic spots. It is therefore all the more gratifying to know that Mr. Griffith has preserved for posterity such a faithful representation of one of the most momentous scenes in American history.

The village of Appomattox has nearly disappeared. Only three houses remain. Even those are badly warped, giving promise that they too will soon rot, and that weeds, followed by scrub pine, will soon hide their sites from view. Two of these houses have long been abandoned. The other is occupied by the large family of a small farmer, a stranger to that part of Virginia and unfamiliar with and apparently indifferent to the great memories of the county in which he lives.

At the time of the surrender the village had been reduced by four years of war to a ramshackle collection of hamlet. A cluster of dwellings, [illegible] school house, a livery stable and a store of [illegible] were built around the sleepy court [illegible] square. The court house was burned down 20 years ago, and today the desolate court house square is but a place of ashes, charred plaster and shattered bricks.

"The Birth of a Nation" was seen again yesterday by two capacity houses at the Academy of Music and judging from the heavy advance seat sale for the remaining performances an attendance record will be established that is sure to rank at the top for many years.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be presented at the local playhouse throughout the week with matinees every afternoon starting at 3 o'clock and the night performances at 8:30. There are still some choice seats to be had for any performance at the theater box office.

THE WINSTON-SALEM SUN

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

It is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is not a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The national board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices of moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just [illegible] chains broken from him and [illegible] was rioting in the delicious[illegible] liberty so new and untried [illegible] had not yet learned to [illegible] and was as ignorant as a baby [illegible] way to use it. It is in this [illegible] actly true to history, and if it [illegible] upon the negro as he was then [illegible] a compliment to the black man of [illegible] day. An exhibition of [illegible] might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such [illegible] change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which [illegible] has depicted are of surpassing [illegible] and realism. Every lover of [illegible] must experience a certain [illegible] ification that just at this [illegible] ghastly horrors of carnage [illegible] brought so closely home to them. It is one thing to read about the [illegible] the killing and the cottage. [illegible] another thing to have them [illegible] pressed before the eye, with [illegible] demoniac fury that marks [illegible] close range. A well written [illegible] tion of a battlefield allows [illegible] and the occasion to be [illegible] features of magnificence, with [illegible] ism of the contestants and [illegible] the victors. On Griffith's [illegible] see the real thing. There [illegible] nificence, no glory, but [illegible] lity and stark butchery. It [illegible] with the sense of man's [illegible] man. It makes war [illegible] devilish. It conveys an [illegible] son to all who have been [illegible] by those who have decked [illegible] naked hideousness of war with [illegible] drapery.

There are also scenes of [illegible] dignity and beauty done by [illegible] artist's hand—the signing of [illegible] ident of the proclamation for [illegible] teers which marked the end of [illegible] regime, the surrender of Lee [illegible] and the assassination of the [illegible] in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Lincoln is held was manifested [illegible] way the great audience received [illegible] scene of a heartbroken southern [illegible] er pleading with him for her [illegible] tenced to death as a guerrilla. [illegible] eye was dim with tears in the [illegible] gling hush that fell on the [illegible] What might not our country have [illegible] saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great [illegible] one man who compassed within himself the resources of the [illegible] experience, breadth and sympathy [illegible] Abraham Lincoln.

"The Birth of a Nation" has [illegible] qualified approval.

Paducah Ky News-Democrat

[illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" at the Kentucky Theatre [illegible]

Mar 9

ANTONIO LIGHT

Shows Romance of War.

romance of war, as well as its cular horror, is depicted in Birth of a Nation," which re-to the Grand opera House y night for a week's engage-
In "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith has made use of the thrilling contrast, between the f life and the hollow emptiness ath that stirs in Lord Byron's rtal "Childe Harold." On the Bull Run, just before the sol-are to leave for the front, a is held in the little Carolina where the scene of the story is
It is one of those brilliant, old oned Southern functions, where ristocracy of birth and breeding as apparent as at the ball at els. Mr. Griffith's staging of gathering of "beauty and chivis artistically perfect. The dow shapes" on the screen sway he stately music of the audible estra, and the audience has no culty in imagining itself at the
As in the case of the Brussels
"a deep sound strikes like a risknell." Tears spring to the soft of those that looked "love to that spake again," for they can-mistake the distant roar of the
on. There are hurried partings.
alvalry" rides to the field of glory of death, while "beauty" is left he joy-deserted halls to weep.

Mar 9

AUSTIN AMERICAN.

NDERFUL PICTURE AMA IS NOW BEING HOWN AT HANCOCK on actual scenes of the Civil d the Reconstruction period llowed its close, D. W. Grif-ectacular picture drama, "The f a Nation," which opened a s' return engagement at the Opera House Wednesday, the fallacy of the oft repeated nt "that patriotism is dead."

the entire two hours or more picture is shown the audi-esterday expressed approval realism and vivid actuality of ma by continuous cheers and ncing with the days just pre-the outbreak of hostilities, the shows most of the famous bat-marked the bloody period

Americans fought Americans all of the hate and frenzy that mpanies the war now going on the water.

oven with the historical pic-is a love story that adds a uch to the horrors of the bat-and the stern realities of the ife. Lincoln is shown heed-plea of the mother that he boy, who is sentenced to be d Grant are shown at their le meeting at Appomattox, great Southern general papers putting an end to Then comes the Reconstrucd with all of its hardships ulties. The Ku Klux Klan,

's answer to the indignities on it by the carpetbaggers, on its errands of ven-d mercy.

the greatest scenes in the the assassination of Presiin while attending a per-at Ford's Theater in Washerfect in every detail, the acted so vividly that one al-ts to hear the report of the hear the cries of the n they realize the tragedy aken place in the presidenl scenes show the birth of ation, in which sectional eing wiped out and South are being welded the great America of toon to the splendid acting eat care exercised by the o observe every historical pecial music adds much to of the picture.

Durham NC

MORNING HERALD, MARCH 9, 1

Personal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work In "The Birth of a Nation" Has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, Is Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

THERE is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices and has gone to so called classes to drop their vociferated classes and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the babbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make-believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up. On observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain, just as in the big crashes of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by a flash of field flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is work, and he seeks relaxation in dancing. There is a story going along Broadway that recently Griffith turned down an offer from the manager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the trottery. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the Boniface why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh, and he is clubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the silent drama. He looks upon it as the youngest sister of the fine arts, and he hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blending of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score to "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he correlated tone to every action and unconsciously hummed the several tunes and chords which now form a part of the wonderful score which Breil has synchronized so well to this stirring action. These notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Breil while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which never dreamed of in the the world before.

May 9th 1916

TAYLOR DAILY PRESS

Great Peace Allegory In "Birth Of A Nation" Opera House 10-11

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" begins its engageemnt at the New Opera House House Friday.

Nothing like this wonderful Attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It will be given exactly as it is being presented in New York City where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill the stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of coutnry roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great Generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreemnt for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A frantic's bullet stills the heart whic beats so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate tan war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafter. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the re-union of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narratie. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

Jacksonville Mount Pleasant Texas Marg

THE EVENING TELEGRAM

Abraham Lincoln signing call for volunteers. Scene "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Masonic Opera House Mount. Three nights, beginning Monday, March 20. Matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

319

Texas

THE TAYLOR DAILY PRESS

The Wounded Colonel In "Birth Of A Nation" Opera House 10-11

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the New Opera House, Fri- and Saturday, March 10, and 11, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron," but I have carried you about with me for years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To-day the fine flower of Southern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation" does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil War and reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

Jacksonville Sun Democrat

The Birth of a Nation

"The Birth of a Nation" is the engagement of four days at the Wells-Bijou commencing Sunday, March 12 when D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle will again [illegible] here. This is the big [illegible] attraction which has broken [illegible] in New York City and has [illegible] credit records runs in Boston [illegible] and on its first visit to [illegible] the story proper 18,000 people [illegible] scenes are seen. The story [illegible] thrilling detail the rebellion [illegible] the rise and fall of slavery [illegible] country bore to the making [illegible] can history.

Seats are now on sale for [illegible] performances. The requests [illegible] from nearby towns are [illegible] during the first engagement [illegible] same scale of prices will [illegible]

Charleston Daily Gazette
March 4th 1916

ination of Abraham Lincoln, one of the big scenes in David W. Griffith's remarkable production, "The Birth of a Nation," which is drawing capacity houses at the Academy of Music this week.

PADUCAH EVENING SUN

The Kentucky—Starting Thursday, March 16, "The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" Coming.

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Kentucky for 3 days starting Thursday March 16 with matinee Friday and Saturday. "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the most widely discussed topics in the country. It established an absolutely new art in the realms of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with music. It also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the same theme as Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The consequences of the Civil War in Southern reconstruction are fully dealt with, and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed the stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures, accompanying music and effects tell the coherent logical and moving story. The [illegible] standard orchestra heard here last fall is carried by the spectacle. Seats for all performances go on sale Monday.

Sterling (Ill.) Daily Gazette 3/10

PHOTO-PLAY IS WONDERFUL FILM

"The Birth of a Nation" Proves a Gripping Testimonial Against All War.

Despite the Criticisms That Are Offered It Teaches a Wholesome Lesson.

Laying aside for the time being the question of whether or not it is a faithful depiction of history before and after the civil war, the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation," which opened a three night and two matinee engagement last night at the Academy of Music, serves one great purpose. It makes war so realistic as to make it so abhorred in the minds of all, that it will be a hard matter for any person to view the three hours of films and ever again be an advocate of war. That is the ostensible object of the picture and in that it succeeds admirably.

The pictures are indeed remarkable, especially the battle scenes, with their exploding shells, charges, trench fighting, and camp scenes. The burning of villages and the suffering caused by the loss of loved ones in the war are displayed in a heartrending manner that strikes home. Then there is of course a love story running through the plot that produces action so stirring and gripping that strange as it may seem the audience is occasionally found cheering the pictures. A large and extremely fine orchestra whose music synchronizes with the various scenes, adds greatly to the realism of the pictures. The film is on such an elaborate, dramatic and spectacular scale that it is entitled to unstinted praise regardless of the criticism that may be offered against its historical value.

The Criticism Offered.

The criticism offered to "The Birth of a Nation" is, of course, the same as is offered against "The Clansman," on which it is founded. Typifying a congressional leader, preceding, during and after the war, as an advocate of mixed marriages, having as a mistress a mulatto who wields an influence sufficient to justify the sub-title, "A Great Leader's Weakness That Is To Blight a Nation," and making the chairman a cripple to caricature, according to the critics, Thaddeus Stevens, is one of the objectionable features in the minds of those who criticise the production. Carrying the point further the picture announces that "The executive mansion of the nation was transferred to this man's residence." Then, of course, follows the elevation of a negro to the position of lieutenant governor and the disfranchising of the southern whites. The colored leader becomes drunk on his new power and rules with an iron hand, finally carrying out the dictates of the white leader to a point where he tries to marry the white man's daughter, who, of course, is loved by the leader of the Ku Klux Klan. The criticism of the northern soldiers is, of course, the dressing up of the colored men in the uniforms of the union soldiers while union officers are termed "Scalawag white captains."

Historical students find fault with the interpretation given by the picture of the organization of the Ku Klux Klan. The negro's lust for white women rather than for the white man's lust to regain lost power is made the justification for the organization, while history, including the report of the courts, calls the Ku Klux Klan a band of outlaws, the pictures depict it as an organization of heroes under religious rights.

As mentioned before, however, the pictures are based on the play "The Clansman," and are probably an accurate portrayal of that work. At the outset the pictures announce that they are not intended to reflect on any race and are presented for the sole purpose of making war abhorrent. With this explanation and the fact that the pictures are indeed remarkable, it seems that the average citizen can view the great spectacle with a spirit of neutrality and leave the theatre feeling high-repaid, especially in view of the fact everything comes out all right as in the story book and "they lived happy ever afterward."

Sterling (Ill.) Standard 3/10

EIGHTH WONDER OF WORLD IS THIS GREAT FILM

BIRTH OF A NATION IS THE NATION'S RESPONSE TO THE HORRORS OF WAR AND THE CRY FOR PEACE

GREAT AUDIENCE AT FIRST NIGHT

WONDERFUL ORCHESTRA, PERFECT PICTURES MARK THE PRODUCTION ON FIRST NIGHT

Peace! Peace! Peace!
Whisper it softly!
Peace!

Peace was the full measure of the message inaudible spoken from the reproduction of the Birth of a Nation at the Academy of Music last night.

The world's greatest triumph is the production of the masterpiece, Birth of a Nation taken from the Clansmen.

It was a great audience that witnessed the wonderful results of labor of months. That brought to this vicinity in a form bordering on reality, the greatest period in the history of the American republic.

History was made during the period reviewed in the Birth of a Nation, and history is refreshed every time that great picture is given to the public.

Those who know of the affairs in the southland declare that there is nothing overdrawn, and every possible effort was made to make the reproduction of the events following the Civil war as real and as truthful as possible.

And then through it all runs that quiet underlying plea for peace, that peace that passeth all understanding.

From the proud Camerons of the south to the hauty Stoneman's of the north. From the intelligent colored to the ignorant white trash, or the hill black of the south.

When truths are brought to our doors, when they are paraded before the naked eye, when in the full light of conciousess, there is displayed the naked truths of the horrors of war, of the reconstruction, then the divine that is within us, clammers for peace.

Such is the message that comes to us in the Birth of a Nation. Every man, woman and child, every child that understands and remembers history, should see the great picture before it leaves this city. The tendency is for a greater nation, a united people, upward, but through it the universal need of at all times being alert, awake to every need and emergency.

The company carried about 25 people. Two motion picture machines, its own machinery a twenty piece orchestra, and the fact is the orchestra is about the best ever heard in this city. It helps to make the pictures a great success.

During the show last night, there were numerous applauses, especially following the period of reconstruction, and finally the call of final peace.

ONE OF THE DECISIVE BATTLES OF THE CIVIL WAR AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," THE MIGHTY SPECTACLE WHICH WILL BE PRESENTED AT THE OPERA HOUSE ALL NEXT WEEK

CHARLOTTE NEWS MARCH 10,

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WAS OUTCOME OF SOUTH'S SECOND STRUGGLE

(By Rev. A. J. Emerson, in Confederate Veteran.)

D. W. Griffith's great photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," is teaching history in a grand, new way. It is showing how false is much that has been passing for history. It shows that the United States was not at first a nation in the accepted sense of that word, but was a union of little republics, living together under a written constitution, a new type of government, the incarnation of democratic principles, not indissoluble, but intended to be perpetual through the good conduct of its members. This noble experiment in free government, intended to be a model for all mankind, was wrecked by internal dissensions. War destroyed the beautiful structure founded on "consent of the governed" and by force welded reluctant peoples into an indivisible nation.

The play shows Abraham Lincoln signing the call on the states for volunteers to march across state lines to coerce certain other states into submission. This was the beginning of the end of the old form of government, "the nation." But the nation was not born in Lincoln's day. His call for volunteers merely broke down and battered to pieces the constitution of Washington and Jefferson to make way for war. Against these unconstitutional and unlawful troops the southern people fought for four years. Lincoln's call for troops was the death knell of the old Union.

After four years of conflict General Lee surrendered at Appomattox, and the war was over. But the new nation was not born at Appomattox. The southern people and many, perhaps a majority, in the north were still dreaming of the Union.

The radical congress, all-powerful, made a demand for a new surrender. The surrender of Lee and his army was not enough. The whole southern people must surrender. They must give up their states. State lines were wiped out. They were put out of the Union and must consent to come back under state governments dominated by carpetbaggers and negroes. The negro race was to be put over the white.

The southern people refused to surrender on these terms, and there was another four years' war, from 1868 to 1872. It is known as the war of reconstruction. The southern army was composed of four hundred thousand men known as the Great White Legion, or Ku-Klux Klan.

How this war was fought is shown in Griffith's wonderful photo play. While there was not so much fighting as in the years of '61 to '65, there was really more distress in the south during the war of reconstruction than in the civil war.

The Ku-Klux Klan carried their point. They upheld the southern people in their refusal to surrender to the demand of the radical congress that they submit to negro domination. They fought until the last vestige of that domination had disappeared. They effected a revolution. They added an unwritten amendment to the constitution of the United States. That amendment reads as follows: "The American nation shall forever have a white man's government."

This is the new nation whose birth is celebrated in Griffith's photo play. It was born about 1871. When this was all accomplished, the Ku-Klux Klan disbanded. It was one of the most remarkable and successful armies that ever campaigned in any age or nation. They were good men and true.

Johnstown Leader Tribune 3/10

SPLENDID ATTRACTION AT ELKS' AUDITORIUM

Johnson and Leicht and their Teddy Bear Girls will be back at the Auditorium today with another ripping comedy and for three full performances. Guy Johnson, better known as "Jack," promises something unusually good for the last bill and patrons of the theater are sure of seeing and hearing something that will be decidedly worth while. There will be new songs by the various singles and teams, new clog dances and new capers by "Jake" and his partners. All in all it is expected this last bill will be the very best of the engagement, for it will be entirely new to this city and will contain many choice bits of late song successes.

Tonight after the first show there will be a chorus girl's contest, this feature having been postponed on Wednesday night because the girls were unable to rehearse their specialties as much as they desired. The girls are greatly interested in this event as cash prizes have been offered by the management to the winners. Some of them have even gone as far as to purchase special wardrobe for the contest tonight. The extra event will cost no additional price and will follow the first show, or about 9 o'clock. Everybody is invited to attend and enjoy an evening of rare pleasure and entertainment.

The usual matinee will be given today at 3.15 and two shows after supper. Tomorrow there will be complete performances.

Charlotte News - 3/10

"The Birth of a Nation."

At the Academy of Music yesterday matinee and night capacity houses again ruled, and "The Birth of a Nation," was hugely enjoyed by the immense crowds.

"The Birth of a Nation" is one o fthe world's greatest sensations, and this fact is known by almost every man, woman and child in this country.

The first half of D. W. Griffith's spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." A complete metropolitan production is on view here. It comprises a company of 50 expert technicians, a complete symphony orchestra, and two baggage cars of effects.

"The Birth of a Nation" is being presented this afternoon and tonight and will be shown again tomorrow afternoon and night. Seats are now selling fast at the theatre box office for all performances and crowded houses are indicated by the heavy advance seat sale.

Charlotte Observer 3/10

"The Birth of a Nation"

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing to crowded houses at the Academy of Music this week at every performance, a striking association with the issues of the day. The great crises of 1861-65 pictured in the play have their parallel in the Americans of today, North and the South in friendly struggle; the tragedy of the Petersburg campaign and of Sherman's march to the sea; Lee's surrender to Grant, and the aftermath of war in the Reconstruction period—all these form a series of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interest. Out of the bloody conflict a new Nation was born, the fire of American patriotism was burned brighter than it had ever been and the play which shows the evolution from the page to the present is being greeted by immense audiences here.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen again this afternoon and tonight, also tomorrow afternoon and night and the advance seat sale indicates four more capacity houses. There are on sale at the theatre box office and there are still some desirable tickets to be had.

Greenville (Tex.) Courier 3/10

"Birth of a Nation"

The famous Griffith spectacle pictured "The Birth of a Nation," with its stirring scenes and the wonderful music of a twenty piece orchestra, will be seen at the Bijou when it opens a four day engagement Monday afternoon. The same show as when seen here before, two performances each day, afternoon and night.

Bayonne (NJ) Times

RCH 10, 1916

REPRODUCED IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, Birth of a Nation," begins its en- ent at the Opera House Monday. will be two performances daily, 5 and 8:15 p. m.

ing like this wonderful attrac- as ever been seen upon the local s. It is given here exactly as it ng presented in New York City the big drama has broken every in the stage history of the first inthe country. In addition it has piled up record engagements icago, Boston, San Francisco and ngeles.

vers a wide range of American y and touches only the highest of interest in the great events d up to and terminated the Civil The force that slavery played in ing this crisis is traced from its on to its abolition. While the theme is historical in its founda- its intent is the fundamental one drama. The forces which make these results have been marshalled a larger scale than was ever d of before. Where directors of pectacles have dealt with hun- in the past Griffith employs nds; 18,000 people fill his stage, has a vast territory for its ound; 3,000 horses pass before ew in wild dashes over miles of roadway. The decisive bat- the Civil War are reproduced in detail and you see these con- fought again just as they were fifty years ago. Cities were up only to be destroyed to lend and verity to the dramatic narra- One enormous battlefield is stretching over an area of ten miles and upon these plains nches 10,000 soldiers clash in warfare that is as real as if e an eyewitness of the actual nce. Holding the great effects is a story as tender and true and romance can be pictured e tears and smiles, noble sac- and heroic deeds of personal Youthful dreams of love's frui- rent asunder by the demons of ne ties snap before the call to d suffering such as cannot be d is depicted in the crude man- history is made when men r erason to passion and engage dlock of armed resistance.

Twin-City Sentinel Winston-Salem NC 3/10

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in Elks Auditorium of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2. scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid, yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Ku Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith clan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Euks' Auditorium, three nights, beginning Monday, March 13, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. Seats are selling rapidly now for all five performances.

3/10 (Dus) SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS

"The Birth of a Nation."

Critics of art and music find as much in "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Grand Opera House Monday night for a week's engagement, to excite their sensibilities, as do critics of the drama. The dramatic appeal, indeed, is reduced to a mathematical demonstration by the Griffith spectacle. No one who sees the frenzies of excitement that pass through the audience, wave after wave, can question for a moment the power of the production from the dramatic standpoint.

From the standpoint of the art of the landscape painter, Griffith must be credited with achievements new in the world of the motion picture. It cannot be the camera alone that gives to the creation of Sherman's march to the sea an atmosphere, as the art critics term it, that differentiates the work of a painter from the work of a photographer. It is a power of selection and grouping that seems instinctive with Griffith and that no other producer possess. Sherman's march is a work of genius as surely as are the vast military canvases of David.

The musical critic finds in the score of "The Birth of a Nation" the same qualities that make the Wagnerian operas so remarkable. His ear is delighted with the constantly recurring themes and motives so truly interpretive of the actions and passions of the personages involved.

And yet, with all the marvelous correctness and technical perfection, the art and the music are as simple and direct and stirring as are the dramatic qualities. Like all works of true genius, "The Birth of a Nation" is universally comprehensible. The "Iliad" of Homer is as easy to read as "Gulliver's Travels," and vice versa. Gulliver is as sure a stroke of genius af Achilles.

Paducah (Ky) Sun 3/10

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation," at the Kentucky Theater Paducah, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 16, 17, 18.

Bayonne (NJ) Times 3/10

GREAT SCENE IN FORD'S THEATRE DURING THE ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCLON SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE OPERA HOUSE ALL NEXT WEEK.

Charlotte (NC) Observer 3/10

Birth of a Nation."
Griffith's great production of a Nation," which is play- olute capacity at the Acad- usic this week, has broken records that it is hard to of them. For the length of d the total attendance it on's record in New York, hicago, Los Angeles, San Atlantic City, Brighton Seattle Wash. These rec ing added to in numerous where the big spectacle g up unprecedented to sub- its marvelous popularity. h of a Nation" will be seen playhouse again this after- e last performance will be ht. The demand for tick- s crowded houses. There me excellent seats to be ht's performance, which tly at 8:30.

3/10 Paducah (Ky) Sun-Democrat of a Nation" Returns to the Kentucky.

of artistic achievement film, but impossible for drama" is illustrated by theatre scene in "The Nation" which comes to y for three days starting March 16.
ne is playing "Our Amer- " assisted by E. A. Soth- role of Lord Dundreary. artled out of their mimic shot that Wilkes Booth audience has risen to its at the great statesman has fallen back in the d at the assassin Booth ng from the box to the ose spur catches as he jumps, causing his leg. is sort of m h never been

Mar 10 Ind

EVANSVILLE JOURNAL-NEWS

The Birth of a Nation.

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Wells-Bijou for four days, beginning Sunday, March 12, a thrilling association with the issues of today. The great crisis of 1861-70 as pictured in the play, have their lesson for the Americans of today. The North and the South in internecine struggle; the strategy of the Petersburg compaign and of Sherman's march to the sea; Lee's surrender to Grant and the aftermath of war in the reconstruction period—all these form a series of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interest. Out of the terrible conflict a new nation, united by spiritual as well as geographical ties, was born. The fire of American patriotism never burned brighter than it burns to-day and the play which shows the evolution from the past to the present, will be gladly welcomed upon its return here.

PRODUCING A PLAY ON A STAGE FIVE MILES LONG

AUTO FROM WHICH PICTURES OF THE ONRUSHING KU KLUX RIDERS WERE TAKEN.

SCENE AFTER THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG.

MR. GRIFFITH DIRECTING ACTORS FROM TOP OF SIXTY FOOT TOWER.

D. W. Griffith's Great Idea and How He Worked Out Historically Accurate Battle Scenes With 18,000 Actors and 3,000 Horses

An observing officer of a moving picture corporation was watching rehearsals for a little film drama one morning seven years ago when a complication developed, and it was patent that, as arranged for, the idea, in the language of the stage, would not get over. One of the players in the company, a slender, long-headed man, went up to the producing director and said, "Why don't it be done so and so?" indicating his plan.

The producing director nodded emphatically. "Right!" he said, and it [illegible] upon the observing [illegible] to the always had a little bit of a sore spot over that. I know a little bit more about stage management now, you know. Then short story writing was not extra profitable, and I came back to New York from the country and found the moving picture game growing."

He began writing moving picture scenarios then at $5 and $10 apiece. That was all right if you could turn out enough of them. There are limits, however, to the physical capacity of even such plots as they used in those days, and the young man added moving picture acting to his other work. He went into the company of a corporation, the first one mentioned, studied the game as it was then, saw that it might be made an art and bided his time until the officer heard him make the suggestion to the producing director, whereupon another era was born.

There is no doubt the young manager grew a little more ambitious about that time. The corporation for which he worked had not been particularly prosperous, although today it is worth millions, but there was some [illegible] to [illegible] not to [illegible] on the [illegible]

to talking about details. Palestine and Jerusalem, a great cast, for I had chosen two of the foremost actors in the world—an initial expenditure of thousands—the thermometer dropped. It was madness." He paused. "Do you know it is a little gratifying to me now that within the last few days I have been approached by a syndicate which has asked me to do that very same thing, and they have said that I need not worry about a little thing like $500,000 or $1,000,000 if I need it."

By this time it is apparent Griffith had swung into his stride, and a year ago, or a little more came "Judith," using about 2,000 people, where they built forty foot concrete walls, wide enough to have a battle on.

Then came "The Clansman." It seems that the chief producing director, as Mr. Griffith was, changed from one company to another, and according to reports he did so at a salary that would pay the President's yearly salary of $75,000 and more. He wouldn't talk about that. In any event, he had not worked long before he had the Dixon book handed over to him to [illegible] He read it and lost interest in [illegible] were professors of colleges, were asked to work out the correct historical data. There were interviews with veterans of the civil war on most important points, recourse to maps and reports down at Washington and finally a patient county by county tour of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and North Carolina until Piedmont was discovered.

Then came the location of the battlefields, after which the veterans with their maps went forth to lay out a battlefield just as it was at Petersburg and just as it was in part during the march of Sherman's army from Atlanta to the sea. Where approved territory was found the experts went to work upon it.

If a road wound this way, if there was a brook or a river or a house or a barn, that road, brook, house and barn were found or put in. If a town was needed along came an architect with his corps of builders, and they put it up just as some gray haired old man remembered it.

They remembered burnings, and a town, two towns, were put in—five altogether were built. One man remembered the burning of a town by night. Something must be done about that. A firework man said he could build [illegible] exploding to the air. [illegible] Complete telephone systems were [illegible] And the [illegible] that by the time he had finished his long term of study Mr. Griffith did not use a scrap of paper, a book or scenario, yet he had arranged it all in his mind.

Ford's Theatre Reproduced In Actual Size and Five Southern Towns Built and Burned For the Sake of a Moving Picture

The great multitude for the flight from Atlanta and the town scenes were not actually under employment longer than two weeks. Then it may be added that the expenses ran far up into the thousands every day.

"The only way we could handle them was by military discipline," said Mr. Griffith. "We laid out a camp for the whites and a camp for the blacks. We set up two commissaries. Then we divided our forces into sections, each section commanded by a captain, who had his staff under him. That is how the picture was worked out.

"Every section leader in the big battle scenes or the town scenes kept his section, rehearsed it and looked after it. [illegible] was ready, and to the beat of a watch under telephone orders the action began. The air filled with smoke—the soldiers appeared as if in a real fight.

Trains of panic stricken refugees wound over the hills in flight, and then they stopped.

"We used the greatest number in all the scenes where they appear without reference to the position the pictures appear in the production," said Mr. Griffith. "That is always done. The multitudes were taken first and gradually the number was cut down until at last we had only the principals in their scenes.

"Some of the scenes which appear in order today were taken three or four months apart. That made more trouble, but it had to be done that way. You must remember exactly what the individual did the first time in order to preserve uniformity, exactly how he or she wore a hat, entered a house, [illegible] the hair, or did anything [illegible]

[illegible] that $2 movie [illegible] man addressed in the studio [illegible] years before, the man who said he had a few little ideas to work out.

He was Griffith then, now he is David Wark Griffith, for whom even the most surfeited regular dramatic critic had words of praise when that movie had its first night in New York and of whom also other men who study and observe rather than direct declare that he has raised the film drama to an art with a capital A and that he has unfolded new possibilities, uncovered in hitherto unsuspected fields.

In brief, Mr. Griffith took "The Clansman," a novel by the Rev. Thomas Dixon, and from it evolved an ambitious spectacle for the camera in which, working on a stage roughly speaking five miles long and two miles deep, he employed altogether 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses. He delineated battle scenes conducted according to the records preserved in the War Department at Washington, using artillery, cavalry and infantry as they were used in a real battle of the civil war.

His artillery duels were real artillery duels, his cavalry charges were passed by the men who participated in such a charge fifty years before. His men died as men had died in the trenches of the South, and they suffered just as the men who did suffer said they had. He built or caused to be built no less than five complete Southern towns, faithful to the last architectural detail, and he burned three of them.

He massed and handled great mobs as history said the real mobs acted. He reproduced one theater exactly life size and delineated the great national tragedy of the assassination of President Lincoln just as history says it occurred. He built the legislative halls of a Southern State and with an actual still photograph as a model brought back to life a scene in that chamber fifty years ago. Above all, throughout two hours and forty minutes he ran the threads of a love story.

Thus it was that Mr. Griffith leaned back in his chair puffing contentedly at an after luncheon cigar, taking his first vacation in about fourteen months. He was at that moment digesting, among other things, four questions which would take several hours to answer.

"Who are you?"

"Where did you learn how?"

"How did you do this?"

"What will come after?"

Mr. Griffith told how he was born in Kentucky some thirty odd years ago, the son of Jacob Wark Griffith, a brevet Brigadier General of the Confederate army. His family comes near to being eligible for about all the patriotic societies, for his grandfather was Captain Daniel Griffith of the war of 1812.

[illegible] year a leading man.

Something else happened. In an odd moment on the road the young actor had written a short story or two and some verses. He came back to New York and sent them to a magazine, which promptly accepted them. Then he wrote a play, "The Fool and the Girl," and James K. Hackett took it. Another great romantic drama was begun and its acceptance promised. This was in the latter part of 1906 and the early part of 1907.

"That ended the stage for me," he explained. "No more of the hardships. I was going to be an author and draw down royalties. I woke up in about five months.

"The Hackett play failed, and I have [illegible]

Then came "The Merchant of Venice," rather ambitious; "A Blot in the 'Scutcheon," "Enoch Arden," a somber fancy; "Lines of White on a Sullen Sea," all of which led up to "Oil and Water," written by Mr. Griffith himself. A little more ambition and then came "A Corner in Wheat," the first pictures of which were modeled directly on Millet's "Gleaners," and the audience liked that.

"Just about that time," he put in, "it came to me that a wonderful thing could be done with 'The Life of Christ.' The divine tragedy has a universal appeal, and adequately done with reverence it could not fail of approval." He laughed. "I submitted my idea, and it was approved, but when I got [illegible] the history of the country—reconstruction. There was a chance to show what the South thinks of Lincoln; there was a chance to show that the negro of the South did not of his own volition degenerate into the human being who made the Ku Klux Klan necessary, but rather he was seduced by the unscrupulous adventurers, who exploited a situation for their own selfish ends.

"There was nothing of race in my idea, and may I say there is nothing of race antagonism in my production. It is simply the pictorializing of an epoch."

Taking the book, reading it and dreaming about it, however, did not do the work. There were eight months of incubation. First three men, and they [illegible] cult, but tedious. You see we advertised in the newspapers that we want so many persons, men, women and children. We established employment bureaus, so to speak, and made our selections."

"How about the negroes?"

"They were the easiest. The negro is a natural actor, and I do not mind saying that among the 4,500 of them we took out of the fields, out of the shops and from every other place we found some with remarkable talent. A producer some day may put forth the tragedy of the negro on the film—he will find men and women of that race fully competent."

Of course, it was explained, they did not use the 18,000 persons all the five or six months they were actually photographing the drama. While it is true [illegible]

The headquarters alluded to in the battle scenes was a sixty foot tower in front of the whole scene. It was there that George W. Bitzer, "best camera man in the world," Mr. Griffith says, and five assistants set their cameras. Every scene, it may be said, was taken six times.

Finally when every move of every section had been gone over again and again in rehearsal, when the soldiers knew when to charge or fall back, when to die or drop, even when the artillery knew the exact second when to wheel into action and the cavalry had its time schedule perfect, even to the exact place where a horse must stumble or fall, the section leaders came to headquarters.

Back in the hills the thousands were waiting. They dashed back to their commands. Word came that all [illegible] or did anything else [illegible] gray hair. Then we had [illegible] few little stunts.

"You [illegible] negroes are shot and [illegible] Ku Klux come into the town. [illegible] horses jump over them as they lie [illegible] the street. It took considerable [illegible] suasion to get men to do that, although the horses and their riders were [illegible] best trained obtainable. We took [illegible] up with some men. 'Boss, we won't do that for less'n $5 a day,' they said. They got it.

"Take another case in the guerilla invasion of the town. It may be recalled that a man shot falls from the roof of a front porch head first on [illegible] ground. Many think the fall is made by a dummy. A real man does it and practiced it in a fire net until he got his fall just right, timed exactly [illegible] it had to be done to fit in with the scene.

"There is one case where a rider coming out of a house makes a flying leap into the saddle over the tail of his horse. That took time, and it does not show, but the man who did that had to jump over a railing encumbered by a robe.

"Many things were done in the work that do not appear in the film. There are twenty-five field guns in the battle scene pounding away, and they were too far away for the eye of the camera. Houses are burned of which you catch only a vague glow, people are fleeing over the hills and you can hardly see them."

The actual work was all over in five months, Mr. Griffith said. From their first camp they went to California for interiors and the honeymoon scenes, the allegories and theater scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln.

"The theater was the exact size of Ford's in Washington," Mr. Griffith explained, "and it was an exact duplicate. Old prints gave us every detail even down to the appearance of Laura Keene and her company in 'Our American Cousin.' We sought long before we got a man who could satisfy us as President Lincoln, and every man who became a member of his Cabinet was required to look like the original in size and general makeup.

"It was there that detail became almost overpowering. Men who lived in the old days were besieged. How did this man walk; how did he gesture; how did he wear his clothes; did he have any mannerisms? I tell you it kept a great many people awake nights. We took the famous painting of the surrender of Lee, and we never laid it down until I believe that every man in it had an exact double before our cameras."

Thus it all came out. There were more months as the film was perfected and made ready for the public. But at last it was done.

"Now what is the future of the moving picture?"

The man being interviewed lifted his hands. "Why, there are no limits to its possibilities in artistic work. This is only child's play."

MR. GRIFFITH, CONSULTING WITH G. A. R. VETERANS FOR DETAILS OF SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA, AMPLIFIED HISTORICAL RECORDS WITH INTERESTING REMINISCENCES.

THE TAYLOR DAILY PRESS

ENES FROM "BIRTH OF A NATION" OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT TOMORROW MATINEE AND NIGHT--CURTAIN 2:15

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the New Opera House, Friday and Saturday, March 10, and 11, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says about with me for years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

the little Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron," but I have carried you

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are actresses of the stage. Griffith, director of "The Nation" does most of the took eight months to War and reconstruction sie Stoneman figure scenes from the early end of reconstruction riage to Ben, Lillian an idle moment.

effective playing the entire gamut of romance from the lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art form of drama spectacle with music.

The Birth of a Nation has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama to be presented in a regular theatrical way and at the usual first class scale of two dollar top prices. No advance will be made on these prices on tour. The fact that one and a half million people have already witnessed it, and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half of a year in the simultaneous productions of New York, Chicago and Boston, prove that the biggest claims in its behalf are justified by the popular verdict. Despite opposition at various times, it should be added the Birth of a Nation has been passed by censor boards everywhere, upheld, when attacked, by decisions of courts of record; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any entertainment ever offered to public. In brief, it has rallied to support all friends of free art and those whose bigotry would the re-enactment of the history.

ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as can not be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance. You see the war start, after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace, and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Its lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the [illegible] where sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood. A wonderful work of [illegible] accompanies the [illegible] so as [illegible] upon a [illegible]

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.

sonal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work In "The Birth of a tion" Has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, Is Gen-, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

RE is a human interest story n Griffith, who has screened n American epic. His work known to millions, but the self is not known. He has self back of the camera, out icture, but now that he has oadway sit back and look at at Broadway prices and has o called classes to drop their classics and join the masses rie" exhibition, the blue stock- men of books rise to inquire ner of man is he.

irst place, Griffith was born nge, near Louisville, Ky. He ive and has a strain of the blend of the canny Scot and ng Irishman that came down rom his overseas ancestry times in his climaxes. His red under Lee in the Civil the man who now stands at of his profession in this nd perhaps the world, has e spirit of the old South-stages the great outdoors the purr of a kitten with f artillery, runs the whole otion in his film portraits he gets the heartbeats of the orator. He had de- nd opera when he looked career, but he found his for the speaking stage. nds say he was better rage as an actor, but he stage for two years and ce with a film company. he began to develop his et his grip on the psy- world of make believe.

of Dramatic "Pep."

stions his dramatic in- "puts over" his scenes. fan knows that. But work! He takes excel- himself and is a bunch He has speed and pow- wastes energy. Work- y at his side, one won- ever going to let up. losely one sees that he rain, just as in the big Birth of a Nation" the relieved by a flash of golden grain or kittens p a player to the high- ous energy, and when right key he relaxes. as a fad it is relaxa- ation is work, and he in dancing. There is long Broadway that turned down an offer of a restaurant cab- eek to perform in the irector enjoyed the he did not tell the ouldn't afford to take r came at the close day of hard work in rested by dancing it.

ive feet ten inches es no superfluous by when off duty. eral short stories, absolutely to the ooks upon it as the e fine arts, and he a fine appreciation or of good music. tuations in blend- er. It was this at- plied the musical of a Nation." In uring months when finishing touches to n he correlated nd unconsciously tunes and chords rt of the wonder- has synchronized g action. These n the fly, as it riffith was work- finish his work the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Tone Colors.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

D. W. GRIFFITH

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only 52 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

An effort will be made to hold the rise of the curtain until 2:45 on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon for "The Birth of a Nation" so that school teachers and pupils may see this production.

There are fourteen companies playing "The Birth of a Nation" in the United States at the present time, one company in Canada, one in England, one in Australia and one in South America.

D. W. Griffith, who invested a million dollars in "The Birth of a Nation" and who was called a fool by every theatrical man in the world, will probably make from five to ten million dollars on his "foolish" investment.

The success of "The Birth of a Nation" is credited by Mr. Griffith, its owner, to advertising. He spent ten thousand dollars advertising the picture before it was ever shown publicly and ever since then he has spent money lavishly in advertising it in every city and town in the country. Every form of advertising is used but the newspapers are depended upon for the most effective work.

The Amuzu will come in for its share of publicity next week because of the excellence of its program. On Monday "The Strange Case of Mary Page" will attract hundreds of picture lovers. Later in the week two famous pictures featuring the stars of "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown as well as another picture featuring Valeska Surratt.
al publications. It has gained wide publicity and when the picture starts here next Monday at the Amuzu that house ought to be packed from early till late.

Practically the entire membership of Salem Academy and College will see "The Birth of a Nation" either on Tuesday or Wednesday matinee, half the girls going each day. Special trolley cars have been engaged for the two afternoons.

The curtain for "The Birth of a Nation" is advertised for 2:30 on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons and at 8:15 on all three nights. The performance runs full three hours at every performance.

3/11 - City Sintry
Winston-Salem Jnl 28

BIRTH OF A NATION SHOWN HERE NEXT WEEK

The next attraction at the Auditorium will be D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins on Monday, March 13, and is for 3 nights and two matinees. Tuesday and Wednesday March 14 and 15.

This is the great production which is still making record run of over 600 performances in New York City where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over two million people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the east. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of half a million dollars.

The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme but a myriad of details illumine the narative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an operatic score which carries recurent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of forty travels with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has build his story. The conflict which this question caused is reproduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things which are a part of war.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a three nights engagement next Thursday evening at the Academy of Music, Durham, with matinees Friday and Saturday, March 16, 17, 18. The first class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts and a complete traveling organization of fifty people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make the Birth of a Nation the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than the Clansman play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of reconstruction, Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the president in Ford's theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the south—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of part two, which has been styled the second struggle between the north and south, a struggle caused by the attempts to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered states. The wild adventures and achievements of the Klu Klux Clan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of southern and northern sweethearts.

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny armies of the theatric boards. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four of five; far flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux rides right out in the open, which surpass in thrills any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a short cast drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of Mae Bush as Flora, in particular rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details, the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of the outdoor nature; his marvelous quiet, yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from the lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art form of drama spectacle with music.

The Birth of a Nation has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama to be presented in a regular theatrical way and at the usual first class scale of two dollar top prices. No advance will be made on these prices on tour. The fact that one and a half million people have already witnessed it, and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half of a year in the simultaneous productions of New York, Chicago and Boston proves that the biggest claims in its behalf are justified by the popular verdict. Despite opposition at various times, it should be added the Birth of a Nation has been passed by censor boards everywhere, upheld, when attacked, by decisions of courts of record; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any other entertainment ever offered to the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and all those whose bigotry would deny the re-enactment of the world's story.

The Cannon Ind
Capital 3/10

WORLD'S GREATEST PLAY IS PLEASING LARGE NUMBERS

Large Attendance Thursday Night and Full House This Afternoon at Grand Matinee.

MANY GOOD SEATS READY

Large Number of Choice Seats Remain For Balance of Performances, Tonight, Saturday Matinee and Night.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which opened a three days engagement at the Grand opera house last night attracted a capacity house at the initial performance. Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it was presented in New York, Chicago, and other cities where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country.

"The Birth of a Nation" covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the tragic theme is historical in its foundation, its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshaled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacles have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. Eighteen thousand people fill his stage, which has a vast territory for its background. Three thousand horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the civil war are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged fifty years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battle field is shown stretching over an area of ten square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as can not be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance. You see the war start, after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace, and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Its lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land a mere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood. A wonderful score of operatic music accompanies the narrative and all done upon a most not accept the offer by March 17, another proposition will be made by J. M. Walls, the manager of Schober.

ORT

D SCHOBER HAVE RRANGING BOUT

"Rather than leave town without a match with Brown at 158 pounds, we will wrestle him and give the receipts to the Baptist Sanitarium fund," said Walls last night.

"I do not think that Brown is according us fair treatment," he continued. "Though neither Schober nor myself put up the $1,000 the money is there—all that Brown asked for.

"Brown can hardly expect those who put up the money to care to risk it on a match at which there is no gate, for they would be left without a return in case Schober was defeated. The ten contributors figure on getting their money back at the gate in case of a loss. Naturally they will not listen to a benefit match. After ten days have passed they will draw down their purse if Brown has not answered by that time. Then I will make Brown a proposition to wrestle him and donate the receipts to some good cause."

JUDGE CHUSHER PASSES AWAY

Former Resident of This County Passed Away at His Home in California

Georgetown Sun.

At one time there was no man in Williamson County better known than Judge D. S. Chesher. For many years he was county judge, and ran the fiscal affairs of the county most successfully.

Judge Chesher was born in Tennessee eighty one or two years ago. He studied and practiced medicine and after he moved to Georgetown he continued the practice of his profession. Afterwards he studied law, and, as stated above, was electe

MUST PREP SC FOR

The Annual Conv
Texas Good Roads A held in Taylor next Friday, March 16th a first big convention t ever had, and we tru man, woman and child take personal pride i the delegates are prog

At this time there i way to tell how many visitors there will be.
pects are that it will b gathering.

First of importance suitable sleeping place may want them. If th large as is anticipated of the homes of Taylor open their doors to ou course every one furnis expected to charge wha ble for it—but no mor

If you have a spare could rent out at this appreciate it very much once telephone to Fre
New Phone 150 and Ol
Give him, or the young office, your name, your dress, the number of bed let the committee rent for how much you will want
Of course we cannot any one roomers, but we cure them for you if poss

CURTAIN 2:15

MARCH 11 ... DAILY ... WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.

sonal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work In "The Birth of a tion" Has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, Is Gen-, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

ERE is a human interest story n Griffith, who has screened in American epic. His work known to millions, but the self is not known. He has self back of the camera, out icture, but now that he has adway sit back and look at at Broadway prices and has called classes to drop their classics and join the masses le" exhibition, the blue stock-en of books rise to inquire er of man is be.

irst place, Griffith was born ge, near Louisville, Ky. He e and has a strain of the blend of the canny Scot and Irishman that came down his overseas ancestry es in his climaxes. His under Lee in the Civil man who now stands at his profession in this perhaps the world, has pirit of the old Southges the great outdoors purr of a kitten with tillery, runs the whole in his film portraits ts the heartbeats of orator. He had de-era when he looked r, but he found his the speaking stage. ay he was better as an actor, but he for two years and th a film company. an to develop his grip on the psy-f make believe.

tis "Pep."

dramatic in-his scenes. that. But takes excel-is a bunch ed and pow-ergy. Work-ide, one won-g to let up. sees that he as in the fig Nation" the a flash of or kittens

o the high-, and when relaxes. relaxa-and he there is y that n offer at cab-in the the the take close k in cing feet ten inches no superfluous when off duty. ral short stories. absolutely to the ks upon it as the fine arts, and he ne Colors.

fine appreciation of good music. ations in blend-It was this at-d the musical a Nation." In months when hing touches to he correlated d unconsciously nes and chords of the wonder-synchronized action. These the fly, as it ith was work-ish his work e whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as supertine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

D. W. GRIFFITH

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only 52 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

An effort will be made to hold the rise of the curtain until 2:45 on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon for "The Birth of a Nation" so that school teachers and pupils may see this production.

There are fourteen companies playing "The Birth of a Nation" in the United States at the present time, one company in Canada, one in England, one in Australia and one in South America.

D. W. Griffith, who invested a million dollars in "The Birth of a Nation" and who was called a fool by every theatrical man in the world, will probably make from five to ten million dollars on his "foolish" investment.

The success of "The Birth of a Nation" is credited by Mr. Griffith, its owner, to advertising. He spent ten thousand dollars advertising the picture before it was ever shown publicly and ever since then he has spent money lavishly in advertising it in every city and town in the country. Every form of advertising is used but the newspapers are depended upon for the most effective work.

The Amuzu will come in for its share of publicity next week because of the excellence of its program. On Monday "The Strange Case of Mary Page" will attract hundreds of picture lovers. Later in the week two famous pictures featuring the stars of "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown as well as another picture featuring Valeska Surratt.

al publications. It has gained wide publicity and when the picture starts here next Monday at the Amuzu that house ought to be packed from early till late.

Practically the entire membership of Salem Academy and College will see "The Birth of a Nation" either on Tuesday or Wednesday matinee, half the girls going each day. Special trolley cars have been engaged for the two afternoons.

The curtain for "The Birth of a Nation" is advertised for 2:30 on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons and at 8:15 on all three nights. The performance runs full three hours at every performance.

3/11 - City Sintry Winston-Salem N.C.

BIRTH OF A NATION SHOWN HERE NEXT WEEK

The next attraction at the Auditorium will be D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins on Monday, March 13, and is for 3 nights and two matinees. Tuesday and Wednesday March 14 and 15.

This is the great production which is still making record run of over 600 performances in New York City where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over two million people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the east. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of half a million dollars.

The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme but a myriad of details illumine the narrative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an operatic score which carries recurent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of forty travels with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has build his story. The conflict which this question caused is reproduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things which are a part of war.

Winston-Salem Journal
March 11, 1916

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK

Many of the critics who have been earnest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Elks Auditorium. Seats are selling now.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard' Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to devedop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by Music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The absolute so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African. Slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Buffalo Evening News

MARCH 11, 1916.

Star Theatre.

It is important for intending patrons of The Birth of a Nation now at the Star Theatre, to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate a week from today. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow which will inaugurate the fourth week of the very successful stay here but fourteen performances remain in which to view this wonderful spectacle one local popularity as manifested by attendance of 50,000 people in three ...s, shows no abatement of interest. So ... elements enter into the success of the masterpiece ...omantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might ...e tedious. But it should be said that ... music accompaniment of the pictures ...racing folk song national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's famous compositions, as well as the original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted, an orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production. The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet bagger ...gro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and ...e Gray.

Despite ...

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS MONDAY AT OPERA

Premier performance, March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hal, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox, Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses and 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 15,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which every real shell—costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular travelling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand district and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every Board of Censors with one exception in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, Governors of States, Judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatrical entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and pathos of history's greatest moment, illustrating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the nation reborn as the result of war between the States and Reconstruction.

Matinee performances will be given every day.

THE WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL

Ballroom Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Coming to the Auditorium Next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Seats on Sale This Morning at 10 o'clock.

M.P. News Mar. 11 16

SOUTH AMERICA WILL SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

South America is to see "The Birth of a Nation." A. M. Beatty, who will be in charge of the production, will leave New York, March 18, for Buenos Ayres, where the Griffith spectacle will have its first presentation in the Southern continent.

Other South American cities will be booked after the run, and the engagement will last five months. Beatty will be accompanied by George Bothwell.

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—STAR.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's famous historical spectacle will come to Proctor's Grand for a return engagement of one week commencing Monday afternoon, March 20. Matinees will be given daily. The seats will go on sale next Monday morning. The same production, including the symphony orchestra of 30, that 20,000 people saw here in January will come here again.

No theatrical presentation in a decade has created the wide discussion or proved so universally popular as this masterpiece of pictorialized drama.

In Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburg and other large cities of the country, it has established new records for length of run and daily attendance.

Music supplies the absence of speech for the 12,000 feet of film that depicts the thrilling romance of the Civil war and the reconstruction period of the Southland. Its magnitude may be judged from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses were utilized in the creation of this drama, which cost half a million dollars. Two love themes weave throughout the dramatic narrative.

MARCH 11, 19...

RECONSTRUCTION SCENE ... "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The scenes of reconstruction in the South shown in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Star theater, are of historical value. Some of the most striking are those showing the meeting of the South Carolina legislature, that body was controlled by negroes. In the House there were 87 members with only 17 white, the minority of whites 10 were carpetbaggers and scalawags. It was a society was turned upside down, place of the control of the democratic statesmen was the most ignorant democracy the kind ever witnessed. For a time barbarism had overcome civilization, the force of numbers. The days rioting in the halls of the legislature.

James S. Pike, a prominent abolitionist and therefore an impartial eye witness, wrote of these times in his valuable book, "The ... State."

"At some of the desks sat negro men whose type it would be hard to find outside of Congo; their costumes, visages, attitudes and gestures only befit the forecastle of a buccaneer."

The result was the organization of the Ku Klux Klan and the redemption of the South from the negro rule. This picture of ... the most vivid in "The Birth of a Nation." About the same time Ulysses S. Grant, who had made an official visit to South Carolina, in his report to President ...

"The presence of black men ... ly slaves, demoralizes him. The slave seems imbued with the idea that the property of his master belongs to him, or at least he have no protection from the soldier."

The progress made by the ... since reconstruction days is ... "The Birth of a Nation," ... at Hampton Institute, Virginia.

ST. LOUIS TIMES

A Scene During Filming of THE BIRTH of a NATION. Now at the Olympic

PIC: "Birth of a Nation."

Griffith's mighty dramatic spec- "The Birth of a Nation," com- the second week of the return ent and the fifteenth week of in St. Louis within six months. ympic Theater tomorrow aft- with performances twice daily , as usual. This is an as- record when one considers the s entertainment is still draw- secret of the success lies per- he fact that it appeals to both d old, and not only relates a romantic love story that is full and surprises, but also pic- ith wonderful truth so many g historical matters concern- civil War and Reconstruction the characters of Gens. Grant are admirably portrayed, and the average man's conception two great national heroes.

11, 1916. Buffalo N. News

Durham (NC) Herald 3/11

D. W. GRIFFITH

Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's Grand week ... March 20

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

irth of a Nation."

iant for patrons who in- "The Birth of a Nation" eater to take note of the engagement in this city terminate a week from means that commencing performances tomorrow, augurate the fourth week successful stay here, but ices remain in which to nderful spectacle whose ity as manifested by an 50,000 people, shows no interest. So many ele- into the success of this ama that a detailed of its many notable t prove tedious. But it that the music accom- the pictures, embracing national airs, engaging , excerpts from some most famous composi- as original works adds to the enjoyment of the alf hours of entertain- his score, which is so e development of the interesting story, will nterpreted, a symphony is made a feature of of this Griffith mas- scenes and incidents ar on a scale of num- and vividness new to in America. The sec- torial chonicle of re- in the South, includ- gger negro excesses triumph of the Ku- woven with the romance of the

D. W. GRIFFITH, PRODUCER OF THE BIRTH OF A NATION, PRODUCED TODAY'S FEATURE ATTRACTION

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

David W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, following its record breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Academy of Music next Thursday, March 16th. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

The Birth of a Nation tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Clan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great forces and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out of doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and three thousand horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome of Ku Klux Clan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the servants in the master's hall—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The passage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well earned laurel of having created a new art, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor, whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gisg, as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann, as the mulatto lieutenant colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegrade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all resuects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to re-adjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

The Birth of a Nation will be seen at the Academy of Music, Durham, for three nights, beginning Thursday, March 16th, with matinees Friday and Saturday.

Albany (NY) Democrat Journal

Daily Times (Troy) Commercial 3/17

TRULY A GREAT PRODUCTION

"The Birth of a Nation" Being Greeted by Capacity Houses at the Grand — 2 More Performances.

D. W. Griffith's great spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," which is appearing at the Grand opera house, bids fair to establish new records at that playhouse. Capacity houses greeted the production Thursday night and again on Friday afternoon and night, and there is every reason to believe that the audience will, if possible, be even larger at the closing performances this afternoon and tonight.

One who witnesses this splendid production, can clearly understand why it has had such record-breaking runs in the larger cities of the country and why it is greeted with capacity houses everywhere. It is indeed an epoch-making spectacle, carrying one back to the early slave days and unfolding to the eyes in a pleasing, thrilling, and highly entertaining manner, the important historical epochs in the development of our great nation.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music, the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literal thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters: slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of the Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march; the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender; the assassination of President Lincoln; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime, all pass in review before the thrilled spectator, and through it all runs a thread of love interest.

Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

The report that all seats are sold is entirely unfounded and every one who desires to should see this superpicture while it is here today.

Winston-Salem Journal
March 11, 1916

BIRTH OF A NATION" AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK

Many of the critics who have been earnest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Elks Auditorium. Seats are selling now.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard' Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to devedop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by Music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The absolute so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African. Slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Buffalo Ex. Commercial

MARCH 11, 1916.

Star Theatre.

It is important for intending patrons of The Birth of a Nation now at the Star Theatre, to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate a week from today. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow which will inaugurate the fourth week of the very successful stay here but fourteen performances remain in which to view this wonderful spectacle whose local popularity as manifested by attendance of 50,000 people in three weeks, shows no abatement of interest. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might be tedious. But it should be said that music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk song, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted, an orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production. The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

Despite ... are ju... shou... tion ha... everywh... by deci... orsed ... ion story...

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS MONDAY AT OPERA

Premier performance, March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hal, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes, 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Conferedate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular travelling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand district and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every Board of Censors with one exception in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, Governors of States, Judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatrical entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation re-born" as the result of war between the States and Reconstruction.

Matinee performances will be given daily.

Winston-Salem (N.C.) Journal

THE WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL

Ballroom Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Coming to the Auditorium Next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday Seats on Sale This Morning at 10 o'clock.

M.P. News Mar. 17-16

SOUTH AMERICA WILL SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

South America is to see "The Birth of a Nation." A. M. Beatty, who will be in charge of the production, will leave New York, March 18, for Buenos Ayres, where the Griffith spectacle will have its ... presentation in the Southern continent.

Other South American cities will be booked after the run, and the engagement will last five months. Beatty will be accompanied by George Rothwell.

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—STAR

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's famous historical spectacle, will come to Proctor's Grand for a return engagement of one week commencing Monday afternoon, March 20. Matinees will be given daily. The seats will go on sale next Monday morning. The same production, including the symphony orchestra of 30, that 20,000 people saw here in January will come here again.

No theatrical presentation in a decade has created the wide discussion or proved so universally popular as this masterpiece of pictorialized drama.

In Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburg and other large cities of the country, it has established new records for length of run and daily attendance.

Music supplies the absence of speech for the 12,000 feet of film that depicts the thrilling romance of the Civil war and the reconstruction period of the Southland. Its magnitude may be judged from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses were utilized in the creation of this drama, which cost half a million dollars. Two love themes weave throughout the dramatic narrative.

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" now at the theater, to take note of the fact that engagement in this city will positively terminate a week from today.

This means that commencing with two performances tomorrow which inaugurate the fourth week of the successful stay here but fourteen performances remain in which to view wonderful spectacle whose local popularity as manifested by an attendance of 50,000 people in these weeks shows no abatement of interest. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of many notable features might be tedious. But it should be said that music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk song, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and a half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted, a symphony orchestra of thirty is made a feature of the production. The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the south, including the carpet bagger negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

Courier Express

MARCH 11, 1916.

RECONSTRUCTION SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The scenes of reconstruction days in the South shown in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Star theater, are of historical value. Some of the most interesting are those showing the sessions of the South Carolina legislature when that body was controlled by negroes. In the House there were 78 colored members with only 46 whites; of this minority of whites 32 were carpetbaggers and scalawags. It was as if society was turned upside down. In place of the control of the old aristocratic statesmen was the rule of the most ignorant democracy that mankind ever witnessed. For a time barbarism had overcome civilization by the force of numbers. The slave was rioting in the halls of his former master.

James S. Pike, a prominent abolitionist and therefore an unprejudiced eye witness, wrote of those days in his valuable book, "The Prostrate State."

"At some of the desks sit colored men whose type it would be hard to find outside of Congo; whose costumes, visages, attitudes and expressions only befit the forecastle of a buccaneer."

The result was the organization of the Ku Klux Klan and the redemption of the South from the horrors of misrule. This picture of history is one of the most vivid in "The Birth of a Nation." About the same time General Ulysses S. Grant, who had made an official visit to South Carolina, wrote in his report to President Johnson:

"The presence of black troops, lately slaves, demoralizes labor. The late slave seems imbued with the idea that the property of his late master belongs to him, or at least should have no protection from the colored soldier."

The progress made by the negro since reconstruction days is shown by "The Birth of a Nation," views taken at Hampton Institute, Virginia.

ST. LOUIS TIMES

A Scene During Filming of "THE BIRTH of a NATION" Now at the Olympic

OLYMPIC: "Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's mighty dramatic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," commences the second week of the return engagement and the fifteenth week of the play in St. Louis within six months, at the Olympic Theater tomorrow afternoon, with performances twice daily thereafter, as usual. This is an astounding record when one considers the crowds the entertainment is still drawing. The secret of the success lies perhaps in the fact that it appeals to both young and old, and not only relates a gripping romantic love story that is full of thrills and surprises, but also picturizes with wonderful truth so many interesting historical matters concerning the Civil War and Reconstruction period. The characters of Gens. Grant and Lee are admirably portrayed, and realize all the average man's conception of those two great national heroes.

ARCH 11, 1916.

Buffalo Evening News

D. W. GRIFFITH

Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's Grand week ... March 20

A COMEDY SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE STAR

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

Star.—"Birth of a Nation."

It is important for patrons who intend to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Star theater to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate a week from today. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow, which will inaugurate the fourth week of the very successful stay here, but 14 performances remain in which to view this wonderful spectacle whose local popularity as manifested by an attendance of 50,000 people, shows no abatement of interest. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk song, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted, a symphony orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production.

The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chonicle of reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger negro excesses and the rise and trimuph of the Ku-Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

Durham (NC) Herald 3/11

D. W. GRIFFITH, PRODUCER OF THE BIRTH OF A NATION, PRODUCED TODAY'S FEATURE ATTRACTION

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

David W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, following its record breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Academy of Music next Thursday, March 16th. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

The Birth of a Nation tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Clan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great forces and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out of doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and three thousand horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweet harmonies of love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome of Ku Klux Clan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the servants in the master's hall—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a living, breathing garment. The marriage of this music to the film beat of all entitled the producer to his well earned laurel of having created a new art, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor, whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gisg, as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann, as the mulatto lieutenant colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegrade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all resuects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to re-adjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

The Birth of a Nation will be seen at the Academy of Music, Durham, for three nights, beginning Thursday, March 16th, with matinees Friday and Saturday.

Albany (Ga.) Herald

TRULY A GREAT PRODUCTION

3/17

"The Birth of a Nation" Being Greeted by Capacity Houses at the Grand — 2 More Performances.

D. W. Griffith's great spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," which is appearing at the Grand opera house, bids fair to establish new records at that playhouse. Capacity houses greeted the production Thursday night and again on Friday afternoon and night, and there is every reason to believe that the audience will, if possible, be even larger at the closing performances this afternoon and tonight.

One who witnesses this splendid production, can clearly understand why it has had such record-breaking runs in the larger cities of the country and why it is greeted with capacity houses everywhere. It is indeed an epoch-making spectacle, carrying one back to the early slave days and unfolding to the eyes in a pleasing, thrilling, and highly entertaining manner, the important historical epochs in the development of our great nation.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music, the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literal thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters: slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of the Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march; the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender; the assassination of President Lincoln; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime, all pass in review before the thrilled spectator, and through it all runs a thread of love interest.

Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

The report that all seats are sold is entirely unfounded and every one who desires to should see this super-picture while it is here today.

Winston-Salem Journal
March 11, 1916

BIRTH OF A NATION" AT AUDITORIUM NEXT WEEK

Many of the critics who have been interest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Elks Auditorium. Seats are selling now.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard' Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to devedop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by Music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The absolute so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African. Slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Buffalo-Ex. Commercial

MARCH 11, 1916.

Star Theatre.

It is important for intending patrons of The Birth of a Nation now at the Star Theatre, to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate a week from today. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow which will inaugurate the fourth week of the very successful stay here but fourteen performances remain in which to view this wonderful spectacle whose local popularity as manifested by attendance of 50,000 people in three weeks, shows no abatement of interest. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might be tedious. But it should be said that music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk song, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted, an orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production. The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

Despite

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS MONDAY AT OPERA

Premier performance, March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hal, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes, 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Conferedate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular travelling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand district and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every Board of Censors with one exception in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, Governors of States, Judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatrical entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the manliest and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation reborn" as the result of war between the States and Reconstruction.

Matinee performances will be given every day.

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—STAR.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's famous historical spectacle will come to Proctor's Grand for a return engagement of one week commencing Monday afternoon, March 20. Matinees will be given daily. The seats will go on sale next Monday morning. The same production, including the symphony orchestra of 30, that 20,000 people saw here in January will come here again.

No theatrical presentation in a decade has created the wide discussion or proved so universally popular as this masterpiece of pictorialized drama.

In Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburg and other large cities of the country, it has established new records for length of run and daily attendance.

Music supplies the absence of speech for the 12,000 feet of film that depicts the thrilling romance of the Civil war and the reconstruction period of the Southland. Its magnitude may be judged from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses were utilized in the creation of this drama, which cost half a million dollars. Two love themes weave throughout the dramatic narrative.

THE WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL

Ballroom Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Coming to the Auditorium Next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday Seats on Sale This Morning at 10 o'clock.

M.P. News Mar. 18-16

SOUTH AMERICA WILL SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

South America is to see "The Birth of a Nation." A. M. Beatty, who will be in charge of the production, will leave New York, March 18, for Buenos Ayres, where the Griffith spectacle will have its first presentation in the southern continent. Other South American cities will be booked after the successful engagement which will last five months. Beatty will be accompanied by George Bothwell.

THE BUFFALO EVENING

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" now at the theater, to take note of the fact that engagement in this city will terminate a week from today.

This means that commencing with two performances tomorrow which inaugurate the fourth week of the successful stay here but fourteen performances remain in which to view wonderful spectacle whose local popularity as manifested by an attendance of 50,000 people in three weeks, shows no abatement of interest. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of many notable features might be tedious. But it should be said that music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk song, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and a half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted, a symphony orchestra of thirty is made a feature of the production. The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the south, including the carpet bagger negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

Buffalo Courier

MARCH 11, 1916.

RECONSTRUCTION SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The scenes of reconstruction days in the South shown in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Star theater, are of historical value. Some of the most interesting are those showing the sessions of the South Carolina legislature when that body was controlled by negroes. In the House there were 73 colored members with only 46 whites; of the minority of whites 32 were carpetbaggers and scalawags. It was an inverted society was turned upside down. In place of the control of the old aristocratic statesmen was the rule of the most ignorant democracy that mankind ever witnessed. For a time barbarism had overcome civilization by the force of numbers. The slave was rioting in the halls of his former master.

James S. Pike, a prominent abolitionist and therefore an unprejudiced eye witness, wrote of those days in his valuable book, "The Prostrate State."

"At some of the desks sit colored men whose type it would be hard to find outside of Congo; whose costumes, visages, attitudes and expressions only befit the forecastle of a buccaneer."

The result was the organization of the Ku Klux Klan and the redemption of the South from the horrors of misrule. This picture of history is one of the most vivid in "The Birth of a Nation." About the same time General Ulysses S. Grant, who had made an official visit to South Carolina, wrote in his report to President Johnson:

"The presence of black troops, lately slaves, demoralizes labor. The late slave seems imbued with the idea that the property of his late master belongs to him, or at least should have no protection from the colored soldier."

The progress made by the negro since reconstruction days is shown by "The Birth of a Nation," views taken at Hampton Institute, Virginia.

ST. LOUIS TIMES

A Scene During Filming of THE BIRTH of a NATION. Now at the Olympic

OLYMPIC: "Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's mighty dramatic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," commences the second week of the return engagement and the fifteenth week of the play in St. Louis within six months, at the Olympic Theater tomorrow afternoon, with performances twice daily thereafter, as usual. This is an astounding record when one considers the crowds the entertainment is still drawing. The secret of the success lies perhaps in the fact that it appeals to both young and old, and not only relates a gripping romantic love story that is full of thrills and surprises, but also picturizes with wonderful truth so many interesting historical matters concerning the Civil War and Reconstruction period. The characters of Gens. Grant and Lee are admirably portrayed, and realize all the average man's conception of those two great national heroes.

ARCH 11, 1916.

Buffalo Evening News

D. W. GRIFFITH

Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's Grand week ... March 20

A COMEDY SCENE IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE STAR

FFALO EVENING NEWS

Star—"Birth of a Nation."

It is important for patrons who intend to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Star theater to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate a week from today. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow, which will inaugurate the fourth week of the very successful stay here, but 14 performances remain in which to view this wonderful spectacle whose local popularity as manifested by an attendance of 50,000 people, shows no abatement of interest. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk song, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted, a symphony orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production.

The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chonicle of reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger negro excesses and the rise and trimuph of the Ku-Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

D. W. GRIFFITH, PRODUCER OF THE BIRTH OF A NATION, PRODUCED TODAY'S FEATURE ATTRACTION

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

David W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, following its record breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Academy of Music next Thursday, March 16th. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

The Birth of a Nation tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Clan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great forces and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out of doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and three thousand horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of martial rapture, or the welcome of Ku Klux Clan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the servants in the master's hall—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a living, breathing garment. The marriage of this music to the film has of all entitled the producer to his well earned laurel of having created a new art, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor, whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gisg, as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann, as the mulatto lieutenant colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegrade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all resuects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to re-adjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

The Birth of a Nation will be seen at the Academy of Music, Durham, for three nights, beginning Thursday, March 16th, with matinees Friday and Saturday.

Albany (N.Y.) Evening Journal

TRULY A GREAT PRODUCTION

"The Birth of a Nation" Being Greeted by Capacity Houses at the Grand — 2 More Performances.

D. W. Griffith's great spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," which is appearing at the Grand opera house, bids fair to establish new records at that playhouse. Capacity houses greeted the production Thursday night and again on Friday afternoon and night, and there is every reason to believe that the audience will, if possible, be even larger at the closing performances this afternoon and tonight.

One who witnesses this splendid production, can clearly understand why it has had such record-breaking runs in the larger cities of the country and why it is greeted with capacity houses everywhere. It is indeed an epoch-making spectacle, carrying one back to the early slave days and unfolding to the eyes in a pleasing, thrilling, and highly entertaining manner, the important historical epochs in the development of our great nation.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music, the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literal thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters: slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of the Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march; the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender; the assassination of President Lincoln; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime, all pass in review before the thrilled spectator, and through it all runs a thread of love interest.

Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

The report that all seats are sold is entirely unfounded and every one who desires to should see this super-picture while it is here today.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT GRAND

SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS: MARCH 12, 1916

"Birth of a Nation" at Grand This Week

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, which at the climax of its second triumphant tour of Texas, opens a return engagement of a week at the Grand Opera House tomorrow night, is the largest and most important theatrical production in the history of the American stage, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, whilst the wizard of the screen unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the States, and the reconstruction of the Southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part, and that the staging of this great outdoor drama cost half a million dollars.

Before the startled gaze of the spectator [illegible] the battle of Petersburg, with [illegible] of bursting bombs and the roar [illegible] cannon. Sherman marches to the sea and burns Atlanta, while women and children tremble and weep. Lee and Grant meet and shake hands at Appomattox, in token that the terrible struggle of four years is at an end. The South goes to work to rebuild itself under the fostering hand of Abraham Lincoln, and then the spectator is transferred to Ford's Theater and witnesses the tragedy that gave the South over to the rule of the carpet-baggers. To offset this rule, the Ku Klux Klan is organized, and 3,000 knights of the invisible empire ride off on their deeds of vengeance and mercy. Throughout runs a story of romance based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," that perhaps has never been surpassed for dramatic power in the history of the American stage.

Five States and one foreign country contributed to the scenery of "The Birth of a Nation." The greater part of the film spectacle was made in California, where the clear, pure atmosphere echoes even the softness of the tones under Italian skies for the production of photographic effects.

But, in order to make this photodrama exactly accurate, Mr. Griffith took a number of his players overland from California to the Carolinas and Virginia. This was particularly the case for some of the woodland effects and for the scenes in the cotton field, that win enthusiastic applause from Texas audiences. Never before in film drama has the beautiful, silky texture of the cotton blossom been so practically treated.

One big scene was taken in Mexico, where the wild ruggedness of the land was better adapted to Griffith's purpose than the California landscape. Another big scene extended through the California border into Nevada.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Mr. Griffith utilized a full operatic score for the first time in its true relationship to the enlargement of his varied themes. It is the Wagnerian idea fitted to the screen drama, and the synchronization was so perfectly adapted to this story that it becomes a very important part of the epical form of the narrative. The score was arranged by Joseph Carl Breil, who will be remembered for his beautiful songs introduced into "The Climax." Mr. Breil spent months with Griffith while he was taking the picture and caught his thematic ideas in snatches of tunes that Griffith would hum while he was working out his big dramatic ideas.

Griffith, who had thoroughly saturated his mind with the history and traditions of the period of Civil War and Reconstruction, had not neglected the music, and his mind, which is perhaps the most poetical in the moving picture world today, found the old tunes of love and romance and war telling their part of the story. The finished score, as it came finally from the pen of Mr. Breil, is one of the most unusual ever devised. Persons around the theater who have seen the picture two or three times can readily follow the screen drama while in the lobby by listening to the music. Some enthusiastic music lovers have even expressed the opinion that the score is half the production.

Birth of a Nation to Play Return Engagement at Grand Opera House

Scene in Piedmont, S. C., at the outbreak of the Civil War in "The Birth of a Nation" which opens a three days engagement at the Grand Opera House this evening. Two performances will be given both Friday and Saturday.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angles Studio recently remarked on the film Director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith" he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know khether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark is verified particularly in watching Mr. Griffith's assembles of the multitude in the scenes of war and pease in "The Birth of a Nation" The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The affect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages one near the camera and the other remove lal out 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principels are stationed on the near stage then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the hazy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer like, the joy of a fiesta in the land of Eutopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment in "The Birth of a Nation" of a contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wan, skeleton-like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordiness. Some of the lean emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled up victims of a battle field. Arms are raised in entreaty to heaven. Bodies, legs and arms, and as it were shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiated from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad". But that is not how it impresses the spectators who sense one mighty thought re Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" in "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Ur to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL
3/12

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is a reporter's notebook sketch of events, and there is a sordid of money in it.

k of three girls still in their who are piling up annual in- of over $100,000 in the aggre- The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae and Miriam Cooper, who play minine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played world of parts and is known as we as Miss Marsh, who is beloved millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in this land, which means they earn these sa aries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in "pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat,

BIRTH OF A NATION has "gone done it again"—upset all prece- y returning to the same enormous that made the original engage- the Olympic Theater the talk of try. D. W. Griffiths has not only d a masterpiece, but a perennial as well, which will duplicate its year after year. There is a weird on to the story and a thrill to climaxes that the public revel in go over and over again to ex- When a man can produce any- this nature in any line of the nt business, purveying to the ublic, his fortune is made. are being sold for the future The Birth of a Nation, and, if nd keeps up, there is no telling "limited engagement" will end.

Durham Herald 3/12

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Star

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me hat there really is no occasion for urprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all t is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we ntended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at one out of twenty players who chosen for the part. How well he counterfeited the appearance and ma erisms of the martyred President is videnced by the compliments his work s received.

President Lincoln.

Buffalo Times 8/12

THE BEST IN THEATRICAL ATTRACTIONS--BIG FEATURES AT THE HOUSES THIS WEEK

GENERAL U. S. GRANT.
As Pictured in "The Birth of a Nation."

JUST BEFORE THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG—CONFEDERATES ASSEMBLING.
Scene from "The Birth of a Nation"—Star.

LILLIAN GISH.
In a Tense Scene from "The Birth of a Nation"—Star.

Winston-Salem (NC) Journal 3/2

TARHEEL BOY WRITES VERY INTERESTINGLY OF GREAT PICTURE HERE THIS WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Elks' Auditorium here this week, is most interestingly described by Ned McIntosh, a former North Carolina boy, who is now making good in the journalistic world with the Atlanta Constitution.

Mr. McIntosh is known personally to the Trinity College men in this city, his criticism follows:

Ancient Greece had her Homer. Modern America has her David W. Griffith. It was for Homer to show the glory and the grandeur and the heroics of war. It is for Griffith to show the horrors and hideousness and hell of it. So moves the world on apace!

Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Atlanta theater last night and was seen by one of the largest audiences that ever crowded through the doors of the Atlanta theater. Never before, perhaps, has an Atlanta audience so freely given vent to its emotions and appreciation as last night. Spasmodic at first, the plaudits of the great spectacle at length became altogether untrestrained. The clapping of hands was not sufficient, and cheer after cheer burst forth. He who gets standing room at "The Birth of a Nation" during the remainder of this week which the pictures plays here will be lucky.

It makes you laugh and moves you to hot tears unashamed. It makes you love and hate. It makes you forget decorum and forces a cry into your throat. It thrills you with horror and moves you to marvel actually live through the greatest period of suffering and trial that this country has ever known.

To say that "The Birth of a Nation" is based on "The Clansman" is corrected as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough. Griffith takes Dixon's teapot-tempest and build a tornado.

The art on conception of the man is wonderful.

With such scenes as a kitten and a puppy playing together, Griffith, in the beginning, relaxes the imagination and makes the mind forgetful of any preconceived idea or prejudice concerning the picture.

From this mental attitude, almost of dalliance, Griffith awakens the memories of childhood; warms the heart with romance; quickens the pulse with patriotism; forces the exultant cheer fro mthe lips in the midst of great battles; turns the heart sick with scenes of bloodshed; dims the eyes with tears for woman's sufferings; relieves the tension of emotions with a timely humorous incident; makes you tremble for the peril of a mother passing through the lines to reach a wounded son; interests you with a faithful reproduction of Ford's theater and the assassination of Lincoln—and when Griffith has done all these things he has just begun!

You are ushered into an antechamber in Washington where a misguided man is plotting a black regime among white people—where a mulatto woman dreams of empire. You live through a period of ruin and destruction in the country where you were born. You see the plot executed and that same country humiliated and crushed under a black heel. Passing happiness is shattered by the arrogance of ignorance. You sicken at the sight of an attempt to enforce marital racial equality. Again and again the unbearable hideousness of the days of reconstruction is borne in upon you. History repeats itself upon the screen with a realism that is maddening. You could shriek for a depiction of relief and—yes, retribution. Thus, over and over, does the picture grind and pound and pulverize your emotions.

But the end is not yet.

The insufferable reason for the Ku Klux Klan has been shown. Next with a wealth of detail and an intimate knowledge that is astonishing, Griffith brings the spectral army into being before your eyes.

Omit these details of dangerous and mysterious night meetings of men, and of the perils of women secretly making strange white garments with crosses embrazoned upon them.

Come then an appointed night when two men—men and horses garbed in white from head to hoof—ride out from behind an ordinary country barn that you have seen a hundred times and canter off down the road. At the top of a hill they stop. One holds high a cross of fire. Upon a distant hill other figures catch the signal. Now a group of white-clad horsemen has foregathered. The scene shifts to a great open field at night. There is a blood-curdling trumpet blast from the orchestra pit, pitched in a minor key. A troop of white figures upon spirited horses dashes at breakneck speed into the picture and wheels into position. There is a cheer from the audience. Comes another blood-curdling trumpet call and another troop and than another and another and another. Men grimly determined upon a last desperate chance to rescue women and homes and civilization from an unspeakable curse are gathering for the work at hand. At hand as far as the camera's scope can gather is assembled a vast, grim host in white. Now more troops—they are a little late you think they have come a long distance—wheels into place right in the camera's very eye.

The Little Colonel, hero of the story, and such a hero!—takes his place at the head of the white multitude. Again the trumpet blast. The Little Colonel rises in his stirrups and holds aloft a cross of fire. The host moves forward.

The awful restraint of the audience is thrown to the winds. Many rise from their seats. With the roar of thunder a shout goes up. Justice at last hand! Retribution has arrived!

The scene is indescribable.

"The Birth of a Nation" is built to arouse your emotions, and it does it. It is designed to educate you, and it does so more than many hours of studying books. It is not designed to arouse your prejudices, and if you are fair-minded and not preconceived it will not do so.

Any mention of "The Birth of a Nation" however is not complete without comment on the picture alone. The picture is not all. There is with the picture an orchestra of a score or more pieces and it is a good orchestra. The music is wonderfully adapted to the picture. The score of an opera could not more perfectly express the sense of the lines than does this music interpret the situations, thought and spirit, of "The Birth of a Nation." When the theme is love the music breaths romance. From a lullaby the music surges upward to the crashing crescendo of battle in the next scene. Comes now the wild, barbaric strain of half breed lust and unbridled ambition. When you would resent the tears of the picture, the orchestra will not let you. When you would be silent under the tremendous strain of the situattion on the scene, the orchestra wrests a cry from your throat.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been criticised and attempts have been made to suppress it. If history should be suppressed in schools for children "The Birth of a Nation" should be suppressed in a theater of thinking people. The picture is vindicated by historical facts, and does not attempt to misinterpret or warp these facts for the purpose of dragging from their graves prejudices that have been dead long since.

The world has long waited for the American Hugo who could write the "Les Miserables" of the war between the States. Many writers have tried and failed. But the great novel of the Civil War has at last arrived—and when it got here it was a motion picture and not a book!

Olympic Theater.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's masterpiece of the unspoken drama, will open the second week of the return engagement at the Olympic Theater with the matinee performance to-day. This makes the fifteenth week of this marvelous spectacle in St. Louis within six months. The celebration of the two hundredth performance will be Tuesday night. It is useless to query the reasons why this wonderful record has been achieved. Whether it is due to the historical incidents with the big spectacular battle scenes, the romantic love story so fascinatingly pictured or the beautiful musical accompaniment, it matters not; the fact still remains that "The Birth of a Nation" has broken records not only in St. Louis, but all over the world.

Lauder to Combat "Birth of a Nation" in Two-a-Day

ST. LOUIS REPUBLIC: SUNDAY, MARCH 12, 1916.

One of the many tense scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Star theater all this week. The assassination of President Lincoln, reproduced with exact fidelity. Booth leaping from the presidential box after firing the fatal shot. The inserted picture shows the death ride of the Ku-Klux Klan.

STAR—"BIRTH OF A NATION."

This afternoon "The Birth of a Nation" enters upon its last week at the Star theater. Every performance so far has been witnessed by an audience that tested the capacity of the theater. More than 50,000 people have seen this great spectacle during the last weeks and the indications are that the Star will not be able to accommodate all that will want to see it this week.

The local popularity of the peace is the story of its success everywhere, north, south, east and west attest to its wide patriotic appeal, its faithfulness to historical detail, its truth, magnitude and charm.

No writer has ever been able to tell so vividly, so convincingly the story of the Civil War and Reconstruction period as D. W. Griffith has in his photoplay masterpiece.

There are thousands of scenes and still more thousands of people and horses. Great armies fight their battles upon real fields; a whole city burns before one's very eyes; regiments fight hand-to-hand battles in the trenches; mobs surge up and down city streets. The vastness of the spectacle cannot be comprehended from description; one must see the picture in its entirety, then will one realize why "The Birth of a Nation" is the tremendous success it is everywhere and why everybody wants to see it. The engagement will positively close next Saturday night. Owing to the demand for the picture by other cities it will be impossible to show it here again this season.

MARCH 12, 1916.

BUFFALO EXPRESS,

AT THE STAR.

The Birth of a Nation Enters upon Its Last Week.

This afternoon The Birth of a Nation enters upon its last week at the Star theater. Over 50,000 persons have seen this spectacle during its Buffalo engagement.

The local popularity of the piece is a repetition of its success everywhere, North, South, East and West attest to its wide patriotic appeal, its magnitude and charm.

There are thousands of scenes and thousands of persons and horses. Great armies fight their battles upon real fields. A whole city burns before one's very eyes. Regiments fight hand-to-hand battles in the trenches. Mobs surge up and down city streets. The vastness of the spectacle cannot be comprehended from description. One must see the picture in its entirety to realize why The Birth of a Nation is the tremendous success it is everywhere and why everybody wants to see it. The engagement will close on Saturday night. Owing to the demand for the picture in other cities it will be impossible to show it here again this season.

3/12

ILLUSTRATED BUFFALO EXPRESS.

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."—At Star Theater again this week.

3/12

BUFFALO SUNDAY TIMES

STAR THEATER

"The Birth of a Nation" to Continue for Another Week. Fourth Week of Great Film Production.

This afternoon "The Birth of a Nation" enters upon its last deek at the Star Theater. Every performance so far has been witnessed by an audience that tested the capacity of the theater. Over 50,000 people have seen this great spectacle during the last few weeks and the indications are that the Star will not be able to accommodate all that will want to see it this week.

Th local popularity of the piece is the story of its success everywhere, North, South, East and West, attest to its wide patriotic appeal, its faithfulness to historical detail, its truth, magnitude and charm.

The engagement will positively close next Saturday night. Owing to the demand for the picture by other cities it will be impossible to show it here again this season.

Albany Cty 3/12

KNICKERBOCKER PRESS.

LINCOLN SLAYING FILM MASTERPIECE

Griffith Used Smallest Details of Assassination in the "Birth of a Nation."

A play within a play is a form of dramatic construction which has often been utilized by dramatists since the early days of the drama. Perhaps the earliest, at least the most notable utilization of this detail, so far as the English speaking stage is concerned is the player scene in Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

The most pretentious scene of this kind ever shown is pictured in David W. Griffith's drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which is to play a return engagement at Proctor's Grand theatre.

Griffith's scene is the reproduction in historic and dramatic detail of Ford's theatre, Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth. Though but an incident in the story of this spectacle, this scene is complete within itself. From a technical viewpoint, it is one of the most interesting achievements in the annals of the American stage.

Largest "Studio" Scene.

In the language of the motion picture production, it is known as a "studio scene" and it is the largest interior set ever built for a motion picture story. To the last detail the scene is an exact reproduction of Ford's theatre at the time of the tragedy.

Among other works consulted for historical facts was Nicolay and Hay's "Abraham Lincoln, A History." It will be recalled that the authors of this history were Lincoln's private secretaries during his terms as president. Other interesting and necessary details were furnished by old prints, promptbooks of the play, "Our American Cousin," the piece in which Laura Keene was appearing the fateful night; surviving actors of the cast of this comedy, and eye witnesses of the tragedy.

The entire scene was most painstakingly arranged. This explains the clean cut manner in which it is all reproduced. The scene also fixes the time of the shooting accurately, and contradicts the general impression that the fatal shot was fired from the stage. As near as could be judged after weighing the consensus of opinions, Booth entered the front of the theatre a minute or two before 10 o'clock that night.

Close Attention to Detail.

It was figured out that it took him about thirteen minutes to move about and work his way to the rear of the presidential box without arousing suspicion. It was in this way that the time of the shot was set at 10:13.

The detail showing the adjoining box being only partly filled is explained by history. This box was to have been occupied by General and Mrs. Grant, but the latter prevailed upon the famous general to leave Washington that day.

An example of the thoroughness of Mr. Griffith's work is the picture portraying Booth's leap from the presidential box after he had fired the fatal shot. The distance covered in this leap was twelve feet. The actor playing Booth, Raoul Walsh, had to be most carefully rehearsed, particularly in order to reproduce the important detail of Booth's spur catching in the flag that draped the box. Booth's fall, which resulted in his fracturing his ankle, was occasioned by one of his spurs catching in the flag.

John Henabery is the actor who portrayed President Lincoln. He was the one out of twenty players who was chosen for the part. How well he has counterfeited the appearance and mannerisms of the martyred President is evidenced by the compliments his work has received.

"BIRTH OF NATION" GETS RETURN DATE

Will Play Again at Grand Theatre for An Entire Week.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which 20,000 persons saw in Albany, in January, will play a specially arranged return engagement of one week at Proctor's Grand theatre, commencing Monday afternoon, March 20. Matinees will be given daily. The seats will go on sale tomorrow.

This film masterpiece is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Clan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil war and Reconstruction.

Some idea of its remarkable popularity may be gained from the statement that in the past twelve months it has played to more than 6,000,000 persons throughout the United States. In every small city where it has appeared, as well as the large cities like Boston, Washington, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Pittsburg and St. Louis, it has won new records for length of run and amount of attendance.

In New York city, in the ten months of its stay at the Liberty theatre, it played 304 consecutive performances thereby outdistancing all preceeding theatrical runs in the metropolis.

The same production, including the symphony orchestra of thirty, that was at the Grand before, will be seen there again.

THE SAN ANTONIO LIGHT

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT GRAND FOR A WEEK

CONFEDERATE CHARGE AT PETERSBURG IN "The Birth of a Nation"

LILLIAN GISH.

THE MOTHER'S APPEAL TO LINCOLN.

"SAKI" AT GRAND TONIGHT; "BIRTH OF NATION" NEXT

With the closing performance tonight of "Saki," the Grand will begin a week's return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," which produced such a furore on its first appearance here. Following "The Birth of a Nation," Lyman H. Howe's new Travel Festival showing entirely new pictures, will be seen at the Grand, March 13 to 22, with a matinee daily. The new travel festival shows Alpine peaks, vistas and scenes in Glacier National park, the Firth of Forth bridge, picturesque Midets and other scenes of similar kind. A trip in an aeroplane and stirring scenes aboard a torpedo boat during a heavy gale are also shown. Relaxation is contributed by the comedy cartoons always a distinctive and enjoyable feature of the Howe pictures.

Shows South's Reconstruction.

"The Birth of a Nation," which begins a week's return engagement at the Grand Monday night, is based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," but tells the story of the reconstruction of the south in a manner a thousand times more vividly than is possible in the words of any wielder of the pen.

As a prelude to reconstruction, David W. Griffith, recognized master of film drama, depicts in detail the scenes of the more terrific scenes of the conflict that rent a nation asunder. Griffith, a southerner himself, is the son of an officer in the Confederate army, understands the passions and aims of the south, and for the first time in fifty years he has made others understand them, and take them home unmistakably to their hearts.

On the massive Griffith screen, the battle of Petersburg is fought; Sherman marches to the sea and storms Atlanta; Lee and Grant meet and shake hands at Appomattox; Lincoln is assassinated in the crowded Ford's theater; the South Carolina Legislature, elected by the carpetbaggers, meets and passes pernicious laws, tending to degrade the Aryan south; the southerners arise in their might, forming an "invisible empire, and the Ku Klux Klans ride swiftly forth on their deeds of vengeance and mercy. Throughout all, there runs a tender story of romance.

Great Battle Is Staged.

In staging the great battle scenes in the earlier portions of "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith employed many novel appliances to get his effects. For the first time in the history of motion picture art, he utilized the telephone extensively. Griffith, in person, handled thousands upon thousands of players in a single scene, directing them by wire. In order that the telephone lines might not become entangled about the feet of horses and men in the mimic battle, Griffith laid them underground, making connections with all parts of the field, which was five miles in extent. He had a switchboard of ten wires directly in front of him, and in this way kept in touch with his lieutenants in every part of the great conflict.

The great battle scenes were also the first ever taken by a motion picture camera at night.

Mississippi-Blätter, Sonntag, den 12. März

MAE MARSH
Olympic

Olympic

Der anhaltend starke Besuch des Olympic-Theaters während der letzten Woche beweist, daß die St. Louiser sich (an Griffith's großem Bilderdrama The Birth of a Nation" dem achten Weltwunder) noch keineswegs satt gesehen haben. Es gibt Bücher, die man immer wieder lesen kann, ohne sie langweilig zu finden. Jedesmal findet man etwas neues, eigenartiges, was man nie vorher beobachtet hatte. Genau so bei Griffith's Meisterwerk. Griffith versteht es, in The Birth of a Nation", die Schrecken des Krieges in einer Weise zu beschreiben, die dem Zuschauer zu verstehen gibt, wie schön es ist, im Frieden zu leben.

Der erste Teil von „The Birth of a Nation" beschäftigt sich ausschließlich mit den Schrecken und Wirren des Bürgerkrieges, während der zweite Teil die Umwandlungen im Süden nach dem Kriege darstellt. Dieser zweite Teil ist auf Thomas Dixon's Novelle The Clansman" aufgebaut worden. Verbunden ist dieser Teil mit einer reizenden Liebesgeschichte, welche die endliche Aussöhnung zwischen Nord und Süd symbolisiert. Dem Zuschauer treten die Helden und Heldinnen des Stückes mit einer so lebendigen Charakteristik vor Augen, daß er vermeint, ein tüchtiges Theaterstück und nicht ein Wunderwerk der Kinematographie zu erblicken. Erhöht wird der Reiz noch durch die stimmungsvolle Begleitsmusik, die von einem auserlesenen Orchester vorgetragen wird.

EL PASO MORNING TIMES March 12. 1916

EPOCH MARKING SPECTACLE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS AT TEXAS, MARCH 20

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," following its record breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, will be seen at the Texas Grand theater the week of March 20. This work, apart from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other of the film of the current season.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of flashing literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters: slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of the Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectators.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Cameronsof South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact fac-similes of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $100,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay, now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing Dixie's songs and rhapsodies, anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall,"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well earned laurel of having created a new art, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not been even conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the Clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp, as Lincoln, Lee, and Grant, respectively; George Siegmann as the mulatto lieutenant colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long, as the renegade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh, as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden, as the octoroon housekeeper, Lydia; John Medlyn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell, as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production, as to be seen here, is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theater projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are [illegible] at the evening performances [illegible]

Paducah Sun-Democrat
News-Democrat

The Birth of a Nation

"The Birth of a Nation" will open a three days' engagement next Thursday evening at the Kentucky. The same organization that appeared here last fall, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people, returns for a special engagement of three days at the Kentucky Thursday, March 16, and Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant, the early glories of the Confederacy, the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the south—these passages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthrilled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of [illegible] is devoted to what has been called "the second struggle between the North and South."

Seats go on sale [illegible]

THE KU KLUX CLAN IN ONE OF THE SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" SHOWN AT THE OPERA HOUSE ALL OF THIS WEEK

CATCHY MUSIC IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Art is long, says the poet, and outlasts throne or emperor. Occasionally, however, old art ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the sceptre and remakes the world. This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is being presented at the Opera House all this week with matinees daily.

Mr. Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: a new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

"The Birth of a Nation" is in inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill. New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles crowded for many months the theatres where it was being simultaneously played.

For the first time in theatrical history a motion spectacle is being presented as a regular attraction at regular prices in regular first-class playhouses. The success speaks for itself. The Griffith drama comes here with a baggage equipment of two sixty foot cars, a complete staff including mechanical experts and stage crew, and a large symphonic orchestra regularly carried on tour—a company of 50 people altogether.

The story embraces beautiful romances of the Blue and the Gray; Ben Cameron the Clansman and his Northern sweetheart Elsie; Capt. Stoneman U. S. A., and sweet Margaret Cameron the South Carolina lassie. Among the principals of the largest cast ever assembled for a dramatic entertainment are Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lew, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reed, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Joseph Henabery, Raeul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, John McGlynn, Ernest Campbell, John French, J. A. Beringer. There are plenty of seats left and they are going very fast for the entire week.

BUFFALO EVENING TIMES, WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., THE TWIN-CITY DAILY SENTINEL

STAR—"The Birth of a Nation."

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL

"The Birth of a Nation."

To-day the seats go on sale for the return engagement, next week, of "The Birth of a Nation," at Proctor's Grand. The success of this famous spectacle is more than national in scope, for in Canada and London, England, as well as in this country, the patronage has reached the most amazing figures. No theatrical production of any country or century has given as many performances in ten months as has the Griffith spectacle, nor has been seen by as many people. Without question it is the most widely discussed play of modern times. In every city where it has appeared, the small cities as well as the large ones such as Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, St. Louis, Pittsburg and Los Angeles, it has established, as it has in New York city, a new record for number of consecutive performances given and length of stay. Everywhere crowded houses feature its engagements. In the theatrical world it has made history and demonstrated the fact that it is more popular than the greatest English speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama.

LILLIAN GISH AND THE SENTRY SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT ELKS' AUDITORIUM THREE NIGHTS, BEGINNING TONIGHT. ALSO MATINEES TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY.

SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS

March 13

ORPHANS TO SEE "MOVIES"

Will Be Guests of Grand at "The Birth of a Nation."

All the orphans of the city, Catholic and Protestants, will be guests of the Grand Opera House at the regular matinee Tuesday afternoon. They will see "The Birth of a Nation," the famous moving picture play which was at the Grand for a week several months ago. The boys at the Bexar County Juvenile Home also have been invited by Sidney Weis.

"The Birth of a Nation" aroused much favorable comment wherever it was shown. It deals with the trials of the South during the reconstruction period and shows the work of the famous Klu Klux Klan, or White Caps. A beautiful love story runs through the various reels.

Globe-Democrat

March 13, 1916.

The Birth of a Nation.

Even the old saw will have to be applied to the film at the Olympic, to-wit: "Age cannot wither nor custom stale its infinite variety"; meaning, of course, D. W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation. This truly great film creation has perennial value. It is so rich in detail that its opulence in this particular draw thinking men and women to try to fathom the work's astonishing effect on the beholder.

Above all, it is vivid history that we see unrolled before us. Fifty years after the events we see their faithful replicas shadowed and shadowgraphed.

The Birth of a Nation is more than mere instruction; it is in actuality education of a high order of efficiency. The film remains at the Broadway house until further notice.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT AUDITORIUM TONIGHT

D. W. Griffith is the most talked about, and probably the most sought after man in America. He learned how to plan things, in the making of the 5,000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," or he would be lost. He gallops thru the myriad-and-one business details of a theatrical success without turning a hair or developing the slightest case of "nerve." When the turmoil and the tumult dies, and the hours wax small, his refreshment is the dance or a friendly chat with a round table of chums.

It was said on the first night in New York that only the son of a soldier could have conceived and executed "The Birth of a Nation." As a Kentucky lad, the son of Brigadier-General J. W. Griffith, he drank in the Civil War naratives greedily. As he grew up came the poet's vision of the entire struggle and of Reconstruction Days. In the prime of manhood, awoke the genius to make it a reality.

While planning the Battle of Petersburg, Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a modern telephone switchboard. From it field wires ran to his various sub-generals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anachronism of field telephones in Civil War time.

Thus completely equipped as a modern Joffre or Von Hindenburg Griffith saw everything and telephoned all his instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1861 pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old-fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags, even have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Plainly war, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers. It is hard, grueling continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies are employed. There's everything from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the handgrips of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the Battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "indoor" productions.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Elks' Auditorium, for three nights, beginning tonight. Matinees will be held tomorrow and Wed-

St. Louis-Republic 3/13

"BIRTH OF NATION" STARTS SECOND WEEK OF NEW RUN

Harry Lauder, With More Songs Than Ever, Comes to Shubert Theater To-Day.

"The Birth of a Nation" opened the second week of its return engagement at the Olympic Theater yesterday. A big smattering of two crowds were "repeaters."

Walter Sanford, manager, said that from the first week's business, the Griffith epic appears to have gotten fairly away to another long engagement here.

Mar 13

SAN ANTONIO LIGHT

"Birth of a Nation."

Climaxes roll crest upon crest like ocean waves in a storm in "The Birth of a Nation," which opens a week's return engagement at the Grand opera house tonight. Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln and the mad dashes of the Ku Klux Klansmen are only a few of the giant crests amid the 5000 waves of thrills. As an illustration of the methods of D. W. Griffith, the producer of this mighty spectacle of civil war and reconstruction days, a few words may be said of the staging of the battle of Petersburg. Griffith drilled his regiments, numbering 18,000 men, as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac.

MONDAY EVENING Mar 13 / New Orleans La Item

'The Birth of a Nation' Merits Term 'Eighth Wonder of World'

Big Tulane Audience Aroused to Cheers by Splendid Spectacle

HENRY WALTHALL who plays the "Little Colonel"

D. W. GRIFFITH Producer of "The Birth of a Nation"

When D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" was described as the "eighth wonder of the world," the term was not an exaggeration. The big audience which assembled Sunday night to witness the widely-heralded masterpiece of moving pictures was thrilled by the marvelous triumph of a new art.

It requires super-superlatives to give even a faint idea of the sweep and magnitude of the pictured drama. While its basis is "movies" as we have come to know them the ordinary moving picture and "The Birth of a Nation" compare as do a candle and a huge arc light.

Four of the front rows of the parquette have been partitioned off for the symphony orchestra of 45 pieces which accompanies all of the 5000 scenes which are flashed before the audience.

Tens of thousands of men and thousands of horses are used in many of the scenes. It is said that in several of the reproductions of battles, 20,000 men were used and this is apparently true. There are bombardments and sieges; retreats and charges; battles by day and by night; hand-to-hand encounters and charges with bayonets; and all the grim realities of war. In one scene, "War's Peace," the dead are piled on one another with gaping wounds revealed. Although it suggests the fearful terrors of war, there is nothing offensive in what would appear to be gruesome when badly described.

Lincoln's Assassination

Lincoln, Grant, Robert E. Lee, Sumner, are some of the big figures in the broad phase of the remarkable drama. The assassination of Lincoln is vividly shown. The interior of Ford's theater, with a fashionable audience and the players on the stage actually presenting "Cousin Kate" are shown. President Lincoln and his party are shown and every detail of John Wilkes Booth's murder of the executive is enacted with remarkable fidelity.

Another graphic scene shows a riot in the state house at South Carolina in the days of the carpet-baggers when the negroes in the house were in the majority.

Mr. Griffith is a genius—the Belasco of the motion picture art. The production is perfect. There is not a wasted moment in the twelve reels and the most astounding effects are accomplished without resort to "tricks." In the score of skirmishes and battles and encounters between the Klu Klux Klan horses are seen to drop in their tracks when shot and men plunge from their horses with astounding realism. Many of the scenes, aside from their dramatic action, are exquisitely beautiful. Mr. Griffith has an eye for wonderful pictures. In one instance horsemen are silhouetted on the crest of a hill with the sky reddened by the setting sun as a background.

All Credit to Griffith

Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" in a measure furnishes the basis of the plot of "The Birth of a Nation," but all of the credit for the story in its present form belongs to Mr. Griffith. The company of players includes Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and fifty other well-known movie players, to say nothing of the thousands of thousands who are seen on the screen.

"The Birth of a Nation" takes rank with the greatest dramatic productions of all times. The scale of prices range from 50 cents to $2. "Is it worth $2" is the question that will be asked by many. The answer is that it is worth $2 if any entertainment ever devised by man was. Only a few rows are $2. There are seats to suit any purse.

The Tulane audience is usually staid and conservative, but Sunday night men and women stood and waved their arms and shouted at the top of their voices during some of the scenes.

There will be a matinee daily.

Mae Marsh, ... a leading role in "The Birth of ... now playing the Wells-Bijou.

NEW ORLEANS DAI...

AUDIENCE CHEERS AND WEEPS OVER 'BIRTH OF NATION'

"Liberty and Union, One and Inseparable, Now and Forever!"

The Tulane audience Sunday night gave a mighty cheer as the immortal words of Daniel Webster were flashed on the screen during the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation."

The new North and South, given a better unnderstanding of the war and its horrors in the stupendous production by David W. Griffith, arose as one person when "America" and "The Star-Spangled Banner" were played just before "the end" flashed on the screen.

The patriotism of a New Orleans audience was stirred as never before by "The Birth of a Nation." Old and young, poor and rich, in the gallery and in the choice seats, united in the heartiest cheers and shouts of applause and often wept together.

New Orleans had heard much before about the great Griffith production. It has been shown in nearly every city in the country. It was viewed by record-breaking crowds and forced to stay months in many places. Public schools were dismissed frequently in many cities to give the children a chance to see the most wonderful of historical and educational films.

Record Crowds Are Expected.

And Sunday night at the first run of the masterpiece, a good crowd was present. The prices, it had been thought, would cause New Orleans to hesitate. It was the first time a $2 to 50-cent film play attempted to come into the Crescent City. But, instead of slim houses, there undoubtedly will be standing room only for many weeks.

The play is in two parts, beginning at 8:15 o'clock sharp and ending at 11:15. The intermission is eight minutes. An orchestra of 30 pieces is carried.

Here are a few facts about "The Birth of a Nation:"

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the civil war re-enacted.

Ford's Theater, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 3,000 yards and the Ku Klux costumes 11,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $50 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches; thousands of fighters; "War as it actually is."

Tweelve thousand feet of film in the public pictures represent 100,000 feet of actual photography.

War's Horrors Are Vividly Shown.

Anyone who believes in war should see the show. Morally and educationally, it establishes the futility of war as conflict, is the true press agentment.

The program announces:

"Great care has been taken not to glorify battle. Even the music that in its motif of glorification is sung the note of terror and desolation which is the real truth of war.

"Armies seldom settle disputed questions of state. But where they accomplish this much, in the wake of such arise newer and more terrible questions. But for the hatreds engendered in the civil war, the suffering of the reconstruction period would never have been known."

Here are a few of the notable names in the production. Henry Walthall, Miriam Cooper, Mae Marsh, Joseph Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, J. A. Loringer, Maxfield Stanley, Jessie Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reid, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, William de Vaull, William Freeman and Tom Wilson.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at daily matinees and every night.

New Orleans La

THE TIMES-PICAYUNE, MONDAY, MARCH 1...

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" MOST INSPIRING DRAMA EVER STAGED

Begins Indefinite Engagement at the Tulane—Sam Chip and Mary Marble Head New Orpheum Bill

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable and inspiring drama ever staged. The great film-play opened an indefinite engagement at the Tulane Theater Sunday night and delighted beyond measure a packed house. Pretentious as have been the claims of the advance notices, the photo-drama made good on every assertion because it is undoubtedly the greatest dramatic production ever executed.

It is very unfair to think of "The Birth of a Nation" as a "movie." Conceived and executed by artists on a scale so vast that it gives the auditor a new conception of the historical events it presents, the great film mounts above the motion picture we have known, and transcends even the legitimate drama. We need a new word in the language, a new noun, to apply to this departure in theatrical art.

"The Birth of a Nation" is founded upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and, following the general outline of the Dixon story, not omitting the love theme, it presents the stirring events of the Civil war and the reconstruction. None of the zest and appeal of the romance of "The Clansman" is lost in the film version. If anything, its winsomeness is enhanced.

D. W. Griffiths, who became world-famous through this photo drama which he conceived and staged, has painted with the sure hand of the artist. Some after scene has a charm and beauty that defy description. He runs the gamut of human emotions and plays oftenest on our softer moods, but alternates the cruel with the lovely and the stern with the humorous so a maximum of effect is obtained.

It is difficult to understand the immensity of the production without seeing the film. The press notices say 18,000 persons, 3000 horses and riders and 5000 scenes were used in the film. Having witnessed Sunday night's performance the writer believes every word of it.

Altogether aside from the entertainment feature, "The Birth of a Nation" is of great value from an educational point. No youngster who has progressed sufficiently to have mastered a little American history should be permitted to miss the film, and no "grown-up" who cares to really grasp the score and significance of the event of the era that tried men's souls," can afford to fail of at least one visit to the Tulane.

To attempt any detailed description of a production of such magnitude and scope as this photo-drama would be highly presumptious on the part of the present critic. It must suffice the reader to be told that the film is worth the time and the money of every last man and woman in New Orleans.

Two performances will be given each day, one beginning at 2:15 o'clock and one at 8:15 o'clock. The drama is divided in two parts, an eight minute intermission being allowed. The run requires ... hours.

... very enthusiastic reception given by the crowded houses that ... a new record ... advance sale of the ... begun. ... film ... ably will make ... leans. A heavy ... performances ... South ... of the "S. R. O." ... part of the week.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Texas Grand next week, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the south from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then, with military salute, they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

Mar 13 / New Orleans La

Lex 3/1/13

AH EVENING SUN

Kentucky—"The Birth of a Nation."

en David W. Griffith started utdoor staging of the Civil and Reconstruction scenes iz Birth of a Nation," which will own at the Kentucky 3 days ng Thursday, March 16, mati- Friday and Saturday, he was onted with seemingly insuper- difficulties. An area of private was required about as large as orner of Belgium occupied by Anglo-French forces.

this emergency, the county au- ties of "The Birth of a Nation" cing locale were applied to. finally consented to mark off rea of ten square miles for the of the horsemen. Along all the within this area, the county nissioners posted notices for- ng all traffic on "the day of " Pedestrians were also ed off. But the roads them- did not look Southern. David th handled this difficulty—with authorities' permission—by re- ng such of the highways as d come within the camera's eye. tons of sand and gravel were d by gangs of his workmen. scape engineering changed the of the landscape to the rounded piney woods and deep gullies d North State. The race of the bern clansmen to rescue their h Carolina brethren took place e appointed day, without an ac- t or a flaw. After it was over, Griffith's men scraped the sand he macadam roads, took down signs, and life in the sleepy tryside resumed its normal e. It cost about $25,000 to do trick—the producer thinks it worth all the cost, particularly hearing the enthusiastic com- s of "The Birth of a Nation" ns on his work.

3/3

INGT ON LEADER-

of a Nation Wee kof March 20. official biographer of David W. h, the great motion picture pro- asked for some data and got the r that "he was born in Ken- that he grew up in a house like boys; started out after his school llege days to find his place in orld, and that since he went into siness of producing pictures he ved most of the time under his angely resicent about his person- irs, the creator of "The Birth of tion," to be seen at the Opera next week, (when you know has one of the most interesting alities in the world.

men owe more to their parents he famous director does to Brig- General John W. Griffith and ary Perkins Griffith. The father distinguished command in the rn army. He died when D. W. h was but a lad, nevertheless irth sense of military strategy he boy inherited and the vivid ion of Civil War campaigns that l Griffith used to tell have re- d ever with the son. Mrs. Grif- he mother, was David's best She gave him a good educa- tooled him in the old-fashioned y of Kentucky, and watched his and progress with a whole- love and devotion. Mrs. Grif- ed long enough to see her son fame.

Lexington (Ky) Herald 3/3

E BIRTH OF A NATION."

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and the pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee — Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commanded a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every Board of Censors with one exception in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, Governors of States, Judges, Publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a large number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation re-born" as a result of the War between the States and Reconstruction.

This wonderful attraction comes to the Opera House week of March 20th with daily matinee. Seat sale Tuesday.

Lexington (Ky) Herald 3/13

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Came

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out striking effectiveness in his world mous work. Miss Marsh is red hea and clever far beyond the reach of eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the fi type of blond on the motion pic screen in America. She has been in movies now for several years, be ning under Griffith's direction wh mere schoolgirl. She has pla world of parts and is known as Miss Marsh, who is bel millions as the Maude Adams motion pictures.

These two girls between the over $1,500 a week and have co with the big producing firms land, which means they earn th aries for fifty-two weeks in ever

Miriam Cooper is the newest m of the trio and has only been tures about a year now. She ha forward steadily, and her work i Birth of a Nation" has enhanc earning capacity. Miss Cooper southern type. She is willowy and guid and a pronounced brunette, ing a complete contrast to the bril shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

MARCH 14, ILLINOIS

BIG CROWD AT PLUMB ENJOYES GREAT PICTURE

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS FULL HOUSE AND BIG AUDIENCE IS UNANIMOUS IN ITS VERDICT OF APPROVAL.

SPECIAL PERFORMANCE

In Order to Accommodate All a Second Matinee Has Been Announced for 3:45 on Wednesday.

It was a capacity house which greeted the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Plumb last evening, and the enthusiastic plaudits of the big audience was the best criterion of its appreciation of this remarkable presentation of "The Clansman" in the silent drama.

So great has been the demand for seats the management has announced a special matinee performance on Wednesday afternoon at three-forty-five for school children and adults. The former will be admitted to any part of the house for fifty cents, and the adults for one dollar. Seats will be placed on sale at the box office at twelve o'clock on Wednesday, and this special matinee has been arranged in order to accommodate the large number who have not been able to secure tickets for the other performances for which there are still a few good seats left on the main floor.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Director Griffith has presented a marvellous production, and the splendid cast handles the various roles in the most praiseworthy manner. One of the most thrilling scenes in the entire picture is the formation of the Ku Klux Clan, and later its capture of the negro whose body is thrown on the porch. This together with the finding of the Little Colonel by her soldier brother, after her fatal leap to escape her pursuer, stands out as the most powerful scenes of the drama, for they are the kind that grip the heart, and the rounds of applause they received proved they had "struck home."

Horrors of Reconstruction Period.

There is a touching love story which winds its way through the stirring scenes, creating a keen interest in the fortunes of those around which it entwines, and the horrors of the reconstruction period are faithfully portrayed, as well as many historic incidents which lend dramatic intensity to the scenes enacted.

The human element is at all times uppermost, and the drama, which quite faithfully depicts a period in the history of this country over which few care to linger, portrays life as it appealed to the historian, for the passions of men ran high during these thrilling days, and the brute in man—both white and black—was often uppermost.

One of the finest characters in the drama, and one which has excited the most interest, is the splendid portrayal of the character of Lincoln at this particular period. The artistic manner in which this difficult role is handled well deserved the praise accorded it.

Splendid Music.

But the feature of the entire production is the fine orchestra of twenty pieces which so graphically portrays the thrilling scenes enacted on the canvas. The power of music has seldom been borne home with greater force than in the wonderful musical setting with which this drama has been provided. This in isolf is alone worth the price of admission, and the stirring strains of the national airs never fail to provoke a storm of applause.

While the Birth of a Nation has established a new record in prices for motion pictures in this city, all who attended last evening were unanimous in their verdict of approval. On all sides were heard words of praise for the fine evening's entertainment, and many unqualifiedly declare it the greatest as well as the most remarkable product of the silent drama they had ever witnessed.

most a...
plished without ...
the score of skirmish...
encounters between the ...
horses are seen to drop in ... when shot and men plunge from

Easton (Pa.) Daily Express 3/14

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

It is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than such prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period ... with the dovetailed scholarly ... which is his made of the wider ... of events with in the play covered, the production one of surpassing educational value to those who ... other young children still or even ... born in the stirring years of 1860 to ... A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the combatants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war disgustable and devilish. It contains an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand, the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart of the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln.

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

Buffalo Evening News 3/14

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS:

Star—"Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" is enjoying the same popularity at the Star this week as it has for the past three weeks. Capacity audiences were at the two performances yesterday. According to statistics kept at the box office approximately 50,000 persons have seen this wonderful picture since it has been here. This is a record for either the silent or spoken drama.

David Griffith's interpretation of Dixon's "The Clansman," is a wonderful achievement. War scenes are particularly splendid and there is an unusual opportunity afforded to make a mind comparison of the present status of the manner of carrying on war with the old way. The story treats of the stirring events in the South subsequent to the Civil war and shows what reconstructive work was necessary.

Next week the Star goes back to the spoken drama. "Potash and Perlmutter" will be there for a week.

The Telegraph

MARCH 14, 1916.

Mitchell on His Way.

A wireless message received at D. W. Griffith's office yesterday brought word that Theodore Mitchell is aboard the steamer New York, due in New York today. Mr. Mitchell went to London about six weeks ago to lease the Drury Lane Theatre for the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation."

N.Y. Mar 14

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL

"The Birth of a Nation."

In his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to Proctor's Grand all next week, commencing Monday afternoon, D. W. Griffith utilizes a full operatic score for the first time in connection with a moving picture presentation.

It is the Wagnerian idea fitted to the screen drama and the synchronization is so perfectly adapted to the story that it becomes a very important part of the narrative. The score was arranged by Joseph Carl Breil, the eminent composer, who spent months with Mr. Griffith while he was making the picture and caught his thematic ideas in the snatches of tune that Griffith hummed while he was working out his dramatic ideas. It is, without question, the most unusual score ever devised, for in addition to Mr. Breil's original compositions it numbers excerpts from many of the celebrated old master's works as well as martial airs and famous old plantation melodies. The seats are now on sale at the Grand for the entire week.

Mar 14

BUFFALO EXPRESS

BIRTH OF A NATION

Griffith Spectacle Now in its Fourth Week at the Star.

More than 50,000 persons have seen The Birth of a Nation in its three-week engagement at the Star theater. This is the last week for the Griffith spectacle. There is little chance that the film will again be seen in Buffalo for years.

There are thousands of scenes and thousands of persons and horses. A whole city burns. Regiments in hand-to-hand battles in the trenches. Mobs surge up and down city streets.

Saturday night will close the engagement of The Birth of a Nation and on Monday next the Star will revert to the spoken drama through the engagement of Potash & Perlmutter, who will return, for one week with the matinees Wednesday and Saturday afternoon. This is the same production and practically the same cast which proved to be last season's biggest success at this popular playhouse.

EASTON DAILY EXPRESS

"The Birth of a Nation."

The attraction at the Orpheum week of March 20 is D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins with a matinee next Monday and continues for six nights and six matinees. This is the great production which made a record run of over 500 performances in New York city, where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over ten million people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the East. It has other sensational runs in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Mr. Griffith was eight years in producing this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses for the spectacular rest of the work, making the enormous figure of half a million dollars.

The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most critical periods of American history. It records its facts with the quality of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of truth. Love and conflict are its base, but a myriad of details illuminate the narrative and lift it so far above anything our state has ever had that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the film is an operatic score which carries current themes with every character and character in the epic. The wonderful score, which is a great addition to the drama, is in itself a remarkable work of art. As a result of forty travels with the show to handle the musical feature of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slave problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has built his story. The conflict which this question caused is produced in great battles and all the thrilling things which take place of war.

H OF NATION A GREAT FILM

's Masterpiece De- Capacity Audience. h gripping and In- tive.

Griffith's film masterpiece, a Nation" opened a three gement at the Auditorium to a capacity audience and justified the expectations rons. Many in the audience the picture before, but this tract any form the applause siasm shown by the entire he sounds during some of ing dashes of the Ku Klux mbled a crowd at a baseball re than a theater audience. is a gripping and realistic the Reconstruction days on Thomas Dixon's novel, sman." Many of the scenes in South Carolina, and there e in the audience last even- had lived through the scenes upon the canvas; all had em from their fathers or ers.

cture lasts about three hours, x follows climax in such rap- sion and the interest is so that one forgets the lapse Griffith plays on the emo- his audience as a master plays n; one moment he has tears eyes, the next they lean for- their seats with bated breath Ku Klux Klan starts on their of vengeance; but to attempt be the picture in detail is fol- re a seat for one of the re- performances and see the your life.

hotography is wonderful and ain Griffited shows his love l and accuracy, while the in- music, interpreted by a y orchestra of twenty pieces the price of admission. The aries from spirited marches, etc., to the old-fashioned melodies.

aracters are all well chosen their roles with such earn- and effect that one forgets only on the screen. The udes such notable screen stars W. Walthall, Wally Reed, Lil , Marsh, and others too to mention.

cture will be shown twice to- twice tomorrow and if you been lucky enough to see it, thing you can do this morning rchase a seat for one of th g performances.

Buffalo Courier

RCH 14, 1916.

The Birth of a Nation."

ffith's photoplay spectacle, of a Nation," which it took e eight months to produce, st week of its Buffalo en- with afternoon and night s yesterday at the Star entering upon the closing gement of this stupendous ounce that it will be the nity Buffalonians will have the film is to make a stralia and other foreign ffalo critics have passed the above, adapted from el, "The Clansman," and has been almost unanimous to equal the photoplay n hitherto on the screen. th, the producer, claims Birth of a Nation" has serv- aint thousands of school ughout the country with ts of the great reconstruc- as years of studious at- t books never would have urrender of Lee to Grant; ation of Lincoln and battle follow out facts connected of the greatest clashes of between the states are a few sting things portrayed. ng through the streets of -to-hand combats and the t a town are some of the tures that cause audiences the expense that must curred in screening the gh in certain sections of n element of race hatred ndered by "The Birth of it is said Buffalo has ac- production largely as a drama that tells a true ght will terminate the "The Birth of a Na- Monday next the Star to the spoken drama gagement of "Potash which will return to k with the Wednesday matinee. This is the n and practically the proved to be last sea- uccess at the popular

Olean City Sentinel
Winston Salem N.C.

MARCH 14, 1916.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" A THRILLING SPECTACLE.

Thrilling in its dramatic climaxes, awe inspiring with its historicaly correct portrayal of the stirring days of the Civil War and the reconstruction period following, accompanied by the finest orchestra music that has ever been heard here with any attraction, the widely heralded photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was presented for the first time at the Auditorium last night before an audience that packed the house as seldom packed before.

Many persons are likely to think there is no photoplay under the sun that could be worth $2 a seat—or $1 or 50 cents. But they are mistaken. One cannot sit thru the wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," without agreeing when it is all over that it is worth the price. When one considers the thousands of people necessary for the taking of the picture, the immense amount of money necessarily expended to take the historic scenes, the hundreds of horses used in the later scenes of the play, one cannot help but feel that it surely cost many fortunes to make and produce such a spectacle.

It is useless to attempt to describe the picture in detail. It is hardly necessary for it is safe to say that every person who can crowd inside the theater today, tonight or tomorrow will be there. It baffles description in a way for only by seeing for one's self can one imbibe the excitement of the occasion. Frequent yells from veterans in the audience, the bugle calls of the orchestra, the magnificent yet awful battle scenes, combined with a score of exciting incidents in connection with the story that runs thru the picture, unconsciously enthuse the spectator until almost without realizing it he is joining in the yells and cheers as the scenes shift rapidly. The battle of Gettysburg, the surrender of Lee, the Ku Klux raids all tend to arouse the highest passions of man and these passions are bound to find expression.

Probably never before has the Auditorium rung with such cheers and applause as permeated that structure last night. It was wonderful how the picture could grip one with its intensity of purpose. Billows of cheers and yells rose one after another. As a Confederate victory was recorded in a battle scene the yells were deafening. As the tide flowed the other way silence prevailed, only to be aroused immediately by another Confederate gain.

The story of "The Birth of a Nation" follows closely the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," altho the picture shows more in three hours than a play could show in three weeks. The horrors of the days following the war are faithfully pictured. The assassination of President Lincoln and other scenes were taken with pains to secure historical accuracy in staging and recording. The spectacle gives one a better idea of the history of the years from 1860 to 1870 than one could possibly gain from books or newspapers.

"The Birth of a Nation" is here thru today and tomorrow. There are still seats to be had for each of the remaining performances and if every person who can does not secure a seat for one of these performances it will be a pity and an everlasting regret on his part. Every ticket was sold last night and every ticket is sold for this afternoon.

H. F. A.

BIRTH OF NATION APPEARS AT PLUMB

WONDERFUL PICTURIZATION OF WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION SCENES IS PRESENTED.

Stupendous in scope and virile in its reproduction of the great Civil War and Reconstruction period, the "Birth of a Nation' played to a capacity house at the Plumb theater last evening. In a wonderful picturization D. W. Griffith has presented to the American people a vivid portrayal of the terrible scourge of war, for the first part of the play deals entirely with the scenes leading up to and during the Civil War. The bursting shells and mad rushes of troops into a certain death are but some of the things that makes one realize that war truly is hell. Doubtful indeed are the actual battle scenes more terrifying than those depicted last evening.

The second part of the play opens with the reconstruction period, firstly the assassination of Lincoln, the best friend the south ever had, and secondly the scenes of the carpet baggers and misguided colored folks and thirdly the organization of the Klu Klux Klan. The assembling of the Klu Klux Klan in one scene is without doubt the greatest spectacle ever produced, for literally thousands and thousands of uniformed Clansmen line up ready for an evening's work.

Of course there is a delightful love story that wends its way through the picture, and this naturally relieves the tenseness of the situation at several points and injects a pleasing sentiment.

And the music. With the eighteen pieces with harp in the pit and two buglers behind the scenes, the entire picture is enlivened by the trumpet and crash. The battle scene which is a lengthy and detailed one would become monotonous were it not for the music which emphasizes the attacks and rushes quite as vividly as the pictures themselves.

So far as opposition to the Birth of the Nation on the grounds that it creates race prejudice, there is no argument. There is nothing in the entire picture which would create any prejudice of any kind. True, the picture shows up the unfortunate colored people during the reconstruction period, but not nearly so despicable are the colored folks pictured as are the carpet baggers of the north who were responsible for the troubles following the war.

So strong has been the demand for admission to the Birth of a Nation, that it has been decided to put on an additional matinee tomorrow afternoon at 3:45 principally for the children. There will be no reserved seats and the price will be 50c for children and $1.00 for adults.

Mar 14
SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS

"THE BIRTH OF A "NATION" RETURNS

GRIFFITH'S VAST PHOTODRAMA AT THE GRAND AGAIN APPEALS STRONGLY.

At the Grand Opera House: "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photodrama and spectacle of American history. Engagement through Saturday night, with two showings daily.

Greater praise can no theatrical attraction have than this: That those who were enthusiasts at its first appearance, rally, when the consideration is not that of a "nominal" price of admission, as enthusiasts of its return engagement within four months thereafter. In the Grand Opera House last night were November spectators, returned for another lesson in the construction of drama that observes the best intrinsic ideals and reflects the essence of historic truth, and for another evening of keen enjoyment.

Since San Antonio originally looked upon "The Birth of a Nation," as before, discussion of this amazing photodrama has been countrywide. Some vocabularies, here and there, have been exhausted in the controversy as to whether Griffith's thrilling and majestic conception of the "invisible empire" that saved the South from greater woe than was poured into all the years of Civil War, and the Nation from even greater loss, were not reprehensible as an excitant of sectional prejudices and racial wrath. Happily, however, this mistaken controversy is itself now exhausted—because of its own bloodlessness, no doubt—and "The Birth of the Nation" is everywhere accepted as a true, honorable and generous picturization of the making of the New South, veritably the birth of the United States; it is everywhere admired as the acme of brilliant ideas in natural stage settings; it is everywhere applauded as an edifying service to the intelligence, as an appeal to the finer sentiments of patriotism and of love, and—perhaps most of all—as an entertainment without parallel in all the record of motion pictures.

When it is said that this long unrolling of history, romance and intrigue—the events of nearly two decades or, rather, the condensed National developments of that period—constitutes a liberal education, the point must be conceded that very many of our people will acquire an American education in this way who might easily be apt to slight it so far as printed histories, famous art and personal reminiscence are concerned. None who sees this vivid, stormy, realistic depiction of the second critical period, so-called, in the life of the American Nation, can fail to grasp the force of underlying moral and political principles quite as convincingly as he understands its public incidents and absorbs its personal story of the lovers whose fate is ordered by the mighty hands of the Ku Klux Klan. To be emotionally stirred by the action of the mysterious klan, or by the final battles in the War of the States, or by the fearful errors of carpetbag rule that gave rise to the klan, is not to be stirred to vindictive partisanship for the bygone cause of either the South or the North; but it is, indeed, to feel the spur of true Americanism the more keenly in the realization that the gravest wounds of the past have been healed by the strength and the wisdom of union.

If this notice is a discussion, rather than a review, of "The Birth of the Nation" on the side of its historic values and the value of its patriotic appeal, it is because the wondrous pictures themselves and the story they form have long since become household words. Onto the screen there come both the brightness and the darkness of Southern life before, during and after the great war—the carefree days on the plantations, the accomplishment of secession, the appeal to arms, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, the surrender at Appomatox, the assassination of Lincoln; then, the advent of deeper dangers still: carpetbag misgovernment and the most cruelly bitter betrayal of the negroes thereunder. Then, tending through the course of an engrossing love story of North and South, follow the founding of the Ku Klux Klan and its terrific vengeance on those who would utterly wreck the fairest region of the Union. A vast theme of tragedy has its ending in an inspiring note of personal happiness and of national glory.

All this versatility and splendor of story and scenes has been made known even to those with whom "The Birth of the Nation" is thus far merely a matter of striking reputation. Reason suffficient for its return here is that it should be missed by no one and that it well rewards more than one seeing. Indeed, it well rewards a second hearing, as well; for in the excellent symphonic rendering of its Breil score there is as much poetry, patriotism and sweeping dramatic fervor as in its wild rides of the klan and in its battlefields.

"The Birth of the Nation" is all things to all lovers of "movies" for more than the massive scale of its spectacles, its remarkable properties, its legion of actors and its beauty of outdoor photographic work. Its "stars" are motion picture celebrities of certain favor, the intimates of every frequenter of picture playhouses. Their playing in this story of infinite character scope and emotional effect is undoubtedly the topmost of the triumphs of Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Ralph Lewis and associates; and the representations, both physical and histrionic, of the famed characters of the Civil War's close—Lincoln and the generals of both armies—is incomparably artistic.

As an example of music's grandeur surrounding the silent drama, "The Birth of the Nation" is supreme. As an example of historic accuracy blended with romance itself historically consistent, this photodrama is a monument to a sort of playwriting latterly neglected and always popular and worth while, and the masterly adaptation and originations of Griffith are to be credited therefor in measure far greater than may be accorded Dixon for his story of "The Clansman," on which these are based. But as an example of the unstinted devotion of money and of artistic method to the designing of a magnificent stage theme, "The Birth of the Nation" takes rank far above and beyond any other theatrical production ever achieved.

Buffalo Courier

MARCH 14, 1916.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The last week's engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" opened yesterday afternoon at the Star theater, and as on previous occasions, the theater was crowded both in the afternoon and evening. The fame of this film, depicting in a most striking manner the terrible days of the Civil War, has been spread broadcast, and all those who have not seen the film during the past three weeks should endeavor to do so during the course of the next few days.

This photo-play spectacle, produced under the direction of D. W. Griffith, is founded upon the book entitled "The Clansman." There are scenes during the course of the film when over 10,000 people appear before the eye at one time. It took over 18,000 people eight months, continuous rehearsing, to produce this picture. The magnitude of the scenic effects cannot be expressed, and one sits during the course of three hours speechless at the marvelous feats performed by the soldiery and headliners of the film.

Some of the most predominant features are the surrender of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant, the assassination of President Lincoln and the various battles which marked this bloody period of revolution. The audience sits aghast at the mammoth expense of producing a film where thousands of people rush through the streets of a city, destroying everything of value within their wake, the mob scenes in the city of Piedmont and the arrival of thousands of clansmen bearing down upon the enraged and debauched mobs.

Saturday night will be the last opportunity Buffalonians will have to see this wonderful historic and educational production, as the film leaves next week for a tour of Australia and other foreign countries. There will be matinees every afternoon.

LEXINGTON LEADER—

Birth of a Nation.

D. W. Griffith is the most talked about, and probably the most sought after, man in America. He learned how to plan things, in the making of the 3,000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" or he would be lost. He gallops thru the myriad-and-one business details of a theatrical success without turning a hair or developing the slightest case of "nerve." When the turmoil and the tumult dies, and the hours wax small, his refreshment is the dance or a friendly chat with a round table of chums.

It was said on the first night in New York that only the son of a soldier could have conceived and executed "The Birth of a Nation." As a Kentucky lad, the son of Brigadier-General J. W. Griffith, he drank in the Civil War narratives greedily. As he grew up came the poet's vision of the entire struggle and of Reconstruction days. In the prime of manhood awoke the genius to make it a reality.

Plainly war, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers. It is hard, gruelling continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies are employed. There's everything from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the handgrips of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the Battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "in-door" productions.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Opera house all next week.

(Adv.)

PADUCAH EVENING SUN

The Kentucky—"The Birth of a Nation."

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Kentucky starting Thursday night, a thrilling association with the issues of today. The great crisis of 1861-'70 as pictured in the play havs their lesson for the Americans of today. The North and the South in an internecine struggle; the strategy of the Petersburg campaign and of Sherman's march to the the Sea; Lee's surrender to Grant, and the aftermath of war in the Reconstruction period—all these form a serial of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interest. Out of the terrible conflict a new nation, united by spiritual as well as geographical ties, was born. The fire of American patriotism never burned brighter than it burns today, and the play which shows the evolution from the past to the present will be gladly welcomed at its second presentation at The Kentucky Thursday night. Seats are now on sale for all performances.

war,
to arm be imag manner tha en surrender engage in a dead stance.

The Review - Bayonne (N.J.) Mar 14

THE SURRENDER OF GENERAL LEE AT APPOMATOX; A SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

SEATS LEFT FOR "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Contrary to rumors, there are plenty of good seats left at the Opera House for this week's engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at that theatre. Seats can be had at all prices for all the performances. Matinees are given daily starting at 2:15 and every evening at 8:15.

Reduced City - Tri. Sun 3/14

Scene in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," at the Kentucky, starting Thursday, March 16th.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Opera House the week of March 20, with daily matinee after Monday.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime—these great events and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons, of South Carolina, and the Stonemans, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's Theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace of Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact fac-similes of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Fifteen thousand people, and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the most outstanding characters.

Among the distinguished principals engaged for the production are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished stage actor, whose family connected with the story, in the role of the Clansman; Lillian Gish, as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis, as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp, as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann, as the mulatto Lieutenant Colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long, as the renegrade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh, as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden, as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell, as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron, as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell, as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried on tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. adv

Republican News - Kilmer

MARCH 14, 1916.

The Kentucky—"The Birth of a Nation."

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Kentucky, starting Thursday night, March 16, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's faace clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal, meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

The same symphony orchestra that appeared here last fall is carried. Seats are now on sale for all performances.

ST. LOUIS

TONIGHT IS THE PERFORMANCE OF 'BIRTH OF NATION'

Olympic Theater to Celebrate Record Attendance by Decorating Showhouse With Flags and Providing Special Music.

Without any special [illegible] versatile press agent and without startling announcements or [illegible] trumpets the Olympic Theater will celebrate tonight the two [illegible] formance in St. Louis of David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which is [illegible] doubt the greatest and most [illegible] film production that has ever been [illegible] upon the American stage.

For the occasion the theater will be decorated inside and out with [illegible] colors, flags and bunting of [illegible] Confederate and Union [illegible] history and mighty music will be [illegible] loudly amplified in the [illegible] at each performance.

As another special feature the [illegible] chestra, which has been [illegible] overture before during the engagement will play the "Centennial Rag" composed by Albert Sloman, of the Symphony Orchestra.

Never before in the unexampled history of St. Louis has its [illegible] approached, the nearest [illegible] been the run of the Big Six [illegible] Exposition, which place [illegible] but not with daily [illegible] "Birth of a Nation" has [illegible] computation of the figures show there have been over [illegible] missions to witness the [illegible] spectacle an average of one [illegible] to every three persons of the population. This means more than [illegible] on the face of it and is an [illegible] tribute to D. W. Griffith and "The Birth of a Nation," but also is [illegible] ing proof of the prosperity and [illegible] awake spirit of St. Louis.

Although a portion of the [illegible] ance has been from the suburban [illegible] tory and suburban district [illegible] it comes from St. Louis proper. [illegible] compared with the population of New York and Chicago, it becomes [illegible] greet and most successful [illegible] that this might [illegible] anywhere in America.

ST. LOUIS HOLD RECORD

In New York City at the Liberty Theater it was presented to [illegible] performances to a gross attendance of 211,000 persons. In Chicago it was presented for more than [illegible] the Illinois and Colonial Theaters [illegible] has achieved world-being [illegible] many other of the large cities of the country, but none has equaled St. Louis and the engagement still [illegible] here.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now [illegible] every recognized owner and [illegible] judicial channel except one. The [illegible] to the Ohio Board of Censors [illegible] passed judgment on its [illegible] without letting the people [illegible] matter will likely be adjusted [illegible] courts.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been [illegible] claimed by the press of America [illegible] England as the greatest drama [illegible] ever been unfolded to the world. It is founded upon history but [illegible] the broad sweep of dramatic [illegible] tion and is handled by the master [illegible] of a new form of drama art. [illegible] ord is the surest proof of its [illegible] peal and its theatrical power.

It is said by those who [illegible] after its present run has [illegible] self in the highest class [illegible] Griffith intends to withdraw the [illegible] tion from the stage altogether [illegible] revive it for several years [illegible] but from sentimental reasons [illegible] away as a record to posterity of the [illegible] truly great achievement in the [illegible] of a new art.

Miriam Cooper as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at Proctor's Grand the Week of March 20.

"Birth of a Nation" Returns to Proctor's

For one week, commencing Monday afternoon, March 20, D. W. Griffith's pictorial masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," will play a specially arranged return engagement at Proctor's Grand. Matinees will be given daily. The seats will go on sale tomorrow morning. The same production, including the symphony orchestra of 50, that 20,000 people saw here in January will come here again.

The Griffith spectacle has proved the most sensational success of the present century in theatricals. In every large city where it has been shown so far it has created new records for length of run. Some 6,000,000 people throughout the United States have attended its performances.

Its pictorialized story covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with thousands of soldiers in the conflict and 18,000 people participated in the action of the drama. Three thousand horses were used for the thrilling cavalry rides and the wild dashes over miles of territory of the Ku Klux Klan. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000.

Love and romance weave throughout the vast spread of the action and grip the hearts of the audience. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program.

A symphonic score synchronized to the action and the appearance of the principal characters give added charm to the narrative.

56

Albany (N.Y.) 3/12

KNICKERBOCKER PRESS,

Lillian Gish, Coming to the Grand in "The Birth of a Nation

OPERA HOUSE WEEK OF MARCH 20

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Opera House the week of March 20. There will be two performances daily, at 2:30 and 8:20 p. m. Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City, where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city of the country. In addition, the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation, its intent is the fundamental one of the true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacles have dealt with hundreds in the past, Griffith employs thousands. Eighteen thousand people fill his stage, which has a vast territory for its background. Three thousand horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail, and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged fifty years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed, to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of ten square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms, and suffering such as can not be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the North and South.

Eighteen thousand people were employed in taking the historical pictures. One sees Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for troops; the battles of the conflict, Sherman's march, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the South in the throes of change, the carpetbaggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the K.K.K. Parties of war veterans and sons of veterans are coming in great numbers to the Tremont. It is difficult for many of them to refrain from shouting the old war cries or from shuffling the feet to the rhythm of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the picture are so skillfully managed, the interest is so tensely maintained, that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development. The epic method of narration has been adopted. Enormous ranges of time and space are covered. All the arts contribute to the spectacular realization of poetry, history and romance. In the 5,000 scenes of the picture there are said to be 200,000 historical details. Besides the achievement of the picture itself, the exhibition of it employs 100 flesh and blood helpers at each performance.

This attraction comes to the Opera house the week of March 20. (Adv.)

Troy City Times
Lewiston Saturday
MARCH 15, 1916.

ANOTHER GFIFFITH MASTERPIECE

"The Birth of a Nation" was produced and staged by D. W. Griffith. On Thursday there appears at the Amuzu a six part feature production direct from the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, Pa., "The Avenging Conscience", produced by the same man. The cast or part of it used in "The Birth of a Nation" is used in "The Avenging Conscience, namely Henry B. Walthall, Spotswood Aitken, Ralph Lewis and George Seigman. Mr. Walthall is supported in the play by Blanche Sweet, now with the Paramount Corp. "The Avenging Conscience" was taken from Edgar Allen Poe's work, "The Tell Tale Heart." This picture while not on as large a scale as "The Birth of a Nation" will appeal to everyone and is full of the Griffith tricks and action. The Avenging Conscience will appear at "The Amuzu" on tomorrow and the price will be in reach of all. Shows start every 1 hour and 10 minutes after 11 a. m.

Buffalo Courier
MARCH 15, 1916.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Star theater continues to demonstrate its wonderful appeal to all of the people by attracting twice daily the large audiences that have so noticeably featured its performances during the past three weeks. The engagement closes Saturday night, so the opportunities for seeing this historical spectacle are extremely limited.

Times-Union
Albany

MAE MARSH BELOVED OF FILM FANDOM

Idol Of 2,000,000 Screen Fans In "The Birth Of a Nation"

AT PROCTOR'S GRAND NEXT WEEK

Miss Mae Marsh, the idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation" which will be at Proctor's Grand all next week, running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her pursuer, is the girl whom D. W. Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies, because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of them do in ten thousand. There's nothing "up stage" about this slender, graceful, young girl; no airs, no egotism, no fur-topped boots, no lip rouge, after a minute's conversation with her one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful, little sister immortalized in the great Civil War spectacle.

There is apparently no pretense about this originator of Flora Cameron. Quiet, and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense to well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

HER EARLY LIFE

When asked to say something personal about herself, Miss Marsh replied "I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Sante Fe railroad, and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully, only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake—was at school at the Sacred Heart convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried 'Oh, don't! Don't, Sister! I won't do it again!' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to let us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next day we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Applepie Mary in 'Home, Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and Law' or 'Tolerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother at the age I am now, twenty. It is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is a most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children.

SECNES FORM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

LINCOLN ACTUALLY FREED YOUNG PRISONER

The incident of the young Confederate's release by President Lincoln's order [illegible] gets a round of enthusiastic applauding when presented in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Opera House was serified as an actual historical event by one of the spectators. G. L. Nordical, of 17 West Eighty-sixth street, New York is the man to whom it happened. During the New York run of the play he visited D. W. Griffith's office and told this remarkable story.

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive blockade-running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama Islands. I had served in the Confererate Army, but had been honorably discharged on account of sickness. My father then wanted me to go as his agent to Nassau. The only channel of intercourse was closed, however, when the Federals captured Fort Fisher, so father suggested that I should try to slip through the Northern lines and thence take steamer from New York.

"In civilian dress I managed to elude the Union pickets in Virginia, crossed the Potomac, took stage for Washington, but in the latter place I was arrested and thrown into prison as a Confederate enemy. It was feared that I would be court-martialled and executed or at best held prisoner until the close of the war. My fiancee's father, Alderman Samuel Lewis, of New York, later Acting Mayor, came to Washington and worked in my behalf. Notwithstanding Secretary Stanton's opposition, he succeeded in convincing President Lincoln that I was not a spy. 'I will release the young man,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'on one condition, that he takes oath not to return to the Southern States during the war.'

"I gladly took this oath and was released. Before leaving for the North for my marriage and residence in Alderman Lewis' family, I desired to thank President Lincoln. O being presented to Mr. Lincoln, I remember he shook me by the hand and said: 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.' I have never forgotten the great President's generosity and kindheartedness to a foe, and when I saw the picture that early experience was vividly unearthed."

Seats are selling at the box office for all engagements.

Eastn (Pa) Daily Express
MARCH 15, 1916.

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith is the most talked about and probably the most sought after man in America. He learned how to plan things, in the making of the 5,000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" or he would be lost. He gallops through the myriad and one business details of a theatrical success without turning a hair or developing the slightest case of "nerve." When the turmoil and the tumult dies, and the hours wax small, his refreshment is the dance or a friendly chat with a round table of chums.

It was said on the first night in New York that only the son of a soldier could have conceived and executed "The Birth of a Nation." As a Kentucky lad, the son of Brigadier General J. W. Griffith, he drank in the Civil War narratives greedily. As he grew up came the poet's vision of the entire struggle and of reconstruction days. In the prime of manhood awoke the genius to make it a reality.

While planning the battle of Petersburg Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a modern telephone switchboard. From it field wires ran to his various sub-generals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anachronism of field telephones in Civil War time.

Thus completely equipped as a modern Joffre or von Hindenburg, Griffith saw everything and telephoned all his instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the field pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old-fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are far from spick and span. Many of them are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags even have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Plainly war, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers. It is hard, gruelling, continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies, are employed. There's everything from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the hand grip of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "indoor" productions.

Albany (NY) Argus 3/15

"The Birth of a Nation."

Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to Proctor's Grand for a week, commencing next Monday afternoon, is a prodigy of filmdom. In fact, she is declared to be the best "find" of the last 30 months in this wonderfully advancing art. This young girl, who is a Californian, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spear holding was at last promised her. While awaiting this position she decided one day to sneak behind her "big sister" in the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. Mr. Griffith saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for Mae was awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm. Griffith was in earnest, however, for he saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring Mae Marsh has become famous in the world of motion pictures. The seats for this engagement are now on sale and the advance buying indicates another record week's attendance.

My 3/15

THE ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL,

he declaration of peace at Appomattox as pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's Grand next week.

Albany (NY) 3/15
TIMES-UNION

MAE MARSH.
The noted movie star in "The Birth of a Nation," at Proctor's Grand theatre next week.

GREAT CROWD GREETED "BIRTH OF A NATION" ON FIRST NIGHT

David Griffith's Stupendous Production Proved Intensely Interesting and Inspiring

MUSICAL MOTIF WONDERFUL

The Splendid Orchestra Symbolized in Music Each Scene of the Picture and the Emotions Created

GREAT CROWD HERE

The best theatrical productions have not drawn as large crowds to Taylor as those coming here to see "The Birth of a Nation." Last night there were several hundred visitors from the neighboring towns, actually taxing the capacity of the hotels and restaurants. The first night crowd greeting the great production here was larger than that in either Temple or Austin, figured upon actual door receipts, which is certainly a tribute to Taylor and its splendid location as a theatrical center.

A splendid tribute was paid Manager F. E. Carradine of the New Opera House last evening for his efforts in getting "The Birth of the Nation," to Taylor. Probably the largest crowd which has ever gathered at the Opera House was present for the presenting of this magnificent spectacle, which is the product of the film genius, David Griffith.

So much has been said of "The Birth of a Nation," that there remains little to be written, and this is for the reason that every one who sees the grand scenes, and hears that music, with its inspiring and soft melodies cannot but desire to pay the work a great tribute. And they set about the task, whether they are commanding the attention of many eyes through the critical columns of a newspaper, or are only confiding the joys they have known to friends at their side. When you see the picture you feel it a duty to tell others of it—that they may know some of the thrills which have been your's.

The picture starts with the splendid strains of that wonderful orchestra, in a fanfare of ecstacy—the South literally bursting with the ecstacy of joy, and you hear it and know it by the music, and then there is before you the wonderful fields of cotton, with the good old darkies picking the fleecy staple, and then there comes a minor strain, a soft melody of warmer mirth, and domestic joy, as was known in those homes, in which our fathers and mothers lived, before the tempestous

THE WONDERFUL MUSIC

The music seemed to creep beside you and whisper or shout in your ear, and who can deny that we heard it say: "I am joy, I stalk forth with a majestic stride, and the land smiles wherever I go," and his voice stills, and the great harp drops its liquid notes, and with the violincello and flute makes an amorous melody, and a sweet voice with lilting rapture says: "I am love, and youth smiles on me," but then the hautboy, like a distressed child adds to the trinity, "and what right, I ask, have nations to cause my heart a care?" And then the orchestra seemed to burst in wild despair and sweep the audience with a sea of tone, but more majestic than the rest, the great horn won; and with the trumpet, taking up his shield as a knight of old, they still this rabble of harmony, and speaks out clear, "We labor in this land we love, and till the fields, and work the crops, and lovshall rule with wisdom fair." The reed of the clarinet beggn to quiver and vibrate with the aged bassoon, and they first moaning, then wailed a propehcy, "but men will die and women weep, and hope will kneel, forlorn, when our land by war is torn." Like a fabled King, with giant voice the bass violin spears, "Cease thy prattle—War is Lord of all," and sudden retiring before this monarch, the violin sighed, the harp sobbed, and the hautboy cried; but relying upon his deepest measure this bass voice stayed them all, and set up the conflict, "Come, thy King, Mars, is waiting thee." And so the music symbolized the emotions of the pictures throughout the entire three hours and more that the scenes were before the audience, interpreting them wonderfully. It was all from the elaborate symphonic score arranged after the musical motifs for the leading characters—and over and anon weaving in those beautiful southern melodies, which occupy such a warm spot in the hearts of everyone. It fitted the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment, and the marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well earned laurel of having created a new wart; a new kind of grand opera so to speak.

-o- -o- -o-

SUCCESSION OF GREAT SCENES

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" exhibits the salient events of the War between the States. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theatre April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagegr regime — is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "litle Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman, with Maragret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continous love interest throughout the story.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scens of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of sceens and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prce cause of the War.

-o- -o- -o-

MUCH LOVE INTEREST

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine.

Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron the younger daughter in the Southern household, in 'The Birth of a Nation," by her successful appearance in many photo plays during her three years' careers has attracted by her elf like charm and naive personality, many admirers who greet with pleasure her appearance on the screen. Miss Marsh has many bits of fine acting in the picture. Among the most delightful are the welcoming of the brother back from the Civil War; the making of "southern ermine" with raw cotton and chimney black; the scene in the cellar with Miriam Cooper; the garden making that follows the return from the war; the southern banquet; and the pretty scene where she raids kisses on her brother Ben's mouth to console him for temporary loss of his sweetheart, Elsie. There is always a tuch of comedy or of pathos where Miss Marsh appears. Her personality lends itself to fine temperamental treatment of any part she plays. Her expressive, ever changing, mood adapting face, is one of the most valuable in all the list of film favorites.

-o- -o- -o-

THE GREAT WALTHALL

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story and well did this famous emotional actor, who bows to no superior in the motion picture world play his part. His characterization of Ben Cameron, the hero of the story is perfect. Mr. Walthall's acting is wonderful and whenever his name is advertised to appear in future pictures, a crowded house is assured, as it is now a known fact that he is without a doubt the best actor in moving pictures; Lillian Gish took the part of Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively, George Seigmann as the mulatto Lieutenant-Colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long, as the renegade negro, Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper, Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Neise and Jake, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron, as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron and many others.

-o- -o- -o-

LINCOLN GIVEN ACCURATELY

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln, was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small, but interesting, detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington, April 14 1865, but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene showing the War President is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his Cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that sumoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

-o- -o- -o-

GRANT AND LEE

One of the most interesting scenes of the picture is that of Grant and Lee at Appomatox, Grant reading the terms of surrender, Lee sitting forlorn, but majestic. As Grant, having finished reading and having affixed his signature rises the contrast between thve two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand as the great Generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattix Court House is closed.

-o- -o- -o-

KU KLUX USED GOOD

But the picture is crowded with so many interesting scenes impossible to mention even all of the greater ones. It s a picture which stirs the greater emotions. Those who see those wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan, and especially we of the South, who realize the work they were performing for Southern womanhood, could not but be trilled. It was indeed splendid work upon the part of the director and his staff, in giving such a presentation of the Southern Clan. And there were those sceens, such as the march thru Georgia, and the suffering cause which deeply touched one. Every heart aws anguished when that little girl of the South suffered death at the hands of the black brute, in order to save her honor.

Taylor is fortunate in that the picture will be repeated here today, tonght and tomorrow—for it is a great picture, which everyone should see and does not stir up the fires of sectionalism, for the good people of the North are shown in the best light and the rag-tags given their just deserts.

3/15

Louisville Ky Courier Journal

The Kentucky—"The Birth of a Nation."

The mighty spectacle with same splendid symphony orchestra plays a special return date at the Kentucky starting Thursday night and continues until Saturday, with matinees on Friday and Saturday.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a millions-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil war and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family.

Seats now on sale for all performances.

3/15

LEXINGTON LEADER-

LEXINGTON OPERA HOUSE.

Birth of a Nation.

Altho the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Opera house next week, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee, is one of the most striking scenes of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document. As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature, rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of statue and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great Generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Courthouse is closed.

Seat sale opens Friday. adv.

At The Kentucky, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 16, 17, 18, matinee Friday and Saturday.

Kentucky—"The Birth of a Nation."

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Kentucky Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and Friday and Saturday matinees, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Frietchie" seem tame after seeing the splendors of "The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Homeric grandeur. The night riding of the Ku Klux Klan looks like a company of avenging spectres sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

The same splendid orchestra is carried by the spectacle.

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation," at the Kentucky three days, commencing March 16. Matinees Friday and Saturday.

Mar 15

EL PASO MORNING TIMES

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The assassination of Abraham Lincoln is one of the striking features of "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the El Paso Theater next week.

D. W. Griffith, producer of the spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction days, built for this scene, the entire interior of Ford's Theater, as it was on the night of the saddest tragedy in American history. The auditorium, crowded to its capacity, the stage on which Laura Keene and her company were playing Our American Cousin,' and the president's box, set in its tier of boxes, are all reproduced from photographs and contemporary description.

The exact manner of the assassination of Lincoln is not certainly known. Mr. Griffith, in his researches, found eighteen distinct accounts, all of them differing in minor details. From these accounts, he selected what he considered the most probable chain of events, and every movement made by the actors in the scene will be found by the student of history to be authenticated by one or another of the accounts. University professors, who have seen the production, have given it as their opinion that Mr. Griffith has admirably performed a difficult feat, and it is probable that his interpretation will be the one that will live in history.

The care shown in the staging of the assassination of Lincoln was exercised throughout the production, and the spectacle is considered a masterpiece of history as well as romance. For three months a corps of history experts worked under the direction of Mr. Griffith, examining no less than five thousand volumes, besides countless official records, phamphlets and newspaper files. This data was compiled and digested and then submitted to Mr. Griffith for a final verdict and selection of picturesque facts.

3/15

LEXINGTON HERALD

SCENE SHOWING PRESIDENT LINCOLN IN FORD'S THEATRE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPERA HOUSE MAR. 5

Lexington Herald 3/15

BIRTH OF A NATION.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Opera House all next week, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown in historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the looks of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work. adv

e from D. W. Griffith's Stupendous Spectacle THE BIRTH OF A NATION which comes to the Wallace atre, April 6, 7, 8.

Mc
Th ma app cigar his my I
w as th er fac salu
Appo
Sea

6

Telegraph 3/16

Society Note.

on his return to New York Theo- Mitchell, of "The Birth of a Na- forces, discovered that he had left d in his room in the Hotel Cecil, on, his evening trousers.

Mar 16

UFFALO ENQUIRER

e engagement of "The Birth of a ion," at the Star, is rapidly coming close; Saturday night will see the performance so playgoers who not viewed this wonderful spec- should not overlook the fact that a few more opportunities remain em to do so.

Albany (NY) 3/16

THE TIMES-UNION

THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Demand For Seats For That Attraction.

ontinuous line of seat purchasers nade the lobby of Proctor's Grand cularly noticeable ever since the for "The Birth of a Nation" on sale. The return engage- of this wonderfully popular his- t spectacle is for one week, daily, commencing next Monday oon. Judging from the present st in the sale of seats the en- ent here will be a record one. the Griffith spectacle is a most al entertainment one realizes one takes into consideration the hat it has established in every here it has played, a new length record. This alone means that more popular than any other g ever presented.

a Argus 3/16

E BIRTH OF A NATION."

Now on Sale for Entire Week.

ch of the large cities where D. ith's "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen at the Orpheum week, was produced last sum- re were long lines of patrons to buy seats for many months. the dull times that had fallen e theatre, these lines or of prospective buyers had ly disappeared. "Oh, there any advance sale," said the e attendant wearily when out an engagement. It took production of pictures and ot words—to bring back the ent queues. New York's , Chicago's Loop, Boston's street, looked like old times th the box office forces don- the lines of "The Birth of admirers stretching to the ven to the next street. The nomenon has been repeated other cities which the play d the present season. It course that the high class n moribund. Only the David W. Griffith's mas- has been required to infu- e.

Raleigh (NC) 3/16

NEWS AND OBSERVER
"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE HERE NEXT WEEK

(By the Press Agent.)

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the North and the South.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story. According to experts who have viewed the work, Griffith has not only surpassed in many ways the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-fashioned history or historical novel. A very eminent public man has nicknamed it "history by lightning."

Eighteen thousand people were employed in taking the historical pictures. One sees Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for troops, the battles of the conflict, Sherman's march, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the South in the throes of change, the carpet baggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the K.K.K. parties of war veterans and sons of vetrans are coming in great numbers to the Tremont. It is difficult for many of them to refrain from shouting the old war-cries or from shuffling the feet to the rhythm of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the picture are so skilifully managed, the interest is so tensely maintained, that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis?" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development. The epic method of narration has been adopted. Enormous ranges of time and space are covered. All the arts contribute to the spectacular realization of poetry, history and romance. In the 5,000 scenes of the picture there are said to be 200,000 histoical details. Besides the achievement of the picture itself, the exhibition of it employs 100 flesh and blood helpers at each performance.

Theatrical producers and observers are wondering what will be the next evolution. Will the motion picture replace the text book in the public schools? Will the Walter Scott's and the W. M. Thackery's of the future do pictures instead of novels? Will the historians be replaced by the camera man, and the still-life painter by one who like Griffith can turn out hundreds of Rembrandt, Corot and Turner-like scenes in an evening's entertainment?

Some of these queries seem daring now, even grotesque. Yet in view of what is happening around us it is hard—nay, impossible—to set any limits to the future achievements of the motion pictures.

Olympic.

Obwohl Griffith's Filmdrama „The Birth of a Nation" hier schon über 200mal aufgeführt worden ist, hat sich offenbar die Nachfrage nach nicht erschöpft. Es ist aber auch ein großartiges Schauspiel. Nie zuvor hat man solche Masseneffekte gesehen, wie die hier auf die Leinwand geworfenen Schlacht- und Straßenszenen.

Bekanntlich liegt dem Werke der bekannte Roman „The Clansman" zugrunde, worin geschildert wird, wie der Ku-Klux-Klan den Süden von der unter den „Carpetbaggers" eingeführten Negerherrschaft befreite. Griffith aber hat in „The Bird of a Nation" auch die Zeiten vor dem Kriege geschildert, sowie einige der markantesten Episoden aus diesem selbst. Die Aussöhnung zwischen Nord und Süd, die Neugeburt der Nation, bildet den Abschluß des Ganzen. Was aber „The Birth of a Nation" besonders interessant macht, ist die historisch getreue Wiedergabe der darin erscheinenden historischen Figuren.

Mar 16

SAN ANTONIO LIGHT

"The Birth of a Nation."

The painstaking accuracy with which D. W. Griffith staged "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented twice daily at the Grand opera house, is illustrated in the meeting of Generals Lee and Grant at Appomattox. Careful observers will note the slovenly appearance of Grant as contrasted with the immaculate appearance of Lee. Grant and his staff had just come in from a hard ride, with their uniforms and their boots all splashed with mud. Grant never wilfully violated the "proprieties" of good society and was very much ashamed of his own appearance when he saw Lee in full military regalia. In the losing struggle, half-starved along with his men, and with his heart broken, General Lee had yet found time and means to prepare himself properly for the last bitter moment of the Confederacy. Grant never quite forgave himself for his appearance that memorable day.

Pa Mar 16

EASTON DAILY EXPRESS

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen at the Orpheum next week exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities, where it has made record breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and with this frame work they make these wonderful characters live again.

They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across blood stained plains. The human note weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded.

Mar 16

EL PASO MORNING TIMES

REAL BATTLE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

So strenuous is the fighting in the big battle scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Texas Grand theater next week, that the spectator has difficulty, it is said, in making himself believe it is not real battles that were photographed. There is apparent no such faking as in seen in the rights of "supers" on the regular stage in Shakespearean and other plays where battles are portrayed.

As a matter of fact, there was a good deal of fighting in making "The Birth of a Nation," not so grim and terrible as that being witnessed daily on the battlefields of Europe, but as strenuous and exciting as that which characterizes a football game between two colleges, where rivalry is intense. During the several weeks of rehearsing and photographing these battles, an average of five men were carried to the field hospital daily for medical and surgical treatment. Fortunately, however, not a single death occurred.

There is no "faking" either, in the falling from their horses of several of the clansmen in their battles with the carpetbag rabble. The men impersonating the clansmen actually tumbled from their horses at full gallop while the cameras were turned on them. These men are "trick riders," who formerly made a dangerous living with "wild west" shows, and who are now in great demand by the motion picture producers. Mr. Griffith corralled the best of them for "The Birth of a Nation," and it is they who furnish so many thrills in the battle scenes. Mr. Griffith also employed some "trick horses," very difficult to train for this dangerous work, which will fall, as though shot dead, instantly at command of their riders, no matter how fast they may be galloping at the moment. These horses play their daring part in the battles of the ku-kluxers.

March 16, 1916.

Louisville Ky. Courier-Journal 3/16

ucky To-night—"The Birth of a Nation."

ghty spectacle opens a ts' return engagement at ucky to-night. Matinees on Friday and Saturday. nitude of David W. Grif- n staging "The Birth of a almost appalling. Instead for his background Grif- ed Nature. For subject ered 150 years of Amer- y. Eighteen thousand peo- ne his bidding and in the rides of the Ku-Klux e thousand riders and p over the dusty roads. er that this magnificent pectacle is the talk of the has established an en- art—the art of panto- n spectacle with an or- re perfectly synchronized n.

deeds of the Civil war rrors of Reconstruction live again and the na- is apotheosized. Mr. neer among directors, his stupendous achieve- t the aid of dialogue or motion pictures with effects tell vividly the of fifty years ago. The id symphony orchestra d here last fall is on

Paducah (Ky) Evening Sun 3/16

Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Kentucky for three matinees, commencing tonight, Matinees Friday and Saturday.

Kentucky—Tonight, "Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Kentucky commencing tonight for an engagement of three nights and Friday and Saturday matinees.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extraxagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power.

The same splendid symphony orchestra is carried by the spectacle.

MAE MARSH IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT LEXINGTON OPERA HOUSE, MARCH 20

Lexington (Ky) Leader 3/16

LEXINGTON OPERA HOUSE.

Seat Sale For "Birth of a Nation."

The sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation" will open tomorrow (Friday) morning. Owing to the enormous demand that will be made for them, no seats will be laid aside. All seats must be called for at the box office and paid for.

In each of the large cities where W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" was produced, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box offices. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theatre, these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared. "Oh, there won't be any advance sale," said the box office attendant wearily when asked about an engagement. It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—no words—to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop, Boston's Tremont Street looked like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of "The Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the curb or even to the next street. (Adv.)

Educational News-Democrat 3/16

"The Gathering of the Klan," one of the exciting scenes in the mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Kentucky Theatre tonight Friday and Saturday, matinees and nights.

642

FRIDAY MARCH 17 1916 Easton (Pa)

s Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type n Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

UCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in t of Elsie Stoneman, the Northoine. Miss Gish is a little crea- the "golden aureole" blond which makes for photographic aps the most poetical scene of tire drama is the one in which d Henry Walthall, as her Souther, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

She is singularly graceful, er features never lose their cy. Her eyes before the camera gularly expressive, and her actveys sincerity as well as true e charm.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Norther birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Sout erner, her native State being Ohio. F a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in th moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and be came a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

TH OF A NATION" HERE NEXT WEEK.

y theatric art invented by Griffith in producing "The a Nation," coming to the next week has enabled him by far any stage spectacle. and "The Blue Bird" were o be the high-water mark oductions. They sink into ace beside this epic of istory with its 5000 scenes racters, 3000 riders and tails, the result of eight tireless labor and the ex- of half a million dollars. ic picture of history in the of untold value to both old Besides the historical this great spectacle the motional throb of the ro y thrills the hearts of e supreme achievement of trionism in its new mmelled by the limita- theatre. Seats are now the entire week and there natinee every day includ

Easton (Pa) 3/17 Daily Express

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music, will play the Orpheum all next week. This is the great offering that opened a new era in the theatres of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many, many months. Despite great opposition, the play has never been suppressed, but has met the approval of censor boards, Judges, municipal authorities, publicists, editors and clergymen everywhere. It is pleasing to be able to note the fact that a metropolitan production of the finest quality and elaboration will be shown here.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops herman's march to the sea, the bat Pet rsburg, Lee's surrender and the awful tragedy of L assassination at Ford's The ril 14, 1865, live before the spe the Griffith drama. In the half the South's "second uprising—this time against the carpet bagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," "Ben Cameron," with the Northerner, "Elsie Stoneman," and that of the Unionist captain, "Phil Stoneman," with "Margaret Cameron," the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of love interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts, who are carried on tour in the traveling company of 50.

Seats are now on sale for all performances, and there will be a daily matinee commencing Monday afternoon.

Lexington (Ky) 3/12 News-Democrat

GREAT FILM PLEASES.

Return Engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" Greeted Heartily.

Even better in its projection and showing more distinctly upon the screen, "The Birth of a Nation" played its return engagements at the Kentucky last night. The initial showing was witnessed by a large crowd, a majority of whom came from the smaller towns of West Kentucky. The stupendous production again proved itself the master film of history, and drew unbounded applause from the audience. Its portrayal of the rescue of the South white race from the control of negroes and the carpetbaggers the Ku Klux Klan, the most dramatic action of the film, was wildly cheered by the audience. The film contin here for two more days.

THREE BATTLE SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," THE MIGHTY SPECACLE AT THE KENTUCKY TODAY, MATINEE AND NIGHT, AND SATURDAY MATINEE AND NIGHT.

Paducah Ky
News Herald

MARCH 17, 1916.

The Kentucky Today—"The Birth of a Nation."

The wonderful spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented again today, matinee and tonight, also Saturday, matinee and night at the Kentucky. The big symphony orchestra is one of the treats of the performance.

LA SALLE ILLINOIS

BIRTH OF NATION THRILLED CROWDS

Declared Greatest Pictures Ever Shown.

LA SALLE THEATRE PACKED

Civil War and Reconstruction Epoch Depicted Faithfully.

It was a capacity house which greeted the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the La Salle theatre last evening and the enthusiastic plaudits of the big audience was the best criterion of its appreciation of this remarkable presentation of "The Clansman" in the silent drama.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Director Griffith has presented a marvelous production, and the splendid cast handles the various roles in the most praiseworthy manner. One of the most thrilling scenes in the entire picture is the formation of the Ku Klux Clan, and later its capture of the negro whose body is thrown on the porch. This together with the finding of the Little Colonel by her soldier brother, after her fatal leap to escape her pursuer, stands out as the most powerful scenes of the drama, for they are the kind that grip the heart, and the rounds of applause they received proved they had "struck home."

Horrors of Reconstruction Period.

There is a touching love [illegible] which winds its way through the suffering scenes creating a keen interest in the fortunes of those around which it entwines, and the horrors of the reconstruction period are faithfully portrayed, as well as many historic incidents which lend dramatic intensity to the scenes enacted.

The human element is at all times uppermost, and the drama, which quite faithfully depicts a period in the history of this country over which few care to linger, portrays life as it appealed to the historian, for the passions of men ran high during these thrilling days, and the brute in man—both white and black—was often uppermost.

One of the finest characters in the drama, and one which has excited the most interest, is the splendid portrayal of the character of Lincoln at this particular period. The artistic manner in which this difficult role is handled well deserved the praise accorded it.

Splendid Music.

But the feature of the entire production is the fine orchestra of twenty pieces which so graphically portrays the thrilling scenes enacted on the screen. The power of music has seldom been borne home with greater force than in the wonderful musical setting with which this drama has been provided. This in itself is alone worth the price of admission, and the stirring strains of the national airs never fail to evoke a storm of applause.

While the "Birth of a Nation" has established a new record in prices for motion pictures in this city, all who attended last evening were unanimous in their verdict of approval. On all sides were heard words of praise for the fine evening's entertainment, and many unqualifedly declare it the greatest as well as the most remarkable product of the silent drama they had ever witnessed.

Albany Times-Union
3/17/16

THE TIMES-UNION

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

So many elements enter into the success of the romantic drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which will commence a week's engagement at Proctor's Grand next Monday afternoon, that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from many of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment. The first half of the Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion picture production. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of reconstruction days in the south, including the carpetbagger politician excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux-Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the blue and the gray.

"ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL,

ACTRESS WARNS "DON'T BE SELF-CONSCIOUS"

Miriam Cooper, Screen Star in "The Birth of a Nation" Says It is Stumbling Block of Careers.

In the opinion of Miriam Cooper, who interprets the part of the Southern belle, Margaret Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be at Proctor's Grand, Monday afternoon, Miria Cooper in "The Birth of a Nation" next week at Proctor's Grand.

next, the advice that really gave her the courage to do and dare was: "Don't be self conscious."

Self-consciousness is the stumbling block of many careers. People have too much of it for their own good. Of course many people in the public eye are afflicted with self-consciousness, though with some it is not of the super-coy variety.

"My self-consciousness," says Miss Cooper, "almost prevented me from having a career as an actress. I marvel now where I got the courage to ask Director D. W. Griffith for the opportunity of working in his studio. That Mr. Griffith knew of my weakness was evidenced in his first advice to me, 'Don't be self-conscious. Forget yourself or you will never amount to anything, anywhere.'

"Believe me I fought hard in those days to acquire a sense of perspective, an understanding of human and material values in the world. Despite the 'blues' of those early days, when it seemed to me I was just a bundle of mistakes, all hands and feet, I refused to think I was of no significance in life. Self-depreciation does not make for success, but to one who really realizes what a long, long journey it is to where fame awaits, it is no easy matter to overcome the experience which makes one feel that someone else, continually is noting one with disapproval.

"Since I have acquired a sense of proportion life has a new meaning for me. Now I am not afraid and I look upon every new character which I am scheduled to play as another opportunity, not a thing to be feared. And, best of all, I no longer despair that I will not achieve my ambition, though possibly that's a sign that I have reached that other extreme of self-consciousness — self-over-estimation."

Mr. Griffith regards Miss Cooper as one of his most important film-land "finds." "Someday," states this famous director, "I believe Miss Cooper will be the most talked about screen actress in the world."

"The Birth of a Nation."

So many elements enter into the success of the romantic drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a week's engagement at Proctor's Grand next Monday afternoon, that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from many of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, may be adequately interpreted a symphony orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production.

The first half of the Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion picture production. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpetbagger politician excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux-Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

LEXINGTON HERALD

Friday, March 17, 1916.

Personal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work In "The Birth of a Nation" Has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, Is Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

D. W. GRIFFITH.

THERE is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices and has got the so-called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The head of the canny Scot and the dunning Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

Today he stages the great outdoors and wields the purr of a kitten with the roar of artillery, runs the whole gamut of emotion in his film portraits of life and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked around for a career, but he found his entire output for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. There is where he began to develop his genius and get his grip on the pay-envelope of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pop."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up. He unerringly closely one sees that he is easing the strain, just as in the big climax of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by a flash of field flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is work, and he seeks relaxation in dancing. There is a story going along Broadway that recently Griffith turned down an offer from the manager of a restaurant cabaret for $100 a week to perform in the dances. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the manager why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh, and he is stubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the screen drama. He looks upon it as the youngest child of the fine arts, and he loves it accordingly.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blending of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score for "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he correlated tone to color, action and unconsciously hummed the several tunes and chords which have been a part of the wonderful score which itself has synchronized action in this stirring action. These notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Miss White Griffith was working like a fiend to finish his work and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

Big Battle Scene in D. W. Griff

Appomatox New Scene of Rul
(By The Press Agent.

Grown up with underbrush and pine is the spot that marks "the the war" when Gen. Grant and Lee, the opposing commanders, clasped hands, and Grant said, " have peace." There are few c comrades still left who remembright, sunshing day at App Court House, when the two g flanked by other generals of the mands, went into the Wilmer house and arranged the terms render that meant the end of t and the return of the citizen ar their civilian occupations.

Out of the beaten track as it is matox has fallen into ruin. T mous apple tree is now preserve in memory and in the quatrain c memorably by Roscoe Conkling Republican Convention of 1880 quiet little county-seat of App had slumbered in obscurity anti 9, 1865, when it took its place in h to be forever remembered in conn with the names of the great lead the Civil War and the end of th Cause.

Few of the old houses are rem in the little village. Unlike oth mous battlefields, there has been tempt to preserve the spot that a the most important event of the American conflict.

Because of this condition the li reproduction of the surrender of Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Gr Appomatox Court House in Dav Griffith's, "The Birth of a Nati particularly interesting and va The place is hallowed ground story of America and it is unpl to learn that fire and flood, hands and public indifference an of care have brought desolation spot whose name so appeals t North and South, there united i ing peace.

"The Birth of a Nation" will b at the Academy March 23, 24 a with matinees every day.

Lexington Herald
Date 3/17

LEXINGTON OPERA HOUSE
"Birth of a Nation."

The next attraction at the o se will be D. W. Griffith's mi ctacle, "The Birth of a Nati engagement begins on Mon ht and is for one week, y matinees commencing Tues r. Griffith was eight months r this wonderful story. He emplo 00 people and 3,000 horses and l cost of the work reached rmous figure of half a million . The story is one of roma adventure linked to the most v ods of American history. It s its facts with the rapidity tning and yet never departs f fundamentals of true drama. L conflict are its basic theme yriad of details illumine the re and lift it so far beyond a g our stage has ever known t usual avenues of comparison offer a road to follow in this ce. Linked with the drama is atic score which carries re themes with every vital sc character in the epic. This w al score which is synchronized drama is in itself an incompara of art. An orchestra of fo ls with the attraction to ham usical features of the present at part of history dealing wit rise and fall of the slavery prob is the vital spark upon which h has builded his story. The con which this question caused h duced in great battles and in al rilling things which are a part r.

s are now on sale

THREE BATTLE SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," THE MIGHTY SPECACLE AT THE KENTUCKY TODAY, MATINEE AND NIGHT, AND SATURDAY MATINEE AND NIGHT.

Paducah Ky News Democrat

MARCH 17, 1916.

The Kentucky Today—"The Birth of a Nation."

The wonderful spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented again today, matinee and tonight, also Saturday, matinee and night at the Kentucky. The big symphony orchestra is one of the treats of the performance.

LA SALLE ILLINOIS

BIRTH OF NATION THRILLED CROWDS

Declared Greatest Pictures Ever Shown.

LA SALLE THEATRE PACKED

Civil War and Reconstruction Epoch Depicted Faithfully.

It was a capacity house which greeted the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the La Salle theatre last evening and the enthusiastic plaudits of the big audience was the best criterion of its appreciation of this remarkable presentation of "The Clansman" in the silent drama.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Director Griffith has presented a marvelous production, and the splendid cast handles the various roles in the most praiseworthy manner. One of the most thrilling scenes in the entire picture is the formation of the Ku Klux Clan, and later its capture of the negro whose body is thrown on the porch. This together with the finding of the Little Colonel by her soldier brother, after her fatal leap to escape her pursuer, stands out as the most powerful scenes of the drama, for they are the kind that grip the heart, and the rounds of applause they received proved they had struck home."

Horrors of Reconstruction Period.

There is a touching love story which winds its way through the suffering scenes creating a keen interest in the fortunes of those around which it entwines, and the horrors of the reconstruction period are faithfully portrayed, as well as many historic incidents which lend dramatic intensity to the scenes enacted.

The human element is at all times uppermost, and the drama, which quite faithfully depicts a period in the history of this country over which few care to linger, portrays life as it appealed to the historian, for the passions of men ran high during these thrilling days, and the brute in man—both white and black—was often uppermost.

One of the finest characters in the drama, and one which has excited the most interest, is the splendid portrayal of the character of Lincoln at this particular period. The artistic manner in which this difficult role is handled well deserved the praise accorded it.

Splendid Music.

But the feature of the entire production is the fine orchestra of twenty pieces which so graphically portrays the thrilling scenes enacted on the screen. The power of music has seldom been borne home with greater force than in the wonderful musical setting with which this drama has been provided. This in itself is alone worth the price of admission, and the stirring strains of the national airs never fail to evoke a storm of applause.

While the "Birth of a Nation" has established a new record in prices for motion pictures in this city, all who attended last evening were unanimous in their verdict of approval. On all sides were heard words of praise for the fine evening's entertainment, and many unqualifedly declare it the greatest as well as the most remarkable product of the silent drama they had ever witnessed.

Albany Times Union 3/17/1916

THE TIMES-UNION

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

So many elements enter into the success of the romantic drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which will commence a week's engagement at Proctor's Grand next Monday afternoon, that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from many of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment. The first half of the Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion picture production. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of reconstruction days in the south, including the carpetbagger politician excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux-Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the blue and the gray.

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL,

ACTRESS WARNS "DON'T BE SELF-CONSCIOUS"

Miriam Cooper, Screen Star in "The Birth of a Nation" Says It is Stumbling Block of Careers.

In the opinion of Miriam Cooper, who interprets the part of the Southern belle, Margaret Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be at Proctor's Grand, Monday afternoon,

Miria Cooper in "The Birth of a Nation" next week at Proctor's Grand.

next, the advice that really gave her the courage to do and dare was: "Don't be self conscious."

Self-consciousness is the stumbling block of many [redacted] people [redacted] much of it for their [redacted]. Of course many people in [redacted] public eye are afflicted with self-consciousness, though with some it is not of the super-coy variety.

"My self-consciousness," says Miss Cooper, "almost prevented me from having a career as an actress. I marvel now where I got the courage to ask Director D. W. Griffith for the opportunity of working in his studio. That Mr. Griffith knew of my weakness was evidenced in his first advice to me, 'Don't be self-conscious. Forget yourself or you will never amount to anything, anywhere.'

"Believe me I fought hard in those days to acquire a sense of perspective, an understanding of human and material values in the world. Despite the 'blues' of those early days, when it seemed to me I was just a bundle of mistakes, all hands and feet, I refused to think I was of no significance in life. Self-depreciation does not make for success, but to one who really realizes what a long, long journey it is to where fame awaits, it is no easy matter to overcome the experience which makes one feel that someone else, continually is noting one with disapproval.

"Since I have acquired a sense of proportion life has a new meaning for me. Now I am not afraid and I look upon every new character which I am scheduled to play as another opportunity, not a thing to be feared. And, best of all, I no longer despair that I will not achieve my ambition, though possibly that's a sign that I have reached that other extreme of self-consciousness — self-over-estimation."

Mr. Griffith regards Miss Cooper as one of his most important film-land "finds." "Someday," states this famous director, "I believe Miss Cooper will be the most talked about screen actress in the world."

"The Birth of a Nation."

So many elements enter into the success of the romantic drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a week's engagement at Proctor's Grand next Monday afternoon, that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from many of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works, adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, may be adequately interpreted a symphony orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production.

The first half of the Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion picture production. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpetbagger politician excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux-Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

Big Battle Scene in D. W. Griffith's Eighth Wonder of the World, "The Birth of a Nation."

Appomatox Now Scene of Ruin.

(By The Press Agent.

Grown up with underbrush and scrub-pine is the spot that marks "the end of the war" when Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee, the opposing commanders, firmly clasped hands, and Grant said, "Let us have peace." There are few of the comrades still left who remember that bright, sunshine day at Appomatox Court House, when the two generals, flanked by other generals of their commands, went into the Wilmer-McLean house and arranged the terms of surrender that meant the end of the war and the return of the citizen armies to their civilian occupations.

Out of the beaten track as it is Appomatox has fallen into ruin. The famous apple tree is now preserved only in memory and in the quatrain cited so memorably by Roscoe Conkling in the Republican Convention of 1880. The quiet little county-seat of Appomatox had slumbered in obscurity until April 9, 1865, when it took its place in history to be forever remembered in connection with the names of the great leaders of the Civil War and the end of the Lost Cause.

Few of the old houses are remaining in the little village. Unlike other famous battlefields, there has been no attempt to preserve the spot that marked the most important event of the great American conflict.

Because of this condition the life-like reproduction of the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant at Appomatox Court House in David W. Griffith's, "The Birth of a Nation," is particularly interesting and valuable. The place is hallowed ground in the story of America and it is unpleasant to learn that fire and flood, vandal hands and public indifference and want of care have brought desolation to the spot whose name so appeals to both North and South, there united in lasting peace.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Academy March 23, 24 and 25, with matinees every day.

Lexington Herald Dec 5/17

LEXINGTON OPERA HOUSE.

"Birth of a Nation."

The next attraction at the opera house will be D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins on Monday night and is for one week, with daily matinees commencing Tuesday. Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 1,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of half a million dollars. The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It relates its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme but a myriad of details illumine the narrative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that unusual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an epic score which carries recurrent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of forty pieces with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has builded his story. The conflict which this question caused is reduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things which are a part of it.

Seats are now on sale. adv

712

SAN ANTONIO LIGHT

"Birth of Nation" Closes Saturday.

The attitude of Abraham Lincoln toward the newly-conquered south, as set forth in history, and as depicted in "The Birth of a Nation," now nearing the close of its second engagement at the Grand Opera House, has become the subject of one of those historical controversies that rank with the Shakespeare-Bacon debate. The Lincoln controversy resolves itself into the question of whether the war president was a strong and true statesman in laying down his policy of conciliation or a weak and enthusiastic visionary. A diary of the period, just published, in describing a caucus of radicals of the Stoneman type held immediately after the assassination of Lincoln, declares that the hostility of those who participated "toward Lincoln's policy of conciliation and contempt for his weakness was undisguised, and the universal feeling among radical men here is that his death was a godsend." The radicals had their way, and it was this way that resulted in the horrors of reconstruction so vividly depicted by Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation."

Lexington Herald 3/11

Seat Sale "The Birth of a Nation."

The sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation" opens this morning owing to the great demand for seats positively no seats will be laid aside, but all seats must be paid for and taken out when applied for.

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the City of Atlanta. Imagine, if you can, a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the reproduction is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, drear and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the South. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the Confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox courthouse with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture in every truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and indefinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

This magnificent spectacle will be presented at the Opera House all next week with daily matinees beginning Tuesday.

(Adv.)

68

Friday, March 17, 1916.

March as Human Movements Are Inspiring

D. W. GRIFFITH.

Poe, "The Telltale ... fanciful and lyrical ... Lee" and brought ... weird mysticism. The Avenging Con-ade channels these ... as superfine works. ... gained that meas-given many plays ... inferior in art and "Arrived."

"Birth of a Nation" com-... and himself facing ... that he had created ... associates and con-... unable to breast ... advancement. He ... world if he would ... finances and ar-... immensurate with ... outlet. His busi-... ays been looked ... se men were ap-... re willing to do ... ir power and re-... tion picture re-... essed as rapidly ... as not a channel ... appealing to him. ... must be a way. ... said that Griffith ... given a free rein ... th his own plans. ... his big work, it ... put the burden ... ffith's success in ... anced by his un-... able lieutenants ... ught this sense ... s labors in Cali-... about sizing up ... ed a young man ... ed with the old ... This man was ... oks after all of ... ests in the east ... ral manager of ... ny which owns ...

Stakes.

... out with this ... er forces about ... ime "The Birth ... ched. It's an ... the wiseacres ... ailure. Griffith Poe, "The Telltale was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

SOLID MAHOGANY R...

WARE

Fritz K...

WORLD'S FAM...

AUDIT...

Lexington, ...

Tuesday, April ...

Prices, $2.00, $1.50

Miss Katherine Coch...

419 West S...

SUN-JOURNAL, NEW BERN, N. C. SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 18

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT MASONIC THEATRE, MARCH 27-28TH —STIRRING SCENES OF CIVIL WAR; SOUTH'S SECOND UPRISING —THIS TIME AGAINST THE CARPETING REGIME; WONDERFUL!

MARCHING TO THE FRONT—BIG SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," MASONIC THEATRE, NEW BERN, TWO NIGHTS, TWO MATINEES, MONDAY AND TUESDAY, MARCH 27TH AND 28TH.

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with evening's performances opens an engagement of two days at the Masonic Theatre, New Bern, beginning Monday, matinee, March 27. Four performances—two each day.

The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theatre, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was ahe synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part-singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old war-time tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments," of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seymour as Lynch. Matinees will be given daily throughout the engagement.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING TO THE LYRIC WEEK OF MARCH 27

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lyric for the week of March 27, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the south from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thoughts. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading and having affixed his signature, rises the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordiary top boots, with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature ad faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy stride, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray, who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

Mr. Joseph Hensberg as President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's Gigantic Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" Which Will Be Seen at the Lyric Theatre week of March the 27th with a Matinee every day.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18.

The Kentucky—Tonight, "The Birth of a Nation."

The Kentucky—"Birth of a Nation." The last performance of the famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given at the Kentucky tonight and those who have not witnessed it should go tonight. Manager Finney announces he has a number of choice seats left.

"BIRTH OF NATION" RUN PROLONGED

Tulane Management Announces Another Week of Griffith Masterpiece.

To meet demands on the capacity of the Tulane Theater during the first week of "The Birth of a Nation," Manager Campbell has arranged to keep the Griffith masterpiece in New Orleans for another week. Starting Sunday with a matinee, there will be two presentations every day at 2 o'clock and at 8:15. The film will run three hours with one intermission and an orchestra of forty pieces.

That the New Orleans run of the production will equal that of other big American cities appears to be the forecast by the wonderful patronage which the first week's engagement has shown. Tickets for the second week's engagement will be on sale at the Tulane box office Saturday morning for all performances.

The records established in New Orleans by "The Birth of a Nation," are without a parallel in local theatrical history. Not since the opening of the seat sale two weeks ago has there been a lull in the line at the box office. Capacity audiences have filled the Tulane at every performance.

In line with D. W. Griffith's policy of operating "The Birth of a Nation" on the elaborate scale of a regular legitimate dramatic spectacle, the production will not be seen again in Louisiana after the close of the Tulane engagement. Because of this condition, hundreds of visitors from the parishes are availing themselves of week-end excursion rates which the railroads have announced commencing tomorrow.

ST. LOUIS TIMES.

"Birth of Nation" to Stay Two Weeks Longer.

Beginning with the Sunday matinee the D. W. Griffith production of "The Birth of a Nation," which has broken all records for long runs in this city, will commence its sixteenth week at the Olympic Theater and begin the last two weeks of its stay in this city. As Mr. Griffith has positively announced that he will never allow this production to get into the cheaper theaters and intends to store it away for a number of years to come, this will be the last opportunity for those who have delayed witnessing it to see one of the greatest spectacular productions ever produced.

As an object historical lesson of the Civil War and reconstruction period it is invaluable and with its beautiful love story it makes a most delightful entertainment of two hours and fifty minutes that is well worth anybody's time. There are 5000 scenes, 18,000 people and 3,000 horses used in the production and they are all there.

THE ARGUS: SATURDAY MORNING.

Thrilling Battle Scene of the Civil War in "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's Grand Next Week

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE GRAND NEXT WEEK

The new art of David W. Griffith, as exemplified in "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to Proctor's Grand for a week commencing next Monday afternoon, has enabled him to surpass by far any other stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of massive productions but they seem small in comparison with this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses and 200,000 details.

The war play of the stage such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Fritchie" seem tame after seeing the marvelous battles and the result of war as pictured in the dramatic exposition of Civil War days and the reconstruction period of our southland.

This realistic reproduction of history in the making is of untold interest to both old and young, for one can learn more of the birth of our nation from it than from the reading of a dozen historical works.

THE TIMES-PICAYUNE.

"BIRTH OF NATION" RUN PROLONGED

Tulane Management Announces Another Week of Griffith Masterpiece.

To meet demands on the capacity of the Tulane Theater during the first week of "The Birth of a Nation," Manager Campbell has arranged to keep the Griffith masterpiece in New Orleans for another week. Starting Sunday with a matinee, there will be two presentations every day at 2 o'clock and at 8:15. The film will run three hours with one intermission and an orchestra of forty pieces.

That the New Orleans run of the production will equal that of other big American cities appears to be the forecast by the wonderful patronage which the first week's engagement has shown. Tickets for the second week's engagement will be on sale at the Tulane box office Saturday morning for all performances.

The records established in New Orleans by "The Birth of a Nation," are without a parallel in local theatrical history. Not since the opening of the seat sale two weeks ago has there been a lull in the line at the box office. Capacity audiences have filled the Tulane at every performance.

In line with D. W. Griffith's policy of operating "The Birth of a Nation" on the elaborate scale of a regular legitimate dramatic spectacle, the production will not be seen again in Louisiana after the close of the Tulane engagement. Because of this condition, hundreds of visitors from the parishes are availing themselves of week-end excursion rates which the railroads have announced commencing tomorrow.

Last Day for "Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," which ... week's engagement at the ... House tonight, has authorized the announcement over his signature that the spectacle will never be exhibited in any other than a first-class theater at first-class prices. When it has served its usefulness in such playhouses it will be let out to the cheaper houses, after the manner of many theatrical attractions, it will be withdrawn entirely. Consequently all who wish to see the spectacle must see it in the large theaters. He ... is in the business permanently of producing great spectacles, and it is his intention to keep his name associated with the present high standard of excellence. He is a young man of 38, and has a long career before him. He is now at work on another huge production, entitled "The Mother and the Law," and has started the preliminary research work for a mammoth spectacle, on the theme of "The Holy Grail." These, and the features to follow like "The Birth of a Nation," will be shown in the first-class theaters at first-class prices. Mr. Griffith will never consent to cheapen his productions to the point of making them profitable in inferior third-rate theaters. For example, the big symphony orchestra of thirty pieces at the opera house could not be taken to a cheaper house, and its expense demands and mechanicians could not be paid their present salaries with the price of admission lowered. "The Birth of a Nation" in its present state of excellence could not be transferred to a cheaper theater ... more than could "Hamlet," and Mr. Griffith is determined that not one of its excellence shall ever be sacrificed. He intends to make his name on the screen ... sure a guarantee of excellence as Charles Frohman's was as sponsor for great ... drama.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NEXT WEEK

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in stating "The Birth of a Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith as used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

Courier

"Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's mighty epic, "The Birth of a Nation," will ... at the Bijou for four days ... next Sunday, exactly as it was presented earlier in the season ... made a record for this theater ... teen performances.

This new force in the ... entertainment is perhaps the ... widely discussed production ... in America. It is above all the greatest thing that has been ... by one producer. Images of the living details of the ... ous periods of American ... an evenings entertainment ... three hours. You are not ... nor is your imagination ... torical descriptions of ... instead you see it by ... It is history revived and ... making. The players ... roles have studied the ... tions of these ... from photographs and ... studies and with this ... make these ... again. Great ... your eye. Cities ... Thousands of ... rides across ... human note ... the entire ...

am Cooper in the "Birth of a Nation", Kentucky Theatre last time today.

Scene in "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctog's Grand next week, showing the great emancipator grant ing a mother her son's life.

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL

PROCTOR'S GRAND.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Next Monday afternoon one of the greatest theatrical successes of the century, "The Birth of a Nation," will come again to Proctor's Grand for a week's engagement of two daily performances. Although 20,000 people patronized the former engagement the advance sale indicates another record attendance. The success of this spectacle has been phenomenal in every city of this country where it has been shown. Length of run records have been broken in 10 different centers.

The first half of the big production, which exhibits the salient events of the war between the States, shows the formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theater April 14, 1865.

In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is depicted in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist, Captain Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the play.

The tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku-Klux-Klan were staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from

92

Albany N.Y. Times Union 3/18/16

STON DAILY EXPRESS

"The Birth of a Nation."

A great deal of film comedy is horses, but David W. Griffith, in "The rth of a Nation," which comes to e Orpheum all next week, proves t quiet, refined comedy is a big gh-maker, and pleases people bet-than the old style crude methods.
One of the best laughs in "The Birth a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in hospital scene gazing at "Elsie nonman." This particular bit is of "sure-fire" order, for never does audience miss the rapt devotion of sentinel, and the haughty expresof the young lady rebuking him a million-miles-away look.
aul LeBlanc is the name of the g actor who has made the unex-ed hit in the part. He is a New ans Creole by birth, and played edy roles with Mme. Bernhardt re going to Los Angeles, re Mr. Griffith discovered him. The ming of the young soldier is won-lly accurate to the period of 1864.
of the recent Civil War portraits e magazines and newspapers are t doubtless of this sentry figure.
ing what care Griffith has used producing the Civil War type. s Lillian Gish wears her cos-of Civil War and Reconstrucimes that are heirlooms in her Through Griffith's skill all the in the production are made to as if to the manner born, and kwardly moving about in habilito which they are unaccus-

EXINGTON LEADER

EXINGTON OPERA HOUSE.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. ffith's massive spectacle, coming the opera house for one week, bening tomorrow night, is the largest most important production of a ade, yet not a word is spoken thru-the performance of nearly three rs. Music supplies the absence of ch, mechanical effects and real-whilst the wizard of the screen, id W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 of film the thrilling romance of war between the States and the nstruction of the Southland.
idea of its magnitude may be from the facts that 18,000 actors 3,000 horses took part and that staging of this great "outdoor"
a cost half a million dollars.
eral of the actors are of Southneage. Henry Walthall, who the heroic role of the little Conte colonel, is a member of the known Walthall family of Ala-Miriam Cooper, who appears rgaret Cameron, is a direct dant of Charles Carroll, the nd signer of the Declaration of ndence. Mr. Griffith is the son rigadier general of the Confedrmy.

very character, however small, ffith has found just the per-needed. After that his mas-ection made each one give a characterization of the widely roles. The result was not t life itself. Such realism is n on the old-fashioned stage.
tations of the theatre were ay for Nature was Mr. Grif-
s. Panorama after panorevealed to the astonished e spectator. The most inagination could hardly pic-lf such scenes of splendor ce will be given beginning

New Orleans Times-Picayune

TIMES-PICAYUNE, SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1916.

Famous Ku Klux Klan scene in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Tulane Theater.

St. Louis Times MARCH 18, 1916

Albuquerque Chronicle 3/18

The Gathering of the Klans, a Thrilling Episode In "The Birth of a Nation," Coming to the Lyric for a Week's Engagement, Beginning Monday Matinee, March 27th.

"The Birth of a Nation" Will be the Attraction Next Week at Proctor's Grand Theatre.

Commencing next Monday afternoon Proctor's Grand will once again have for its attraction, D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, 'The Birth of a Nation.' The engagement is for one week of twice daily performances and the advance sale indicates another record week's attendance.

This historical drama has proved the greatest theatrical success of the present century. Over six million people have already seen it. As in New York, so in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, its popularity is measured by months of continuous performances.

The story, which commences with the coming of African slaves to America, pictures the Civil War with its terrific battles; Sheridan's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the fall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant; the assassination of president Lincoln; the ordeal of the reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem and the final establishment of an everlasting peace. These historic scenes are all shown in a way that links history to romance. It is all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world.

There are over 5,000 scenes and 200,000 historical details. The picture took eight months in the making and gave employment to 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses. The magnitude of this spectacle has made it one of the most talked about offerings in the history of the theatre. Richard Harding Davis has said that its battle scenes are the most wonderful and realistic ever presented to the American public.

A dual love interest runs throughout the story. The score of specially arranged classical, popular and original compositions is so synchronized to the action of the drama that it perfectly interprets the various emotions, interests and conflicts of the multitude of scenes.

Among the principals of the largest cast ever assembled for a dramatic entertainment are Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lew, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reed, Mary Reed, George Seigmann, Walter Jones, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Caye, John McGlynn, Ernest Campbell, John French and J. A. Beringer.

A symphony orchestra of 100 will interpret the score.

Allentown Pa. Leader 3/18

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

IT is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

THE MARCH OF THE MIGHTY CONQUERER (SHERMAN) TO THE SEA, IN "THE BIRTH OF THE NATION" AT THE LYRIC WEEK OF MARCH 27. WITH A MATINEE EVERY DAY.

Albany (N.Y.) Times Union 3/19

MIRIAM COOPER,

Who Has The Important Role Of Margaret Cameron In The "Birth Of a Nation," At Proctor's Grand All Next Week.

Lexington, Ky.

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce that D. W. Griffith has "set down the great American play at last." Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to, and the unique offering will be at the Opera House all next week with daily matinees commencing Tuesday.

During the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," the curtain at the matinees wil rise promptly at 2:15 and 8:15 at night. All persons not seated at that time will have to stand for over an hour as the house will be absolutely dark during that period.

The following is taken from the Mississippi College Magazine:

"A large number of the students and professors saw the great picture show, 'The Birth of a Nation,' at the Century Theater, in Jackson, recently. Those who saw this great production will never regret their going. It is really a great show; it is worth the price and much more. From the point of view of the promoter it is a great achievement, and one that the film men, as well as all of us, should be proud of. The picture show is a great educational and cultural force and surely it could do no better work than picture to those who have grown up since the war that terrible period of carnage and reconstruction. North and South are now united, 'one and inseparable, now and forever,' but this fact does not prevent the true Southerner feeling proud of the land that gave him birth. The Southern youth has a heritage that his Northern brother does not have. His people fought not for a cause they thought was right, but for a cause that they knew to be right. Viewed from all angles, where are to be found greater military leaders than Jackson, Lee, Johnston and others? Search the pages of history and you will never find braver heroes than those who followed the Stars and Bars. This is not mere sentiment, it is truth, and we stand ready to defend it. And you may tell the story of the Spartan mother in a vain attempt to rival the nobility and the heroism of the woman of the South, whose nobility was as becoming, whose heroism as real, as any queen or soldier ever exhibited. The greatest good in this connection that can come to us from seeing the picture is the fact that it shows us the history of the period as we can never get it from books alone, and leaves us, surely, with a resolve to try our best to appreciate what has been done for us, and to so live that those who gave us the South had may be able to say as they lie down to pleasant dreams, 'They are doing nobly the work that is now their's to do.'"

THE BALL BEFORE BULL RUN—"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

LEXINGTON OPERA HOUSE.

Birth of a Nation.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation reborn is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialog or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago. Seats are now selling. (Adv.)

BOSTON TRAVELER, SATURDAY

Edited by SALITA SOLANO

THE PEOPLE THEIR OWN CENSORS

The only rightful board of censors for motion pictures is the public itself. The principle upon which our nation is founded is that the people know what is best for themselves. They have jealously retained their right to read what they please, speak as they please and think as unrestrictedly as possible. A board of censors set up to determine what is proper for them to see on the screen reminds one more of Russian rule than of an American proceeding.

No reason exists for believing that a federal board of censors would be less arbitrary than a state board of censors. It would soon become tyrannical, independable and a possible hot-bed of graft. For there is no reason to presume it would be freer from this evil than any other body holding like authority.

Who can forget that incident of three weeks ago when the wiseacres of the Pennsylvania state board of censors orderd 75 feet of film cut merely because the Kaiser and his field marshal were shown thereon? And their authority was the statute prohibiting scenes that are "sacrilegious, obscene, immoral, indecent, or that tend to debase or corrupt public morals." If the Kaiser can be made to fit into this clause, where will such idiotic censorship stop?

S. S.

GREAT FILM

es With a Carload of Its Own Apparatus

Orchestra a Part of the Equipment—Takes Three Hours For Presentation.

Wayne Pierson, of New York, here today, in conference with ger William Shea, completing for the appearance at the torium, March 27, 28 and 29, of eally wonderful photoplay "The of a Nation." This production has been seen by hundreds of sands in almost every great city e east and middle west. The or of the scenario, who also "The Clansman" and "The ard's Spots," has received al- more than half a million in ities. A carload of special ma- l, some of which is a patent de- which throws the pictures with owless distinctness, comes with show, as does a full orchestra. is film is a mighty panoramic on of the Civil War and its out- . The performance lasts three s. Special trains will run from kville and arrangements for attendance from the north, and west were being completed y. The mail order department tickets has been opened already e Auditorium but the box will next Friday. There will be five ormances here, the nights of the 28 and 29 and the afternoons of last two days. "The Birth of ation" is generally regarded as r the greatest motion picture made.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE TEXAS GRAND TOMORROW

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Texas Grand tomorrow night. There will be two performances daily beginning Tuesday at 2:10 and 8:10 p. m.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it was presented in New York city, where the big drama broke every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Philadelphia and practically every other city of consequence in the United States.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation, its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of loves fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Then lands are overrun by a hungry horde of venseful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which made this nation so great after the chasm in its own blood.

A wonderful score of [illegible] accompanies the narrative, [illegible] upon a most stupendous scale. [illegible] has been overlooked. The [illegible] lined and fold in the most [illegible] that has yet been devised [illegible] man for such a purpose. [illegible] work is epoch-making. It [illegible] standards which it will [illegible] equal for many a year to come.

Personal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work in "The Birth of a Nation" has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, is Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

THERE is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at films at Broadway prices and has forced the so called classes to drop their vitiated classics and join the masses at the "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born at La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the South. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old South-land.

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole gamut of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he took to the stage for two years and then for a place with a film company. It is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up, observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain, just as in the big finishes of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by a flock of wild flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the high-pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. This director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is work, and he finds relaxation in dancing. There is a story going along Broadway that recently Griffith turned down an offer from the manager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the gallery. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the manager why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh, and he is clubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the art drama. He looks upon it as the largest sister of the fine arts, and he hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blends of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score to "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to his great production he correlated music to every action and unconsciously combined the several tunes and chords which now form a part of the wonderful score which Brell has synchronized well to this stirring action. These tunes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Brell while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work, and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

D. W. GRIFFITH

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

News & Observer
Raleigh N.C.
Mar 19 1916

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TRUTHFUL PICTURE

Of Necessity Sober and Sombre, Representing Critical Period in History of the States.

(By the PRESS AGENT.)

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation" to be seen at the Academy of Music March 23, 24 and 25, with matinees all three days, is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures the times that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached with levity. It is not a comedy, unless the word comedy be used as it was by Dante and Balzac. It is simply a faithful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature in those days. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle, comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

A typical Southern home is shown where all is of good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed the serenity. A young Northern lad is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds there is pure comedy. A few months later they are destined to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each others' arms.

Then there is shown the young daughter of the old Southern family; almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Later is seen her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps to her death from a high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy nevertheless.

Again there is a scene in "the negro quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the amusement of the Northern visitors. They dance the shuffle, buck and wing, and other steps to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw."

When the Camerons are besieged in the cabin of two Union soldiers by a mob of frenzied negro soldiers, a time when tragedy looms over the scene like a dread spectre, the audience goes into convulsions of laughter when the faithful old negro mammy hits a negro soldier on the head with a billet of wood. And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shades of life in striking contract to the more sombre scenes. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times, for tragedy follows comedy ever.

Mississippi-Blätter, Sonntag, den 19. März

Die St. Louiser Bühne.

Olympic.

Obwohl Griffith's Filmdrama „The Birth of a Nation" hier schon über 200mal aufgeführt worden ist, hat sich offenbar die Nachfrage nach nicht erschöpft. Es ist aber auch ein großartiges Schauspiel. Nie zuvor hat man solche Massineffekte gesehen, wie die hier auf die Leinwand geworfenen Schlacht- und Straßenszenen.

Bekanntlich liegt dem Werke der bekannte Roman „The Clansman" zugrunde, worin geschildert wird, wie der Ku-Klux-Klan den Süden von der unter den „Carpetbaggers" eingeführten Negerherrschaft befreite. Griffith aber hat in „The Bird of a Nation" auch die Zeiten vor dem Kriege geschildert, sowie einige der markantesten Episoden aus diesem selbst. Die Aussöhnung zwischen Nord und Süd, die Neugeburt der Nation, bildet den Abschluß des Ganzen. Was aber „The Birth of a Nation" besonders interessant macht, ist die absolut getreue Wiedergabe der darin erscheinenden historischen Figuren. „The Birth of a Nation" wird bis zum 2. April aufgeführt werden.

* * *

EL PASO HERALD

THE MAKING OF A GREAT MOVIE

The Tremendous Difficulties Overcome in "Birth of a Nation."

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil war and reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Texas Grand next week, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium now occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads of this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye.

Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw.

After it was over Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course.

It cost about $25 000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

albany N.Y. argus
MARCH 19, 1916.

"Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's Grand

To-morrow afternoon that wonderfully popular spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," returns to Proctor's Grand for a week's engagement of twice daily performances. The advance sale indicates a week that will rival in attendance the preceding engagement that some 20,000 people patronized. As before, a symphony orchestra of 30 will be a feature of the performances.

The Griffith pictorial drama has proved one of our most widely discussed theatrical offerings. It has been played in New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, Philadelphia and other large cities, where it established record-breaking runs. Over 5,000,000 people have already seep it.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a pictorial story of the most momentous years in the history of the United States. It is not a revelation of the future, but a recrudescence of the past. It is educational, and at the same time interesting and entertaining. Mr. Griffith used 150 years of American history as his subject, 18,000 people as his actors, 3,000 riders and horses as his cavalry. In the 5,000 scenes shown there are upwards of 200,000 historical details. The locale is the South before and after the Civil war.

Nature made the backgrounds and army men directed the thrilling battles. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina Legislature of 1870, are facsimiles of the originals. Altogether it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in moving pictures.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score, arranged after Griffith's suggestion, now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call.

Among the principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor, whose family is historically connected with the story; Lillian Gish, as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis, as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp, as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann, as the mulatto Lieutenant Governor of South Carolina; Walter Long, as the renegade Gus; Raoul Walsh, as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden, as the Octoroon housekeeper, Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell, as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron, as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell, as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron.

RNING STAR, WILMINGTON, N. C.

David W. [illegible] nary achievement with his great [illegible] tacle, "The Birth of a Nation," [illegible] comes to the Academy of Music [illegible] days, starting Wednesday, March 29, is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the North and the South.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story. According to experts who have viewed the work, Griffith has not only surpassed in many ways the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-fashioned history or historical novel. A very eminent public man has nicknamed it "history by lightning."

Eighteen thousand people were employed in taking the historical pictures. One sees Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for troops, the battles of the conflict, Sherman's march, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the South in the throes of change, the carpetbaggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the K. K. K. Parties of war veterans and sons of veterans are coming in great numbers to the Tremont. It is difficult for many of them to refrain from shouting the old war-cries or from shuffling the feet to the rhythm of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the picture are so skilfully managed, the interest is so tensely maintained, that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development. The epic method of narration has been adopted. Enormous ranges of time and space are covered. All the arts contribute to the spectacular realization of poetry, history and romance. In the 5,000 scenes of the picture there are said to be 200,000 historical details. Besides the achievement of the picture itself, the exhibition of it employs 100 flesh and blood helpers at each performance.

Theatrical producers and observers are wondering what will be the next evolution. Will the motion picture replace the text book in the public schools? Will the Walter Scott's and the W. M. Thackerys of the future do pictures instead of novels? Will the historian be replaced by the camera man, and the still-life painter by one who, like Griffith, can turn out hundreds of Rembrandt, Corot and Turner-like scenes in an evening's entertainment?

Some of these queries seem daring now, even grotesque. Yet in view of what is happening around us, it is hard—nay, impossible—to set any limits to the future achievements of the motion pictures.

Scene in The Birth of A Nation Coming to the Academy of Music, four days beginning Wednesday March 29.

Argus (Albany N.Y.) 3/19

Battle Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" and David W. Griffith, at Proctor's Grand Week of March 29.

Mar 1 9
St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat.

Wilmington N.C. 3/18

SUNDAY DISPATCH, MARCH 19

"The Birth of a Nation,"

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his new photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Academy of Music for four days, beginning March 29, is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of Slavery, the War of Secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of Reconstruction, and the restoration of the South to its own. These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the motion picture camera. The master producer had the faith of an enthusiast. Within 12,000 feet of celluloid film he has successfully combined a thrilling, plausible and dignified presentment of national upgrowth with a real and human love-story based on Thomas Dixon's book-romance, "The Clansman." As it appears to the newspaper and magazine critics, Mr. Griffith has not only surpassed the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-style history or historical novel. The best characterization of it so far is that of a very eminent public man who has called it "history by lightning."

Mr. Griffith employed 18,000 people in taking these historical pictures. The battle scenes were actual duplicates of several of the Civil War conflicts and so were the facsimiles of important events. We see Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for volunteers. Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the Freedman's Bureau, the carpetbaggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the Ku Klux. The realism is almost uncanny. Often the old war shouts are heard in the audiences from the lips of veterans who momentarily forget that it is only a picture. It is hard to keep one's feet from dancing to the well-beloved tunes of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the pictures are so skilfully managed that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development, the old dramatic form having been thrown away and the epic or historical form substituted. The old reproach against the "ten-cent movie" is forever removed. It is a curious sight now in New York to see dozens of speculators asking three and four dollars a seat for a moving picture whilst inside at the box office the public gladly pays the regular scale of prices at a fashionable metropolitan theatre.

The labor involved in this newest sort of picture-making is enormous. There are 5,000 separate and individually-posed scenes involving about 200,000 interesting details. The musical score is as complex and elaborate as that of any grand opera. Although not a word is spoken on the stage, the musical and mechanical effects employ a hundred flesh-and-blood helpers nightly. In brief, the magnitude of the stupendous film dwarfs the average stage play into insignificance.

Theatrical producers and observers are wondering what will be the next evolution of the art. Will the Cinema replace the text-book in the public schools? Will the Walter Scotts and the W. M. Thackerays of the future do pictures instead of novels? Will the historian be replaced by the camera man, and the still-life painter by one who, like Griffith, can turn out hundreds of Rembrandt, Corot and Turner-like scenes in an evening's entertainment?

Some of these queries seem daring now, even grotesque. Yet, in view of what is happening around us, it is hard—nay, impossible—to set any limits to the future achievements of the motion picture.

TRIO OF BEAUTIES IN 'BIRTH OF NATION'

Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper Talented and Charming.

MISS MARSH A FILM "FIND"

Griffith Gave Her Opportunity to Show Skill As Actress, and She "Made Good."

A trio of contrasting feminine charm, talent and temperament is featured in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand theatre all this week, in the persons of Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper. To these three unusually attractive young women fall roles so important in sentiment, in love, humor and romance that any actress, no matter what her ability or reputation in the world of mimic art, would welcome the opportunity to interpret them.

Mae Marsh, for instance, is a veritable wonder of changing personalities. She has been seen as a tomboy, a young miss just home from boarding school, a domestic at the wash tub, a sweet girl graduate, a young woman of fashion, a romantic heroine, a grisette and a slavey, a soubrette cut-up, and as she is seen at the Grand as an everyday freckle-faced rather homely and always roguish kid.

A roguish kid, by the way, expresses Miss Marsh herself. Due to her youthful love of adventure and without any experience in acting whatever, she asked director D. W. Griffith for an opportunity to act, and got it. She has proved one of Mr. Griffith's greatest "finds" of filmland.

Lillian Gish is of the adorable blonde type. She has a style of beauty that lends itself to every representation of daintiness. The life of a blonde before the camera is hardly one of peaches and cream, for a poor light or an indifferent pose substitutes age for youth in the most distressing fashion. Miss Gish, however, is camera proof and for this reason she enjoys the reputation of being the one blonde among many with whom the photographic machine cannot play tricks. Away from pictures and Miss Gish is a well groomed, fashionably garbed, delightfully slim young woman one would never suspect ever posed, at least before a movie camera.

Miriam Cooper, the southern belle Margaret Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation," is the anthitesis of Misses Marsh and Gish. She is a distinct brunette with a wealth of raven hair, classic features and big expressive eyes. A southerner by birth and breeding, Miss Cooper was admirably equipped in every way to play her present part. If you ever meet this very dignified and reserved young actress you will recognize her at once, for she is very much her true self on the screen.

Possibly you think the actresses of cameraland have an easy time of it. They don't—far from it. At 9 o'clock each morning every player must be ready at the studio or location, already costumed for the role. The work before the camera is a grind, not the pleasureable work the average person imagines it to be. For every pose made use of, at least twenty-five poses have been rehearsed and possibly a dozen poses photographed. For instance, out of the 140,000 feet of film used in making the "Birth of a Nation," Griffith selected only 12,000 feet. From this statement one can readily imagine the weeks of wearying posing that counted for nothing in the end.

THREE CHARMING YOUNG WOMEN WHO HAVE IMPORTANT ROLES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," FILM SPECTACLE AT GRAND ALL THIS WEEK

LILLIAN GISH

MIRIAM COOPER

'BIRTH OF A NATION' AT GRAND ALL WEEK

Spectacular Film Will Be Presented Every Afternoon and Evening.

Tomorrow afternoon the Griffith masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," will return to Proctor's Grand theatre for a week's engagement, with matinee and night performances daily. Despite the fact 20,000 persons attended the former engagement at the Grand, the present seat sale indicates another successful week.

The magnitude of this spectacular offering makes by comparison all other theatrical productions look inconsequential. Here are shown hundreds of scenes, thousands of actors and horses; armies in landscape in place of squads of mere supers jostling on a platform among canvas scenery. Here is the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war.

Here are social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies. Here is a whole art gallery of scenery, of humanity, of still life and life in wildest career.

Here are portraits of streets, homes, wilderness; pictures of famous conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, armies, pictures of family life, of festivities; ballrooms and battlefields, hospitals and flower gardens, hypocrisy and passion, ecstacy and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self sacrifice and tyranny.

Here is depicted the south in its wealth, its home luxury and wind swept cotton fields; here are shown its soldiers riding away to war and trudging home in defeat with poverty ahead of them and ghastly difficulties confronting them on every side. The realism of the work is amazing, astounding in its grandeur and faithfulness to actuality.

"The Birth of a Nation" has proved the most remarkable theatrical success of a century. It has broken record runs in New York and every large city in the country where it has been shown. It is estimated that about 6,000,000 persons have seen the piece so far.

An operatic score which is synchronized to the action of the drama, will be interpreted by an orchestra of thirty pieces.

MAE MARSH

Henry Walthall
In "The Birth of a Nation"
At The Grand

3/19

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" in "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this night have seemed a fairy story. At present it is a reporter's notebook sketch of real events, and there is a small fund of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN, AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

LILLIAN GISH AND PAULLE BLANC IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPERA HOUSE MONDAY

3/19

3/19

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A play within a play is a bit of dramatic construction which has often been utilized by dramatists since the the play became an institution. Perhaps the earliest and most prominent utilization of this constructive detail as far as the English speaking stage is concerned is the play scene in "Hamlet," which Shakespeare uses as an effective part of the earlier development of his tragic plot.

Nothing of this sort has ever been revealed upon so pretentious a plan as is shown in David W. Griffith's motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Opera House for a week's engagement, beginning tomorrow night. There will be daily matinees beginning Tuesday. Griffith's scene is the reproduction in historic and dramatic detail of Ford's Theater, Washington, D. C., on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth before the eyes of a gala audience gathered on that occasion to celebrate the close of the Civil War.

This scene is one of the tense dramatic moments in a story that is astonishing for its thrilling action. The drama is a complete story within itself and yet is a vital part of the entire story which is covered in the larger plan of the spectacle. From a technical viewpoint it is one of the most interesting achievements in the annals of the American stage.

In the language of motion picture production it is known as "a studio scene." This means that it was built indoors and had to be specially constructed to get the desired effect. It is the largest interior set ever built for a motion picture story. The scene is, in minute detail, an exact reproduction of Ford's Theater as it appeared upon this historic occasion. Numerous authentic works upon the subject were studied to get the exact measurements and dimensions of the old theater. In this research the fundamentals were furnished by Nicolay and Hay's "Abraham Lincoln, a History." It will be recalled that the writers served as secretaries to President Lincoln and were in close touch with the stirring events of that period. A detail showing the thoroughness of the work is the picture of Booth's leap from the presidential box after he had fired the fatal shot. The distance covered in this leap was 12 feet. The actor playing Booth had to be carefully rehearsed in this scene and to get the important detail of his spur catching in the flag that draped the box. This accounts for the fall which resulted in Booth fracturing his leg. The leap takes just one second in the picture, but it had to be rehearsed time and time again, and Raoul Walsh, who played Booth before the real picture was caught just as Booth made the jump to the stage and rushed out of the theater, via way of the stage door. Walsh wore out three pairs of trousers at the knees before the right picture was caught. This will give one an idea of the difficulties of the leap he made.

This entire scene of Ford's Theater was the most difficult of all to take except the big battle scenes immediately preceding it. These being in the open, the camera men were not hampered by demands of accuracy to the minute extent that they were in taking this important interior. Mr. Griffith was fortunate in being able to secure the aid of several eye witnesses of the actual events who were present with him when the picture was taken. Chief among these was Dr. Chapman, the noted prohibitionist and lecturer, who lent material assistance in supplying important facts. As stated, the night was a gala one to celebrate peace. Everybody of note was on hand and the women were dressed in the height of fashion. The men in the audience included famous generals and statesmen who had just written their names into history. The play was "Our American Cousin," with Laura Keene playing her farewell engagement in Washington. Old prints, prompt books of the play and surviving actors of the cast supplied the facts regarding the appearance of the stage settings and the players on that night. Other eye witnesses told how the orchestra was arranged and the general appearance of the audience was further described by these attendants in addition to the written data on the subject.

When it came time to take the picture, many remarked upon the wonderfully realistic effect. They said the actress simulated Mrs. Lincoln's dress and appearance so wonderfully that she seemed to be living over again the scenes of that night.

Joseph Henabery, who portrayed President Lincoln, was selected from twenty different players who were coached and prepared for the part before he was voted the one. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the President reaching back for his cloak just a few minutes before Booth attacked him. It was a spring day in Washington, but a late frost set in that evening and it turned quite raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill of it or else some mysterious force communicated the chill of the impending tragedy to him just a moment before the end came. As

Sunday
March 19, 1916

LEXINGTON LEADER

Mystery of John Wilkes Booth's Burial Bared After Fifty Years

Two Actors in the Closing Scene of the Great Tragedy Reveal Story of the Hiding of the Body midnight of April 27, 1865, the at the little summer house of Washington Arsenal grounds, overlooked the Potomac and by officers as a landing challenged sharply, as by the lantern he saw approach- squad of men and made outlines of a team, says New York Sun. The and a man, an officer, himself from his compan- forward with the counter-guard saluted, there was a conversation, then the offi- to the squad, who ad- one man leading the horses. the dim lantern light the officer out a bundle in one corner of house and issued a com- men picked up the bundle it in the cart. The senti- mystified as the detach- then disappeared down the avenue in the darkness.

The mystified guard would have even more amazed at the pro- had he known that the wrapped in a gunnysack con- the body of John Wilkes assassin of President Lin- was Dr. and that the officer George Loring Porter, an assistant United States army surgeon who had designated to dispose of it.

Dr. Porter is still alive and resides Bridgeport, Conn. Aside from Capt. Christian Rath he is the only person alive so far as the writer knows who had anything of import- ance to do with the body of Booth, the execution of four of the Lincoln conspirators and the imprisonment at Fort Jefferson, Dry Tortugas, of four others.

The Bridgeport physician is the last of a trio of men who told the writer of what was done with Booth's body and of the execution of Mrs. Mary E. Surratt, David E. Herold, Lewis Payne (Powell) and George A. Atzerodt, and the incarceration of Mudd, O'Laughlin, Spangler and Arnold at Fort Jefferson.

Fate Played Strange Tricks.

Fate played strange tricks in the narration of the story, for it is a matter of more than a quarter of a century since former Commander Hutchinson, U. S. N., was met at Manitou Springs, Col. The fact that members of the writer's family have been officers in the United States Navy since 1804 and that Commander Hutchinson had been shipmate with the writer's father during the civil war probably accounts for the willingness of Commander Hutchinson to tell of the part he played in the final scenes of the great tragedy.

Some years later in a mail car of a train running between Grand Rapids, Mich., and Detroit the writer made the acquaintance of Capt. Christian Rath, then a clerk in the railway postal service, but in 1865 provost marshal of the District of Columbia, the man who with his own hands made the nooses used and who executed the four Lincoln conspirators. From him was learned the part he played in the great drama's finale.

About a score of years later, at Bridgeport, in many chats, Dr. Porter described his connection with the Lincoln conspirators and his secreting of the body of Booth.

Late one summer night in 1889, seated on the veranda of the old Cliff House at Manitou Springs, Col., the writer was chatting with Commander Hutchinson. The conversation drifted lightly along from one topic to another until it finally touched on the navy. Suddenly the Commander said:

"Ever know I was the executive officer of the old monitor Montauk and was on duty the night the body of John Wilkes Booth, Lincoln's assassin, was placed aboard?"

Tells a Most Interesting Story.

Without waiting for a reply the former naval officer started to relieve his mind and the manner in which he denounced the army officers who rode over naval etiquette and tradition at the time referred to would have delighted the hearts of any officer who ever trod a quarterdeck of Uncle Sam's. After twenty-five years the conduct of the army officers still rankled.

It was not such a difficult matter to visualize the scene Commander Hutchinson described. One could picture the grim monitor Montauk dropping down from the navy yard at Washington to an anchorage in the east branch of the Anacostia, just above the monitor Saugus, on which were the prisoners, Mrs. Surratt, Arnold, Payne and Mudd. No person aboard knew why the ship's berth had been changed. There was an air of mystery and suppressed excitement among crew and officers. The hour was nearly midnight.

When the sulphurous remarks of the officer ceased he took up the thread of his yarn in this fashion:

"The news which Lieut. Col. C. J. Finger brought to Washington at 5 o'clock on the afternoon of April 26 that Booth had been shot and had died three hours later at the Garrett farm and that Herold was a prisoner spread with the rapidity of a Colorado prairie fire. It did not take long to reach the navy yard and come aboard the old Montauk.

"We were much excited and elated, the latter because Booth was dead, the former because below deck, under guard, double ironed and heavily hooded, were O'Loughlin, Atzerodt and Spangler.

"Lord," ejaculated Commander Hutchinson, after he had succeeded in quieting a close burn to his satisfaction. "It doesn't seem nearly a quarter of a century ago that I was talking with Capt. Montgomery, in command of the Montauk, when an order came from Secretary of the Navy Welles for the monitor to drop down from the yard to the east branch of the Anacostia and come to anchor above the Saugus, and to clear the ship for action at midnight.

"As ordered, the ship left her berth and promptly at 8 bells (midnight) all hands were piped to their stations and the ship cleared for action. A picked marine guard, armed with rifles and cutlasses, was ordered to fire upon any boat which attempted to come alongside without hailing.

Hail Comes From Darkness.

"Three bells had struck about fifteen minutes before, when suddenly we were hailed from the darkness. The speaker said he was Col. L. C. Baker, then head of the secret service, with an order from Secretary of War Stanton to the commandant of the Washington Navy Yard to permit him to come alongside to transfer one or more prisoners. Baker was on the forward deck of a tug, and I ordered him to lay alongside.

"When the tug was made fast over the rail came four men, carrying a body sewed up in a blanket—one of the gray army blankets. This I directed to be carried forward and placed on a carpenter's bench on the deck. I placed a guard over the body with instructions to permit no person to approach it. The guard had no idea at that time, nor did I, whose mitted to ask any questions.

"Going aft I found that Herold had been placed aboard and was standing on deck while double irons were fitted to him. It came to me like a flash of lightning that the body in the blanket must be that of President Lincoln's assassin, John Wilkes Booth.

"Later I learned that Booth's body had been sewn in the blanket by Lieut. Edward P. Doherty, who was in command of the cavalry which pursued Booth and Herold. (Doherty died in New York April 3, 1897, while serving as general inspector of street paving. After Lieut.-Col. Conger had reported to Secretary of War Stanton the facts of the shooting and death of Booth and the capture of Herold the Secretary ordered Col. Baker to take a tug, go to Alexandria and meet the steamer John S. Ide, Capt. Wilson, which was coming up the river, and take charge of the body of Booth and of the prisoner Herold. This transfer was made at 10:40 o'clock that night, as the Secretary of War had ordered. All of which explains why the old Montauk shifted her berth so hurriedly.

"About six bells (11 o'clock) that morning hell started to pop on the quarter deck of the Montauk. Surgeon-General Barns and a party of officers and civilians came aboard and without a word to a soul marched forward and started to undo the lashings about the blanket covered body of the assassin. Their high handedness and utter disregard of the courtesy due from one officer to another came within an ace of causing them to be shot by the guard."

(Follows the report made by Lieutenant-Commander Hutchinson to Commodore Montgomery and by him transmitted to the Secretary of the Navy: "About 11 o'clock a. m. Surgeon-General Barnes came on board and without asking for the captain of the guard or the commanding officer of the vessel or showing any written [illegible] military etiquette [illegible] the officer [illegible] up to the [illegible] and then [illegible] body was taken [illegible] 'By orders of hte Secretaries of War and Navy.' And afterward Major Eckert produced the written order.")

Herold's Chance To Cheat Gallows.

"Herold had his chance to cheat the gallows just before the sort of military coroner's jury was convened to establish officially the identity of Booth's remains, but was too much of a coward to grasp it," went on Commander Hutchinson. "Personally I had an awful scare, but it has always been a question to my mind if he ever realized his opportunity.

"Herold was brought on deck to be photograph[illegible] below thru the forward hatch [illegible] moved forward with the sentries. He wore handcuffs and to his leg irons were attached a chain and thirty-two pound shot, which was carried by one of the guards.

"As Herold approached the turret the gangway narrowed and here was his one chance to cheat the gallows, for his feet fell on the deck a short distance above the water. A sudden rush to the right and he would have gone over the unrailed deck of the Montauk; the impetus of the dash would have carried the shot, if not the guard, after him. Two minutes later the last breath of Herold would have appeared as bubbles on the surface from where his body lay anchored in the mud three fathoms below.

"His chance was gone in an instant. But the possibilities flashed thru my brain as I ran forward to where Herold and his guards were.

"After Herold had been removed below Surgeon-General Barnes and his assistant started the autopsy on the deck forward of the turret, which Herold had passed but a few minutes before; the commission or coroner's inquest being held in the commanding officer's cabin at the same time. Several persons had recognized the remains as those of John Wilkes Booth and had so testified. Charles Dawson, chief clerk of the National Hotel, positively identified the body by the initials 'J. W. B.' which had been tattooed in India ink on the right hand between the thumb and forefinger.

Another Makes The Identification.

"Another witness whose identification was beyond cavil or question was Dr. J. Frederick May, who had Booth as a patient a couple of years before, when he removed a small tumor from the assassin's neck, on the left side, three inches below the ear.

"I accompanied the commission on deck, where the body was examined and the scar found as described by Dr. May. This ended the identification testimony. Soon after Surgeon-General Barnes and his party, save Col. Baker left the ship.

"For what followed I was severely reprimanded," declared Commander Hutchinson, "and it was not my fault. It was wholly due to the high handed manner in which the army and secret service men handled things. The body of Booth was bent double and wrapped in a blanket, then in a gunny sacking, firmly lashed into place.

"Col. Baker of the secret service called away a small rowboat and with two men placed the body in it and rowed down the river. That is the last I ever saw of the remains of the assassin. Baker never even waited for the box for the remains, as ordered by the department. Everything was done with a rush and with the greatest secrecy. I made a report on the matter which Commodore Montgomery included in his and forwarded it to the department."

A score of years later at Bridgeport, in the study of his home, surrounded by books, valuable manuscripts and priceless Lincolniana, Dr. George Loring Porter in a number of chats told the writer of his stumbling on the corpse of the assassin, and how he later secreted it, acting under orders from the government. For four years the public never knew where the body was, altho many outlandish and [illegible] reports as to its [illegible] were [illegible] in various publications. [illegible] that [illegible] move the remains to Baltimore for interment and that they are buried in Greenmont Cemetery.

Dr. Porter at the time of the closing scenes of the great drama was an assistant surgeon in the United States army, stationed at the Washington arsenal and was in medical charge of the Lincoln conspirators. It was probably due to this fact and his superb war record that he was chosen for the task of securely hiding the body of the President's assassin, and Porter related his connection with the affair in this manner:

Porter Tells of His Connection.

"[illegible] afternoon, April 27, 1865, Mrs. Porter and I took a boat ride down the Potomac, returning to the officers' landing at the arsenal grounds.

"We had to pass thru the summer house to reach the landing, as we did I noticed in one corner some bundle securely wrapped in gunnysacking, but had no idea what it was, nor did I ask. The mere fact of a sentry's being posted at such an unusual place excited wonderment, but in those unsettled times we knew better than to ask questions.

"Later I learned that, acting under orders, Col. Baker had the body taken from the Montauk at 3 o'clock that afternoon by two men in a boat, who rowed down the eastern branch and to the landing on the west side of the arsenal grounds, where it was placed under guard. The landing ended at the summer house, and the bundle seen in the corner by Mrs. Porter and myself as we passed thru after being halted by the sentry, was the body of Booth.

"Sentries all about the reservation were calling the hour of midnight from their various posts when the military storekeeper of the arsenal, E. M. Stebbins, four enlisted men, one of them leading a team attached to a cart, another carrying a lantern, and myself, the only commissioned officer present, met at the little summer house, where a sentry stood guard over the thing in the gunnysack. The four enlisted men were members of the Ordnance Corps and were picked for their reliability and discretion. They were sworn to secrecy regarding the happenings of the night.

"Two of the men picked up the gunnysack bundle, grunting at its unexpected weight, and placed it in the body of the cart. At a word the man leading the team started down the avenue. Men marched on each side of the cart, Stebbins brought up the rear and I marched ahead with the man carrying the lantern, the flickering rays of which cast weird and fantastic shadows on the broad avenue. Not a member of the party spoke. The only sounds to break the stillness were the crunching of the cart wheels, the shuffling of our feet and the fall of the horses' hoofs on the gravel road.

"We marched down the avenue to the west side of the penitentiary, repeatedly challenged by the sentries as we approached their posts. The series of buildings known as the penitentiary was about 250 feet long.

"Between the administration and jail ends of the penitentiary was a middle section, which had been used as a storage place for fixed ammunition at the outbreak of the war and later as a general storage place. It was a large room about 50 by 40 feet, with stout supporting columns of cedar. There were two enormous doors in it sufficiently large to admit a wagon, opening on the north and south sides.

Shadows Cast Over Shallow Grave.

"The cart was led to one of the doors, which Military Storekeeper Stebbins unlocked. Once we were inside the apartment the door was carefully locked and the cart led to the extreme southwest corner of the apartment. By the flickering light of the lantern we saw a shallow hole before us. Whether there was a [illegible] I do not know. A pile of dirt [illegible] on one side of the excavation [illegible] shadows were cast by the lantern light falling on the gun boxes and packing cases.

"Two of the men picked up the body of Booth, still in its wrapping of gunnysacking and enshrouded in an army blanket, and deposited it in the shallow hole, which could not be dignified by the term grave. This was quickly filled with earth, packed down and the surface smoothed off. The surplus dirt was thrown into the cart and taken away. As the room had a dirt floor there was little trouble in concealing the fact that a hole had been dug, an object placed in it, then filled up and the surface restored to its usual condition.

"When the main part of the old penitentiary building was torn down in 1867, necessitating the removal of the remains of Booth, the key of the apartment could not be found and there is said to have been a lively time at the War Department, for the key had been in the care of Mr. Stanton, secretary of war. Finally it was found, the door unlocked and in the presence of a large number of officers the body of Booth was removed from the place where we had secreted it to one of the large stone vaults [illegible] the arsenal grounds. There it reposed until 1869, when President Johnson gave Edwin Booth permission to have it removed to the Booth lot in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, where it was interred.

"When Booth's body was taken from the place where we had concealed it the remains of the four executed conspirators, Mrs. Surrat, Payne, Herold and Atzerodt, were disinterred from the penitentiary yard and buried near the body of Booth. All of the buildings which were standing forty-five years ago on the night of the so-called burial of Booth have been razed, so far as I know, to give place to the War College and officers' quarters."

Swaying with the motion of the car and working his mail, Capt. Christian Rath, who executed the Lincoln conspirators, told the writer of his part in the drama on several trips between Grand Rapids, Mich., and Detroit and return. Capt. Rath was of German extraction and was chivalrous to a degree and averred that Mrs. Surratt should not have been hanged; hanging was not for women; rather imprisonment would have met the ends of justice. Said the former Provost Marshal.

Should Not Have Hanged the Woman.

"Yes, I hanged Mrs. Surratt, Powell who was known as Payne; Herold and Atzerodt. The latter two were whimpering cowards. Payne was the bravest man I ever saw or knew. He had not been so brave and fearless and braced himself like a man to meet death in its most disgraceful form his neck would have been broken by the fall of the drop; instead he strangled to death.

"I saw the gallows built and secured the rope, which was three-ply Boston hemp, from the navy yard. I made the nooses and placed them on the beam, saw them adjusted on the victims, then stepped aside and gave the signal to the men underneath the gallows to spring the traps."

PRESIDENT LINCOLN SIGNING THE CALL FOR 75,000 VOLUNTEERS. A DRAMATIC SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LYRIC THEATRE WEEK OF MARCH 27.

ALLENTOWN MORNING CALL,

MAE MARSH PLAYS IMPORTANT PART IN BIRTH OF A NATION

It is a well-known fact that lovers of photoplays have their favorites among the actors in the cast and rave over their cleverness and personal charm as if they were before them on the legitimate stage in actual flesh and blood.

Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron, the younger daughter in the Southern household in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Lyric Theatre, by her successful appearance in many photo plays during her three years' career, has attracted by her self like charm and native personality, many admirers who greet with pleasure her appearance on the screen.

Miss Marsh has many bits of fine acting in the picture. Among the most delightful are the welcoming of the brother back from the Civil War; the making of "southern ermine" with raw cotton and chimney black; the scene in the cellar with Miriam Cooper; the garden making that follows the return from the war; the southern banquet; and the pretty scene where she rains kisses on her brother Ben's mouth to console him for temporary loss of his sweetheart Elsie. There is always a touch of comedy or of pathos where Miss Marsh appears. Her personality lends itself to fine temperamental treatment of any part she plays. Her expressive, ever changing, mood-adapting face, is one of the most valuable in all the list of film favorites.

She was discovered by David W Griffith, the producer of many film successes, long before he made "The Birth of a Nation."

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL

PROCTOR'S GRAND.

"The Birth of a Nation."

At Proctor's Grand this afternoon the famous Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," commences its week's engagement of twice daily performances.

The success of this remarkable pictorial representation of our nation's birth reads like a romance. It has been welcomed in every section of this country and Canada, crowded houses have featured its every appearance and all classes of people have become its patrons and enthusiastic admirer. No theatrical production of the present century has given as many consecutive performances or played to as many people in 10 months' time as has "The Birth of a Nation." In every city where it has appeared, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Pittsburg, Los Angeles and St. Louis in particular, it has established, as it has in the metropolis, a new record for number of performances, given and length of stay. In the world of the theater it has made history and demonstrated that it is more popular than the greatest English speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama.

St. Louis Dispatch 3/20

The Birth of a Nation.

Announcement to the effect that The Birth of a Nation is nearing the end of its phenomenal engagement at the Olympic Theater served yesterday strongly to stimulate the attendance, which assumed its old-time proportions. Long practice with this greatest of films has brought about a perfect projection, and the accompanimental orchestral music, especially written for the work, adds greatly to the enjoyment derivable from a viewing of the offering. Until further notice there will be two performances daily at the Broadway house.

ALLENTOWN CHRONICLE AND NEWS

EASTON DAILY EXPRESS 3/20

"The Birth of a Nation."

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of "Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Orpheum Theatre, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama, is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the young sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. To-day her face is better known than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every parter of the globe.

TRENCH SCENE IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S GIGANTIC SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT LYRIC THEATRE, WEEK OF MARCH 27TH

BIRTH OF A NATION RETURNS NEXT WEEK

Among the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Lyric for all next week, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean Mansion at Appomatox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproducti all the personages in the great teric scene and of the minute d of the action.

It is well known that many porters of the defeated Confed wished to prolong the struggle means of a guerilla warfare si to that used by the Boars toward close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the Battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9th under the budding apple trees of an Appomatox orchard were determined the terms peace which were formally writ down at the Wilmer-McLean hous the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last occasion with great care. Gra the contrary, lacked his full dre appeared in the "fatigue" and jack boots of the hard camp Strangely enough General Lee had pencil to write with. A pocket stand and pen were lent by an of of the general staff, and it was these that the historic docum surrender was written. Afte an effort was made to arrest a dict Lee for treason, but Grant knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

Lexington (Ky) Gt. Dispatch 3/20

"The Birth of A Nation"

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of A Nation," which will be shown at the Academy of Music four days beginning March 29 was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic ride of the North Carolina class. Their gun was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads, though an acknowledged wizard at the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "wizard," with power to [illegible]

Lexington Herald Sunday 3/20

LEXINGTON OPERA HOUSE.

Birth of a Nation Tonight.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Opera House tonight. Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City, where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles. It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War.

Daily matinees will be given commencing tomorrow. The performances will begin promptly at 2:15 and 8:15, and no one will be seated after performances begin. (Adv.)

83

3/20 Pa
ALLENTOWN DEMOCRAT

IMPERSONATIONS OF FAMOUS GENERALS IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Among the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Lyric for all next week, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean Mansion at Appomatox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the Battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with GrGant and on the morning of April 9th under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" [illegible] dusty jack boots of the hard [illegible] align. Strangely enough General Le[illegible] l no pencil to write with. A pe[illegible] ink stand and pen were lent by [illegible] cer of the general staff, and it w[illegible] ith these that the historic docu[illegible] of surrender was written. Af[illegible] rds an effort was made to arrest [illegible] in- dict Le for treason, but Gr[illegible] who knew Lee's nobility of char[illegible] and how he had fulfilled to the [illegible] all the surrender obligations, pre[illegible]nted any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

GENERALS GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX, A DRAMATIC SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LYRIC THEATRE, WEEK OF MARCH 27th WITH MATINEE DAILY.

Columbus (Ohio) Examiner 3/20

TWO DOLLAR PICTURES

(By D. W. Griffith.)

While there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the two-dollar motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theatre, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theatre world said it would not succeed. You see they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome about it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can only show certain scenes in the limits of three walls and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters.

CONNERSVILLE EVENING NEWS

BIRTH OF A NATION.

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils—water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his wass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned by watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Auditorium March 27, 28 and 29. The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wan, skeleton like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the lean emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled up victims of a battlefield.

EY

Pa 3/20
EASTON DAILY ARGUS

Miriam Cooper in "The Birth of a Nation," Orpheum, all this week.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Opens Week's Engagement Tonight.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle at the Orpheum this week, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the States and the Reconstruction of the Southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars. Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the wellknown Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a Brigadier General of the Confederate Army. For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such real[illegible]m is never seen on the old-fashion[illegible] stage. The limitations of the [illegible]tre were swept away for Nature [illegible] Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama [illegible] panorama is revealed to the as[illegible]ished eyes of the spectator. The [illegible]nt inventive imagination could [illegible] picture to itself such scenes [illegible] splendor.

El Paso (Texas) Herald 3/20

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TONIGHT.

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new [illegible] of pictorialized spectacle with music, will play the Texas Grand this week, opening tonight. This is the great offering that inaugurated a new era in the theaters of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many, many months. It is pleasing to be able to note the fact that a metropolitan production of the finest quality and elaboration will be shown here.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy; Lincoln's call for troops; Sherman's march to the sea; the battle of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theater, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the south's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company of fifty.

84

SCENE FROM D. W. GRIFFITH'S MIGHTY SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE DITORIUM, MARCH 27, 28 AND 29.

LEXINGTON HERALD Monday, March 20, 1916.

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their fluency. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which Lillian and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other. Through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

Kentucky Post 3/20

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TONIGHT.

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Opera House commencing tonight for an engagement of one week with daily matinees commencing Tuesday.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. Eighteen thousand people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000.

Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. Ten thousand yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

Patrons are requested to be in their seats promptly at 2:15 and 8:15 as the house will be dark for more than an hour after the curtain goes up on the first section of the picture.

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which [illegible] written with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

DATE LESS

88

Peru (Ind) Paper

Date ?

Scene from D. W. Griffith's Stupendous Spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Wallace Theatre for a three-days' engagement beginning Thursday April 6th.

ne from D. W. Griffith's Stupendous Spectacle THE BIRTH OF A TION, which starts tomorrow at Wallace and continues Friday and urday with matinees each afternoon.

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature--the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can [illegible] efface from memory the majes[illegible] ner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant Is Prettiest of Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

Much of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other thru the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddes of romance, the dove. Not daring at this point in their courtship to kiss each other they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contracted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

rion Cooper in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Kentucky Thursday, March 16.

"The Birth of a Nation" Returns to the Kentucky March 16.

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Kentucky three days starting Thursday, March 16, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the young sister in this appealing story. Today her face is better known than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

The same splendid symphony orchestra that appeared with the spectacle last fall is carried. Seats for all performances go on sale Monday, March 13.

The Birth of a Nation

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the Bijou for four days beginning tomorrow matinee. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theater, the foot hills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Klu Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1961 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil war and reconstruction, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by its former appearance indicate a repetition of the second business. Seats are on sale for all performances, two each day, at the same prices, twenty-five cents to two dollars.

Evansville Dud Courier 3/11

Stars In "The Birth of a Nation" Who Earn Fortunes Before Camera

Before the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's note book sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $10 9,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the Southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

NEWS-DEMOCRAT, PADUCAH, KENTUCKY

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

HOW do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and hold on to it till you are middle aged, then marry and rear a family, releasing fame from your grasp and finding joy in a quiet, secluded country home?

Not so bad, you say, for some bookish individual who isn't attractive anyhow and hasn't a chance at the sweets of life? But utterly preposterous for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life program for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics; not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology;" not even a suffragette; but a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly in "The Birth of a Nation," running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her pursuer!

Too Busy For Love Affairs.

Yes, sir. Little Mae Marsh, the blue eyed, the golden haired, the adored, the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "up stage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no 'ur topped boots, no lip rouge.

If that time old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument, for at the first glance and after a minute's conversation any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great civil war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now, when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dainty trait that just escapes being prinness and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same alternating repression and expression of emotion that make the girl of the screen so adorable and that so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that have characterized any play on stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been, "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now give me sensible togs, lots of work and a typewriter to compose plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage, or, rather, it would have taken courage, had I been of a wavering disposition."

She is still frail looking and still slender, but graceful as a fawn and with some of that pretty creature's characteristics—the quick intelligence, quick movements, alertness, and when she is off guard, when she forgets she is being interviewed, when she is not constantly reminded by the whispers and stares of passersby that she is a heroine of the films, she is entirely natural. Apropos of that, she says it is on the screen that she is really her most natural self and that it is in conventional life she finds herself acting.

"I suppose," she says, "that sort of subconsciously I have the idea that I must show a difference in my manner, but I have done so much of the picture work and so thrown myself heart and soul into it that it is really difficult for me to separate myself from it."

"But"—with the little quizzical look that suggests laughter and tears and other things at the same time—"I suppose it's that way with every one who makes any sort of success out of what he undertakes, though my work is really nothing more than play to me, because I am so enthusiastic about it. I shall be perfectly content to be a moving picture actress all my days; that is"—hastily—"provided I can continue to live in California.

"I wrote Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working, I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty, and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

"I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake. I was at school at the Sacred Heart Convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried: 'Oh, don't! Don' sister! I won't do it again.' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to get us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Appleple Mary in 'Home Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and the Law,' or 'Tolerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother at the same age I am now, twenty. It is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr. Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is a most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children."

The conversation shifted to faith, finally to faith in prayer.

"When I have prayed for anything I have always gotten it"—again Mae Marsh was seriousness itself—"prayed of course good

ANSVILLE JOURNAL-NEWS March

SUPER-MOVIE TO BE SEEN AGAIN AT WELLS

Wonderful Story Told by Music and Film of Nation Reborn Through Civil War.

SCENES OUT OF HISTORY.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Bijou today matinee and night, beginning a four days' engagement.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the price cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surreader to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime are these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator. The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Cameron's of South Carolina and the Stoneman's of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, a gallant clansman of the Dixon series, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern Elsie Stoneman, is the heroine. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where Nature painted the background and army directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes like Ford's Theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact fac-similes of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To this many times the amount of the energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters.

STARS IN "BIRTH OF A NATION."

Lillian Gish, the beautiful young star in "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a four-day engagement at the Wells-Bijou Sunday matinee

BATTLE SCENE IN "BIRTH OF A NATION."

Evansville Ind. Journal-News 3/12

The Battle of Petersburg as produced in "The Birth of a Nation," which opens a four-day engagement at the Wells-Bijou Saturday.

93

8 BALTIMORE NEWS, TUESDAY, MARCH 29

STILL DRAWS CROWD

"Birth Of Nation" Enters Third Week At Ford's.

Many Seeing Film For Second Time Note Features Missed On First View Of It.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's elaborate historic film production, opened the third week of its engagement at Ford's yesterday with crowds that included persons who have seen the picture before, but returned to study more closely many scenes with merits that are overlooked amid the thrills of the story. The audience was responsive to the many great climaxes and showed its appreciation of the numerous beautiful scenes as well as of the great spectacular features. Already the film has broken all records for popularity in this city and seems likely to continue its successful run.

Old folks who lived in the stirring times of the Civil War and who knew well enough about the terrors of reconstruction days were in the theater, many of them as guests of children or grandchildren. The great scenic triumphs, the rioting, the battles, the quet home scenes, the well-[illegible] love episodes, the tragic assassination of Lincoln, the incidents, big and little, make up an entertainment that appeals to persons of the greatest diversity of taste.

The plot of Dixon's "Clansman," from which the scenario is developed, is sufficiently well known to need no comment. The current of love is diverted by the current of hatred that swept the nation, but it all works out triumphantly, and the great tragedy of the nation closes with the vision of Christ, as the Prince of Peace, taking the place of the horrid demon of war.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN 3/29

Birth of a Nation—Ford's

The Birth of a Nation began its third week at Ford's Grand Opera House yesterday. It is a production that can be seen time and again without its fine points becoming tiresome to the observer. D. W. Griffith, in presenting this masterpiece, has reached the highest pinnacle in photoplays and it is very doubtful it it will be equalled for a very long time. It is a production that thrills, interests and at the same time touches the tender spots with the charming bits of pathos. It is the story of the Clansman told in a realistic manner. Slavery is shown as the cause of the great Civil War. Magnificent battle scenes are shown in which thousands of soldiers take part. The struggle between the North and the South is so cleverly shown that the sympathies of the audiences are divided.

At the close of the war, Gen. Robert E. Lee and Gen. U. S. Grant are shown, the scenes in which they are presented having been taken from a celebrated painting. President Lincoln is also shown, and is so beautifully pictured that he wins applause from audiences whose sympathies are with the South. The reign of terror in the South which folowed shortly after the assassination of President Lincoln is wonderfully shown.

A large part of the power of the piece comes from the overwhelming rapidity of its action. Stirring scenes are piled upon each other with almost confusing speed and scenes of historical importance almost jostle each other on the screen. Because of this rapidity of action it is a common occurrence to hear people say while leaving the theater, after three hours of wonderment and pleasure, that it only seemed as if they had been in there for an hour. There is no "padding," no filling in with slow and meaningless scenes. It is action, action, action from start to finish until the audience is almost breathless with amazement.

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL 3/29

PROCTOR'S GRAND.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," something that will go down in the annals of filmdom as one of the greatest achievements of the time, is at Proctor's Grand theater for the week with afternoon and evening performances daily. Crowds continue to surge to this attractive playhouse for the splendid photoplay which far surpasses anything of its kind seen in Albany. Its return engagement after two months with big houses promised for every show, proves its real worth. Not only are the usual patrons of the theater on hand but entire families and elderly folk who usually remain at home are enjoying this rare screen treat.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the wondrous work of David W. Griffith, master of his art, who labored for months as though inspired in this spectacular offering. This screening of American history (the film is a showing of Civil war times) brings together the North and the South in a most interesting manner, without the slightest offense to residents of either army recruited above or below Mason and Dixon's line. And as the story is presented by gifted screen artists, an interesting and beautiful musical lesson is told by an augmented orchestra. The symphony is the work of Joseph Carl Briel, who has woven into his work much that appeals.

The Southern homes before the days of '61, undisturbed even by rumors of war, the far sounding stentorian cry of the call to arms, the assassination of Lincoln, and the awful tragedies that follow in close succession, make it pictorially the last word in triumphs of the screen. Then there is the formation of the great army of the Ku Klux Klan in all its impressiveness, a showing to amaze the dramatic terror of the Negro and carpetbagger period, the mistaken plans of the blacks, and the ravaging of the mobs in Southern cities.

Two charming love stories thread their way through the maze of terror and the long days and nights of horror until at last the North and the South are united in heart and hand after the storm of war and devastation has passed.

So many splendid historic scenes are shown by the capable company of moving picture actors that all who can do so should see the picture. If it has claimed attention once, it will do so again with vividness and realism and the musical accompaniment greatly adds to its effectiveness.

Next Monday vaudeville will be resumed at the Grand, with a bill of interest.

Washington (D.C.) Post Dispatch 3/31

THE ARGUS:

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AGAIN ENTHUSES AT THE GRAND

For another week Albanians will have the opportunity of viewing and marveling at the wonders of "The Birth of a Nation," the masterpiece of the cinema and of David W. Griffith, which opened a return engagement with matinee and evening showings at Proctor's Grand theatre yesterday. While thousands of people saw this great film of Civil war times during its engagement at the Grand last January, there are many who will wish to see it again, not to mention those who will get the more substantial satisfaction in a second sight of this screening of American history.

For "The Birth of a Nation" is not mere passing amusement. It is history dramatized in patomime, so much more impressive than the mere spoken words that it bids one ponder on the great influence of this film industry when it is ranked on the side of something better than slapsticks comedy, wicked sirens and impossible melodrama. Unfortunately the movie is not, in general, aimed at the intellectuals or even at the modest intelligence. It appeals in many cases to those whose eyes have no special connection with their brains—if one can judge by the daily grist of the film studio that is eagerly devoured by millions. But when a man like Griffith, who has a Belascoan power in direction, approaches on epic subject, as he has done in "The Birth of a Nation," the result is something as unlike the average movie as Shakespeare is removed from Theodore Kremer. If Griffith can sense some other great historic subject as he has this there will be other epoch-making films. If not, "The Nation" will stand [illegible] the apologia pro sua vita of the [illegible]ma. Griffith's present connection with Triangle films has produced no notable results, because he is doing work by contract and not by inspiration.

There is a second agent largely responsible for the great success of this picture and his name is not in big type. He is Joseph Carl Briel, who composed and arranged the symphonic score, which is the very soul of the picture. A second viewing of the film in connection with a hearing of the beautiful, inspiring and poetic score convinces one that Briel has told the story in melody as distinctly as if the spoken word had been used. He has woven into his musical accompaniment many fragments of classic compositions, the Brunhilda Battle Cry being the theme of the call of the Klu Klux Klan, the soft Southern melodies carrying the romance of the tale charmingly and the wierd Ethiopian strains depicting the terror of the negro domination in dramatic style. The score bears rehearing as well as the film a reseeing—which is the last word of tribute for both.

Once again the pictures of the placid South, with its dolce far niente suddenly disturbed by rumors of war; the call to arms and the lining up of compatriots against each other; the black tragedy of the assassination of Lincoln and the reaping of the whirlwind in the carpetbagger domination and the formation of the Klan—all these are to be seen in perfect screen projection, in artistic acting of principals and in the wonderful massing of crowds, the flame and roar of battle and the thrilling rides of the Klu Klux Klan. One sees the great figures of American history; the Southern chivalry and Northern heroism—and, at the end, the regeneration of the black race after its mistaken following of false gods. In short, one again sees a picture that will be as valuable 20 years from now as it is to-day, for a new generation will have grown up to see the story they have read in history made vivid with the art of Griffith.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be repeated every afternoon and night of this week at the Grand, and indications point to a record week of attendance. There were large audiences at both showings yesterday.

Battle of Petersburg in "The Birth of a Nation" Coming to The Academy of Music Four Days Beginning Wednesday, March 29th.

New Orleans (La) 3/31

TIMES-PICAYUNE,

Tulane Theater.

The spectacular features of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" bring new details to the eye of the auditor which make frequent sittings at the Tulane Theater a matter of interest sufficiently attractive to justify the repetition of attendance. Opening with the sociable mingling of boyhood and girlhood sweethearts of the North and the South, the narrative leads to the emancipation of the slaves, the devastation of war, the murder of Lincoln and the regime of radicalism at Washington, followed by the overthrow of the whites in the South and the birth of the reconstruction era. The adventures of the Ku Klux Klan, the disarming of the blacks and the rehabilitation of the whites bring to the eye the story of how the South has solved the negro question. Notable among the tremendous scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" are the departure of the Southern troops the hardships of the Confederates in the trenches, the battle of Petersburg, the burning of Atlanta and Sherman's march to the sea.

Washington (D.C.) Herald 3/31

PLENTY OF SEATS FOR "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The management of the Opera House wishes to state that the reports that all the seats have been sold for "The Birth of a Nation" is not correct. Notwithstanding the sale has been very large good seats can be obtained for every performance. They also desire to notify their patrons that no seats will be laid aside. The matinee performances begin at 2:15 prompt and night at 8:15. The house will remain dark for more than an hour after the rise of the curtain and it will be practically impossible to seat any one during that time.

FORD'S

To a well-filled and [illegible] house The Birth of a Nation [illegible] the third week of its engagement [illegible] Baltimore last night. That among the audience were many faces seen there during the preceding two weeks is indicative of the grip this masterpiece of motion pictures has laid on the moreans. From the opening scene showing life in the North and South as it was before the Civil War, to the tremendous climax showing the [illegible] throwing of the carpetbaggers and negro rule in the devastated South in which scene thousands of Ku-Klux Klansmen take part, the play holds the audience in thrill after thrill.

The attention which has been given to every detail in the play is [illegible]ous. The picture of Southern life [illegible] old colonial mansion is particularly well worked out. The battle scenes of the great war are past belief. Thousands of troops on each side, [illegible] trenches, cannon, field pieces, [illegible] baggage trains and bursting shells give them an appearance of [illegible] that must be seen to be appreciated. Many of the scenes, such as the assassination of President Lincoln, President Lincoln signing the call for 75,000 troops and the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox, are historically correct even to the [illegible] the rooms and the pictures on the walls.

The great dramatic part of the play, however, is the depicting of the reconstruction period in the South following the signing of peace. The [illegible] insults and agonies of reconstruction during the reign of the carpetbaggers and scalawags are so graphically [illegible] that more than one sob was heard in the darkened house last night. The scene featuring the formation of the Ku-Klux Klan and the final restoration of order through the [illegible] countryside is perhaps the most thrilling and the most artistically [illegible] any of the play, and it will probably be some time before anything of such tremendous scale is equaled.

One of the features of the play is that every scene is made to [illegible] reflect the consummate skill and knowledge of the subject of the [illegible]. There is absolutely no lag [illegible] each scene is, if anything, a little more thrilling than the preceding, [illegible] towards the last the audience [illegible] continuous applause. At this time, [illegible] the air rife with international complications and the border of the United States menaced, the Birth of a Nation is a play that should be seen by every American, and one which no one can witness without feeling a [illegible] of patriotism.

Herald (Pa.) Leader 3/21

Motion Spectacle Only a Start

Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5—It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

D. W. GRIFFITH

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me ere really is no occasion for that a picture should be prohich vies with the best offerthe dramatic stage. After all thing but the old first law of the survival of the fittest. The er is purely a question of end execution.

It was first announced that we to present "The Birth of a in a regular Broadway Theach had never played a picture n before, the wiseacres of the world said it would not sucou see, they knew nothing of

Most people had looked motion picture drama as a ten position. They measured ev- by the standard of price. It surprising that they overlookundamental facts in the case unprepared to pass judgment is undertaking. But in all re was nothing daring or venin it. You see, we knew had. That was an advantage e other fellow had never takonsideration.

nificance of this is in the proof g picture being an undoubted There will be many two dolres. The success will depend upon how well they are done, rts back solely to a question

It takes great care, time and ous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best his only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field to which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $3 seat for it?

SHERMAN'S MARCH IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Albany (N.Y.) Times 3/21

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the City of Atlanta. Imagine, if you can, a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the reproduction is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated. At the Lyric all next week.

Baltimore (Md.) 3/21 THE SUN.

DEPICTS CRUCIAL ERA

"Birth Of A Nation," At Ford's, Shows Struggle For Unity.

HISTORICAL SCENES ENACTED

D. W. Griffith's Powerful Photoplay Of Reconstruction Times Starts Third Week Here.

The Civil War period marked the transition of the United States from a group of individual states united under central government, yet claiming state sovereignty, to a nation realizing Daniel Webster's ideal of "Liberty and Union, one and inseparable, now and forever."

The forge in which the iron of the states was welded into a powerful nation was the Civil War, and "The Birth of a Nation," which entered yesterday afternoon and evening at Ford's upon its third week of presentation in Baltimore, is a historical photoplay that visualizes graphically this period of United States history.

Presented by D. W. Griffith in a series of most remarkable motion pictures, it shows what life was in Northern social and political circles immediately before the war between the states and upon plantations and in representative Southern homes of luxury and culture. It reveals the secret as well as the acknowledged reasons for friction between the two sections of the country, re-enacts the signing of vital documents by President Lincoln, shows battle fields, hospitals and broken homes and shows also the greater tragedies of the reconstruction period and the misuse of political power resultant upon the assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth. The scenes of that tragedy in a Washington theatre are reproduced with historical accuracy.

The element of personal interest is given the drama by concentrating the effects of the war upon the lives of a group of young people representing both sides of the conflict, where love takes an equal part with political intrigue and war.

The portraiture of those enacting historic characters in the play is very remarkable.

Albany (N.Y.) Times Union 3/21

"BIRTH OF A NATION" FILM SERVES AS EYE TEST

In sleight of hand tricks it is the quickness of the magician's hand that deceives the eye. In motion pictures it is the quickness of the projection machine that deceives the eye.

Motion picture film is the record of a series of pictures; all these pictures are separated one from another by a narrow marking of dark, blank film. Any one can see these dividing lines of blank film as plainly as the pictures when the films are not running through the projection machine, but on the screen most people cannot see this dividing line at all—because the quickness of the projection machine deceives their eyes.

To the average person the pictures of "The Birth of a Nation," which will be at Proctor's Grand all week, starting with to-day's matinee, run smoothly on the screen. In fact, the clarity and steadiness of this spectacle's projection, which represents the ultimate of motion picture perfection, has elicited no end of complimentary comment among the millions who have witnessed its performances throughout the country. Every care possible and every contrivance so far devised to ensure screen perfection is made use of by the skilled operators in charge of the mechanical department of this historical drama.

Some people, however, are so quick-sighted that they can see on the screen the marking that separates the pictures of the Griffith masterpiece and to such people these pictures jerk from one to the other in place of blending one into another—running smoothly, so to speak. Eyesight able to see this blank division space is one twentieth of a second quicker than eyesight that cannot distinguish it. A twentieth of a second seems an infinitesimal measure of time, but it isn't in cinema projection.

The eye is indeed a marvelous organ. The eyes of most people see an object for four forty-fifths of a second; it takes one-half of this period of time for the eye to register the impression of what it sees, and the other half for this impression, or image to gradually fade away. Now the eye cannot register—see anything—a movement, for example, that takes less time than two forty-fifths of a second. That is why the quickness of the magician's hand can deceive the eye.

The projection machine deceives the eye by throwing the picture on the screen for three forty-fifths of a second and the dividing blank space for one forty-fifth of a second. You see the blank space appear and disappear during the time that the image of the picture preceding it is fading from the eye.

Motion pictures form an almost absolute standard for eyesight. If the pictures seem to run smoothly, blend one into another you have normal eyesight. If the pictures jerk, your eyes don't hold a vision long enough; you are quick-sighted. If the pictures drag, so that you seem to see two pictures, the one on the screen as well as part of the one preceding it, your eyesight is too slow; possibly overtried if there is nothing really serious the trouble with it. And it is a marvelous example of how much we are made alike, even to the smallest detail, when so vast an industry as the moving picture one can depend so absolutely on this one forty-fifth of a second in the average human sight.

Wilmington NC
Star-News 3/21

"The Birth of A Nation"

Academy of Music—Wilmington 4 nights beginning Wednesday March 29th. Daily matinees thereafter.

Probably the most thrilling scenes in David W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of A Nation", are those in which the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the South.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed, "America for Americans" Somewhat like the Ku Klux Klan, the Vigilantes of California were organized to bring about law and order when the regular machinery of the law had broken down.

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as "an institution of Chivalry, Humanity and Patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos", meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tennessee, in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the Grand Cyclops; his assistant was the Grand Magi; the marschall was the Grand Turk; the treasurer was the Grand Exchequer and the guards were termed Lictors.

As the sorrows of the South under the baneful Reconstruction acts began to be unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popularibzed as Ku Klux Klan having been added because so many of the original members were descendants of Scottish clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scottish Highlanders was again used as a call to arms.

Great gathering of the Klan in Nashvile, Tennessee, in 1867 passed the following resolutions which were at that time kept secret:

"We recognize our relations to the United States Government, the supremacy of the Constitution."

"1.—To protect the weak, the innocent and the defenceles from the indignities, wrongs and outrages of the lawless, the violent and the brutal to relieve the injured and oppressed: to succor the suffering and unfortunate and especially the widows and orphans of the Confederate soldiers.

"2.—To protect and defend the Constitution of the United States and all laws passed in conformity thereto and to protect the states from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3.—To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of the land."

The Empire, as the Klan was known, was ruled by the Grand Wizard, General Nathan Bedford Forrest, the gallant and dashing Confederate cavalry leader. Each state was known as a Realm and the ruler was the Grand Dragon. He was assisted by eight Hydras. A group of counties was called a Dominion, ruled by a Grand Titan and six Furies.

Each county was a Province, under a Grand Giant and four Goblins. The unit of the organization was the Den and the members were known as Ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and ritual were never written until after the Grand Wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

A similar order was tarted in Louisiana known as the Kights of the White Camelia. The shibboleth of both organizations was "The Supremacy of the White Race," and that has survived in the South to this very day. At first the Ku Klux Plan devoted their efforts to putting down disorder among the bad negroes. Generally all that was necesary was to play upon the credulity and suptrstition of that race. They would ride up to a negro's cabin in the dead of night and one of the riders would call for a bucket of water, which he would drain to the bottom by using a concealed leather bag. He would then say that was the first drink he had had sincehe was killed at the Batle of Shiloh. This is very effectively shown in "The Birth of A Nation."

Another would wear a skelton hand and another would take off his skull and ask a negro to hold it while he adjusted his backbone. These things always had the desired effect. Later on they went after the vicious Carpetbaggers and Scalawags. It was the brave deeds of the Ku Klux Klan that saved the South from a worse fate than had ever before been the aftermath of war.

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon low well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

Easton (Pa.) Express
3/21

"The Birth of a Nation."

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which is now at the Orpheum, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, pine woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

Contributed

VETERANS SEE WAR SPECTACLE

Guests of Herald at "The Birth of Nation," Carry Flag of Reunited Union.

Marching arm in arm, Union and Confederate veterans filed down Main street to the Texas Grand theater Monday night to see the initial performance of the "Birth of the Nation," as guests of The Herald. Each veteran carried a large American flag and a small flag on their coat lapels given them by the Popular.

The veterans of the great war met at The Herald building at 7:30 o'clock Monday evening, where they were given their flags and the emblems of the order pinned on their coats by Miss Margaret Powers. Many of the old soldiers wore their badges and medals and made an impressive picture as they marched to the theater with the flag over their shoulders. At the theater they were presented with souvenir books of the play by advance agent Clarence Bullet and were given the best block of seats in the house for the great war drama.

Guests of Herald.

Those who witnessed the film spectacle as the guests of The Herald were:

Capt. F. F. Stacy, company [illegible] Texas infantry.

W. T. Stewart, company [illegible] as infantry.

Cassius M. Palmer, company [illegible] Illinois infantry.

E. T. Sparker, company, [illegible] sissippi infantry.

J. L. Thompson, company F, [illegible] York infantry.

B. E. Major, company K, Alabama infantry.

J. E. Swearingen, company [illegible] Carolina cavalry.

J. B. Fletcher, company [illegible] ginia infantry.

A. C. Braxton, staff, 11th Virginia infantry.

J. H. Wood, company K, [illegible] regiment, Texas infantry.

W. E. Kendall, company A, [illegible] kansas infantry.

O. G. Jones, company I, [illegible] infantry.

W. D. Green, company F, [illegible] nessee infantry.

J. C. Roseborough, Fort [illegible] ond Missouri infantry.

John S. Simmons, sixth Ohio [illegible]

J. H. Fairbanks, 13th [illegible] infantry.

W. J. Miller, Cook's [illegible]

Dennis Finn, company F, [illegible] infantry.

C. L. Caspary, 17th [illegible] fantry.

J. M. Roberts, 44th [illegible] fantry.

the opposing clasped hands and have peace." There are comrades still left who bright, sunshiny day at Court House, when the two s, flanked by other generals
r commands, went into the Wilmer
Lean house and arranged the terms surrender that meant the end of war and the return of the citizen dies to their civilian occupations.
ut of the beaten track as it is Apmattox has fallen into ruin. The ous apple tree is now preserved y in memory and in the quatrain d so memorably by Roscoe Conkling the Republican convention of 1880 quiet little county seat of Apmattox had slumbered in obscurity ll April 8, 1865, when it took its ce in history, to be forever rememd in connection with the names the great leaders of the Civil war the end of the Lost Cause.
ew of the old houses are remaining the little village. Unlike other fa-us battlefields, there has been no empt to preserve the spot that mark-the most important event of the at American conflict.
ecause of this condition the life-e reproduction of the surrender of
n. Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant
Appomattox Court House in David Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," particularly interesting and valua-
. The place is hallowed ground the story of America and it is uneasant to learn that fire and flood, ndal hands and public indifference
d want of care have brought desotion to the spot whose name so ap-als to both North and South, there lited in lasting peace. It is to be re-etted that this place of peace has t received the attention of those who ve labored to erect monuments in storic spots. It is therefore all the ore gratifying to know that Mr. Grif-h has preserved for posterity such faithful representation of one of most momentous scenes in Ameri-
n history.
The village of Appomattox has nearly ppeared. Only three houses re-
ain. Even those are badly warped, ving promise that they too will soon
t, and that weeds, followed by scrub ne, will soon hide their sites from ew. Two of these houses have long n abandoned. The other is occupied the large family of a small farmer, stranger to that part of Virginia and familiar with and apparently indifrent to the great memories of the unty in which he lives.
At the time of the surrender the vilge had been reduced by four years of r to a ramshackle crossroads ham-
. A cluster of dwellings, mostly wood, a livery stable and a store or o were built around the sleepy urt house square. The court house as burned down twenty years ago,
d today the desolate court house but a place of ashes, charred plasr and shattered bricks.

LAST STAND AT APPOMATTOX.
Scene from Massive Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at Academy, Four Days Starting March 26th.

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation." Matinee and night. Orpheum Theatre this week.

EASTON DAILY ARGUS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."
Civil War Leaders Faithfully Shown

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed at the bottom. The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith during his staging of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox," one of his striking historical fac-simile scenes in Griffith's motion picture "The Birth of a Nation" now playing at the Orpheum.

Allentown Pa. Democrat 3/24/21

96

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DEPICTS WONDERFUL SCENES OF CIVIL WAR

The incident of the young Confederate's release by President Lincoln's order, which gets a round of enthusiastic handclapping when presented in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Lyric theatre for all next week was verified as an actual historical event by one of the spectators. G. L. Nordecal, of 174 West Eighty-sixth St., is the man to whom it happened. During the New York run of the play he visited D. W. Griffith's offices and told this remarkable story:

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive blockade-running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama Islands. I had served in the Confederate Army, but had been honorably discharged on account of sickness. My father then wanted me to go as his agent to Nassau. The only channel of intercourse was closed, however, when the Federals captured Fort Fisher, so father suggested that I should try to slip through the Northern lines and thence take a steamer from New York.

"In civilian dress I managed to elude the Union pickets in Virginia, crossed the Potomac, took stage for Washington, but in the latter place I was arrested and thrown into prison as a Confederate enemy. It was feared that I would be court martialled and executed or at best held prisoner until the close of the war. My fiancee's father Alderman Samuel Lewis, of New York, later Acting Mayor, came to Washington and worked in my behalf. Notwithstanding Secretary Stanton's opposition, he succeeded in convincing President Lincoln that I was not a spy. 'I will release the young man,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'on one condition, that he takes oath not to return to the Southern States during the war.'

"I gladly took this oath and was released. Before leaving for the North for my marriage and residence in Alderman Lewis' family, I desired to thank President Lincoln. On being presented to Mr. Lincoln, I remember he shook me by the hand and said, 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.' I have never forgotten the great president's generosity and kindheartedness to a foe, and when I saw the picture that early experience was vividly unearthed."

TOWN CHRONICLE AND NEWS 3/21

BIRTH OF A NATION A GIANT SPECTACLE

Optical experts responsible for the perfect results of "The Birth of a Nation" projection at the Liberty Theatre, New York, arrived in this city yesterday and started work at the Lyric where the spectacle is to be shown for all next week. The same scientific methods will be used in "The Birth of a Nation" engagement here. To the rear of the orchestra stalls masons will lay a concrete base, above which steel workers have built a steel framework for the picture booth, thus assuring the picture machines' perfect rigidity and steadiness. The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focusing. They have likewise selected by means of eye-tests those locations in the house which will afford an optometrically perfect view of the film spectacle. All seats on the ground floor will be but one dollar. Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted. Its complete success in New York shows the marvelous progress of picturized drama from the status of a toy to the eminence of an art.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music will play at the Auditorium Theatre, March twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth. This is the great offering that opened a new era in the theatres of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many months. Despite great opposition the play has never been suppressed, but has met the approval of censor boards, judges, municipal authorities, publicists, editors and clergymen everywhere. It is pleasing to be able to note the fact that a metropolitan production of the finest quality and elaboration will be shown here.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theatre April fourteenth, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel" Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Caroline lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

Hanover Sun. Herald 3/21

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE AUDITORIUM THEATRE MONDAY, TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY NIGHT, AND TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY MATINEE.

Lexington Ky Leader 3/21

"BIRTH OF NATION" SPECTACULAR FILM

First Part Tells Good Historical Story, Second Gives Scenes Calculated To Stir Racial Feeling.

BATTLE REPRODUCTIONS ARE REMARKABLE.

David Griffith's spectacular film, "The Birth of a Nation," was given the first of its week's exhibitions at the Lexington Opera house last night. It is spectacular—that is all: there is nothing magnificent about it; there is nothing soul-stirring. It is just a good "historical" story thru the first part; thru the second, or last, portion it is an appeal to the more excitable element of both colors which tends to awaken long-forgotten racial animosities which began and ended fifty years ago, and calls to mind old stories and legends which may or may not be true. Of course, terrible scenes were enacted during the reconstruction period, but it does no good to wave the bloody shirt now. THE WAR IS OVER, and the two races are dwelling amicably, each helping the other.

The big scenes in the Griffith film are worthy of all that have been said in their favor; they show battles and the burning of cities; they show the immortal Lincoln and his Cabinet, and the faces of the men grouped about him are familiar to all because of the portraits that have come down to us from those times; Griffith says he reproduced the interior of Ford's theatre in order to give an historically-correct picture of the assassination of Lincoln by the insane actor, and that he built cities only to destroy them before the great shells hurled by guns from whose muzles death belched in a never-ending stream.

Be that as it may, and be all of it as historically correct as it may be, Griffith has hurt his own Southland by the production of his commercially-successful film. From an artistic view point, it is wonderfully done: from the standpoint of those members of both races whose memories or stories told them by their people lead them back over the years to those dark days when the South shuddered under its load from a cruel North, it is a tragedy.

The Battle of Petersburg scene is undoubtedly the most spectacular scene ever filmed. According to stories told in histories it is in the main correct. The hell of shot and shell which sweeps the field and mows men down like wheat is portrayed truly, and the night attacks lights up the very heavens with its lurid glare. Then, there come "taps," and the smoke drifts away from a field covered by the corpees of men who only a few short hours before had been full of life and vigor. Gray heads were dabbled with the gore of boys with whom they clashed in the hot flashes of the battle flame, friend fought friends and brother was arrayed against brother. It is intensely dramatic, as is the burning of Atlanta when Sherman's men touched it with their torches as they marched to the sea.

Sherman must have been right about war, and there must be a special and extra-warm niche down there for the men who start these great conflicts.

Whether "The Birth of a Nation" is worth all the bitterness it has stirred up is a question. It is being greeted everywhere by large audiences, in many places playing return engagements. But, no matter how cool the members of both races are usually, the showing of this film is certain to arouse a certain amount of feeling—forgotten to a great extent possibly when they leave the theatre, but surely present in sufficient strength during the scenes which have caused apprehension everywhere.

"The Birth of a Nation" is here for the week. The writer does not counsel seeing it or staying away. But if you do go, keep ever in your mind that THE WAR IS OVER.

JAMES M. ROSS.

3/21

EL PASO MORNING TIMES

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS PERHAPS GREATEST PHOTOPLAY PRODUCED IN UNITED STATES; SHOWING HERE

By JULIA LEE BRAON.

Superb motion-picture art is attained in the "Birth of a Nation," which was presented at the Texas Grand theater yesterday, matinee and night.

Fashioned out of the novel of Dixon's "The Clansman" and from the romantic days of the south, there is woven an interesting and thrilling plot in which the horrors the southern people were forced to undergo at that time are depicted. The picture gives body and form to the somewhat broadly sketched characters in the book, and adds a strong dramatic interest in the charm of the characterization.

Some of the most spectacular scenes ever staged are shown in the picture. There are seen some of the famous battles fought during the civil war; the rides of the Ku Klux Klans; the assassination of Lincoln; and, the ravaging of the south during the Carpetbag rule. One of the most impressive scenes is the surrender of General Lee to Grant at Appomatox.

It is with wounded but proud dignity that the people of the south look upon the enacted terrors and humiliating experiences their forefathers underwent after the war. Probably the only adverse criticism that can be given the photoplay is that a revival of one of the most fearful epochs in history cannot but revive an old hurt that should have died long ago.

But, the picture is masterly and full of splendid color. It moves with convincing pace from the beginning to the end, introducing some of the most thrilling presentations imaginable. The film has not only the dramatic intensity of the short story but the comprehensiveness of the novel. It stands unrivalled for the vividness with which it projects an era of American history.

Mae Marsh, who has been called "the Bernhardt of the movies," takes the part of a young southern girl, who reaches a tragic death in the attempt to escape from a renegade negro. Miss Marsh has a splendid vehicle for her talents and probably does better acting than any one else in the entire picture. Henry Walthal, an Alabama boy, who has become great in film plays takes the part of the Little Colonel, who leads the mysterious Ku Klux Klan to free the south from the dominating and shameful rule of the carpetbag. The whimsical Lillian Gish delightfully assumes the role of the heroine, a northern girl.

The "Birth of a Nation" is paving the way for more masterly film productions, and educating the people to want only the best in motion pictures.

The photoplay will be presented at the Texas Grand theater for an entire week.

El Paso Herald 3/21

BIRTH OF NATION A GREAT PICTURE

A Marvel of Photography, Thrilling in Interest; Splendid Orchestra.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a wonderful photoplay. Whatever one may think o 'he theme, the picture is remarkable in showing the uses to which the t n may be put in depicting scenes of l . its possibilities in recording history.

The great battle scenes, reproductions of the civil war, are little short of marvelous. Many of them are absolute reproductions of old prints, made during those stirring days of internecine strife, and they carry one back to Brady's history and other works so profusely illustrated by photographs or drawings made at the time and as nearly authentic and correct as any we will ever see. The heroism of north and south, the terrible slaughter in hand to hand conflicts for breastworks positions, the disordered flights of defeated armies, the raiding and capture of supply trains, the march of Sherman to the sea, the negro riots and raids on the south in the reconstruction days and during the early period of the use of negro regiments by the union forces, all are pictured as accurately as if the people in the flesh themselves were passing in review before the eye rather than on the screen.

Pathetic and Fearful.

The mother hovering in a brush heap on the mountainside with her little ones as she watches in terror the progress of the Sherman army through the valley below, is enough to bring tears, and it does. The return of the young Confederate colonel from the war, in rags, to witness the despoiliation of the once magnificent family home, his reunion with the sister he left a baby, now grown almost to womanhood; the chase of the renegade negro captain after the little girl, and her jump to death to save her honor; the battle of the southern family in flight from the negro soldiers, in the little hut of two former union veterans; their rescue by the Clansmen; the rescue of the people of Piedmont, S. C., from the carpet bagger-negro rule and the street mobs by the same band of ghostlike night riders; the battle of the radical northern leader's daughter against his negro protege to prevent a forced marriage—these are some of the thrillingly big scenes in addition to the war pictures, but not all by any means.

The burning of Atlanta is a spectacle of startling, horrifying grandeur.

Plenty of Love Interest.

The story follows rather closely the story of "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, interminglingling the love stories of a northern girl and a southern colonel and of a southern girl and a northern captain. Beautiful scenery is shown in the unwinding of the story. Southern cotton plantations and the diversions of the negroes after the day's work is done are features of the picture. The almost regal splendor of the southern slave owners before the war and their pitiful poverty afterwards are contrasted strongly in some of the gripping scenes of the great film.

Historically correct portrayals of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth, in the old Ford theater at Washington; the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox on April 9, 1865, the signing of the first call for volunteers by Lincoln and a reception at the white house by the great president are some of the features of the film that will live in the history of the moving picture as they live in the written history of the nation.

Some Great Scenes.

The great southern ball at Piedmont, the night bfore the departure of the volunteers for the front, following the Confederate victory at Bull Run, and the session of the South Carolina "scalawag" legislature of 1866, when, negroes predominating three to one, the measure was passed legalizing marriage between blacks and whites, are masterpieces of stage craft and photography.

It is useless, however, to dwell upon the different phases of this wonderful picture, out of which stand in bold relief the great battle scenes and the rides of the Ku Klux Klan. That the audience sympathized with the Ku Klux was evidenced by the tremendous applause that greeted their every appearance on the screen last night. Notwithstanding this, the Lexington (Ky.) Herald, a southern paper, commenting upon the showing of this feature of "The Birth of a Nation," condemns the Ku Klux in no uncertain terms.

The Ku Klux Klan.

"False history is taught in the presentation of the operations of the Ku Klux Klan," says the Herald. "Instead of a band of patriots of high-minded and noble-spirited men, the Ku Klux Klan was a band of marauders who used the cover of night for the gratification of private greed, of passion, and of rapine. No more disgraceful was the regime of the carpet bagger than the rule of the Ku Klux Klan."

Force is added to this declaration by the intensity of the Herald's feeling about the war: "Our blood still runs faster, our heart still beats quickly, our nerves still throb as we recall some of the accounts of the acts of savage brutality committed by those Americans, our white brethren of the north." But it is unable to see the benefit "of having these scenes recalled in exaggerated form," or of ignoring the fact that during the four years of struggle the negro men "protected the white womanhood of the south with absolute fidelity."

The Orchestra.

Not the least enjoyable feature of the great picture—great as an exposition of scenes in the days when the nation was racked by war, hatred and venom; torn asunder over the question of state or national supremacy—is the orchestral music that accompanies the picture. Twenty musicians render the score incidental to the showing of the reels, and the concert alone is an enjoyable evening's entertainment. Property effects behind the screen lend realism to the pictures. In the battle scenes, drums roar in imitation of the boom of cannon, men cheer, horses gallop, bands play, trumpets call, drums beat charges and retreats, and the realism of the pictures and the enjoyment of the spectators are largely enhanced by this as well as by the orchestral score.

G. A. M.

Lexington Ky Herald 3/21

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

Film World's Greatest Play Opens To Big First Day House

ON ELABORATE SCALE

Historical Drama True To Life In Many Of Its Details

(By Enoch Grehan.)

The historical drama, "The Birth o a Nation," founded on "The Clans man" and presented by D. W. Grif fith, opened its Lexington engage ment at the Opera House Monda evening to an almost packed house.

The photo drama came to Lexington after the most remarkable run ever given any similar enterprise in so short a time in the entire field of American public entertainment, and redeemed to the letter every promise its promoters had made with reference to extent of production and uniqueness and elaboration of theme.

The writer has seen many of the greatest photoplays yet produced in America and enjoys a fairly intimate acquaintance with the reputed merits of many others he has not actually seen. In his limited judgment "The Birth of a Nation" has not yet been excelled and doubtless will remain a landmark as the most complete, most thorough and most masterful in detail of presentation and faithfulness to historic precedent in at least the next decade of film activity.

It is presumed that the play and the purposes of the writer of the original story are too well known to require attempts at detail here of plot or theme, that would have to be at best, only meagerly given. It covers a wide, interesting and dramatic period in American history—a period now so happily past by more than half a century, that the thoughtful man or woman can but hope at least represents only the embers of a burnt out fire, the ashes of a conflagration that has forever spent its fury.

There has been considerable inane twaddle, perhaps the sinister machinations of the industrious press agent after all, to the effect that the drama has an unwholesome influence upon the representatives of the white and black races. But one must be daring indeed to presume that the intelligence of either race has reached so low an ebb that they cannot witness the re-enactment of its scenes without racial resentment and ill will toward each other.

There are nevertheless details of the play that are disagreeable, and re-enactment no doubt does recall unhappy memories of the frightful "sixties" when that most damnable of all living creatures, the carpet-bagger, wrought upon the weakness and ignorance and credulity of a once enslaved people with results it were well to forget; but the light of a new and better era of broader humanity and greater interdependence between the white man and the black has brought clarified vision and better understanding. So that the young of either race may now reflect upon the trials of their ancestors of fifty years ago rather as lessons for the present than as incitement to revival of feeling that belongs to a forgotten, and let us hope, forgiven past.

The theme is historical but its fundamental basis is true drama with forces marshaled upon a scale more stupendous and spectacular than hitherto attempted.

Eighteen thousand people are said to have been used in enacting the spectacle and a fortune of half a million dollars expended in completing the play.

Three thousand horses are employed in scenes depicting Civil War battles and in the wild, even frantic dashes of the Kuklux clan that operated after the war. Cities were constructed of scenic properties only to be destroyed; and history, palpitating with the vital emphasis of a tremendous and soul-racking period is written in all the living fire of that desperate hour. And through it all runs romance as sweet and tender as chivalry could inspire and sacrifice apparently as heroic as the world has ever known on battlefield or tilted tournament of mediaeval days.

Drama of [illegible] homes are [illegible] blood are rent [illegible] the wild rancor [illegible] attack and defense [illegible] whelment, destruction [illegible] devastation [illegible] and hate. And then above the [illegible] nage there are glimpses of the [illegible] calm of quiet skies and [illegible] peaceful moon, and home and [illegible] whose Gethsemane then is the [illegible] est memory of our time. Above [illegible] terrible scenes abide Lee, the [illegible] leader of the South and Lincoln, [illegible] life was as beautiful as a "[illegible] day when reapers sing amid the [illegible] nered grain."

Barring the necessarily [illegible] able scenes depicting negro [illegible] at defilement of white women, [illegible] drama is engaging to the [illegible] and deserves the commendation [illegible] has been given to the daring [illegible] who made possible so remarkable [illegible] production.

The closing scenes reflect [illegible] united country, a prosperous [illegible] peaceful negro race going about [illegible] daily vocations as useful and [illegible] abiding citizens, without which [illegible] ing the drama would be [illegible] and displeasing.

The musical score played during [illegible] play is exceptional and heightens [illegible] dignity of the drama.

Allentown (Pa) Morning Call 3/22

THE BIRTH OF A NATION TO RETURN TO LYRIC ALL NEXT WEEK

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation", coming to the Lyric next Monday is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical period in the history of the states. It pictures the times that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached with levity. It is not a comedy, unless the word comedy be used as it was by Dante and Balzac. It is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature in those days. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle, comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

A typical Southern home is shown where all is of good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A young Northern lad is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds there is pure comedy. A few months later they are destined to die on the fields of battle enemies, but clasped in each others arms.

Then there is shown the young daughter of the old Southern family almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Later is seen her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps to her death from a high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy nevertheless.

Again there is a scene in "The negro quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the amusement of the Northern visitors. They dance the shuffle, hug and wing and other steps to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw."

When the Cameron's are besieged in the cabin of two Union soldiers by a mob of frenzied negro soldiers, a time when tragedy looms over the scene like a dread spectre, the audience goes into convulsions of laughter when the faithful old negro mammy hits a negro soldier on the head with a chair of wood. And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shades of life in striking contrast to the more sombre scenes, and that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a faithful picture of the times, for tragedy follows comedy ever.

DIXON'S "CLANSMAN" SUGGESTED MAKING OF "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 5,000 horses, instead of the tiny "array" of the theatre boards. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five far flung battle lines of many miles, and Ku Klux "rides" racing in the open, which surpass in speed any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and delicate as in a "short cast" drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman, and of Mae Marsh as Flora, particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are 100,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand dissolves and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance of Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1868; the making of battle scenes at night; the secret new process; the use of 7 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the revelation of the glorious beauty of our Nature; his marvelous quiet perfective playing the entire gamut of emotions from lightest comedy to most tragedy; finally and supremely the union of all the stage arts with conversational speech into a new form of drama-spectacle-wizardry.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama presented in a regular theatre on Broadway and at the usual first class prices of "two dollar top" prices. No price will be made on these prices for the. The facts that one and a half million people have already witnessed it and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half of a year in simultaneous productions of New York, Chicago and Boston, prove that the biggest claims in its behalf are upheld by the popular verdict. Long opposition at various times, it should be added, "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censors everywhere; upheld, when appealed, by decisions of courts of review; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any other entertainment ever offered the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the reconstruction story.

Allentown (Pa) Leader 3/22

ALLENTOWN LEADER

MIRIAM COOPER IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S [illegible] "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LYRIC THEATRE BEGINNING MONDAY, MARCH 2[illegible]

Allentown (Pa) Leader 3/22

EASTON DAILY EXPRESS

"The Birth of a Nation"

[illegible]

EASTON DAILY ARGUS

"The Birth of a Nation"

[illegible]

EASTON DAILY ARGUS

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation." The Klu Klux Klan, which forms [illegible]h an interesting part of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at Proctor's Grand, twice [illegible]ly, was organized as a secret and [illegible]al band in the State of Tennessee [illegible] May, 1866. The title was taken from [illegible] Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The word klan was added by the [illegible]mbers, who were in a large part [illegible]tage descended from the Scotch [illegible] settled in old Virginia. When the [illegible]ns went forth to put an end to the [illegible]

[illegible]-bagger rule of their beloved [illegible]thland, after the Civil war, and [illegible]e out the political desperados who [illegible]rmed down from the North to grab [illegible]ything in sight, the riders adopted [illegible] their emblem the fiery cross which [illegible] Scotch Highlanders had long used [illegible] call to battle in the early days of [illegible] in their native land. The inception [illegible] of this famous and historic band, [illegible]mission and what it accomplished—[illegible] rehabilitation of the South—is [illegible]wn in the reconstruction portion of [illegible] Griffith drama.

Allentown (Pa) Morning Call 3/22

[illegible]ON'S "CLANSMAN" [illegible]GGESTED MAKING OF [illegible]BIRTH OF A NATION"

[illegible] Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and [illegible]der than the original play that [illegible] can be no comparison. For [illegible]ple, he presents 18,000 actors and [illegible] horses, instead of the tiny "array" [illegible] of the theatric boards. He [illegible]s 5,000 scenes in place of four or [illegible] far flung battle lines of many [illegible] miles, and Ku Klux "rides" racing [illegible]n the open, which surpass in [illegible] any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet [illegible]ndividual acting is as fine and [illegible]le as in a "short cast" drama, [illegible]work of Henry Walthall as the [illegible]man, and of Mae Marsh as Flora, [illegible]articular, rising to heights of [illegible]s. Other marvels of the work are [illegible]00,000 faithfully accurate historical [illegible]etails; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand dissolves and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance [illegible] Lincoln was shot, and the South [illegible]na legislature session of 1868; [illegible]aking of battle scenes at night; [illegible] secret new process; the use of [illegible] yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's [illegible]es; the master's Rembrandt-like [illegible]gement of light and shade; the [illegible]tion of the glorious beauty of our [illegible] Nature; his marvelous quiet perfective playing the entire gamut of [illegible]nce from lightest comedy to [illegible]st tragedy; finally and supremely [illegible]e union of all the stage arts with [illegible] conversational speech into a new [illegible]orm of drama-spectacle-wizardry.

[illegible]e Birth of a Nation" has been [illegible]med as the first pictorial drama [illegible] presented in a regular theatre [illegible]way and at the usual first class [illegible] of "two dollar top" prices. No [illegible]ce will be made on these prices [illegible]ur. The facts that one and a half [illegible]n people have already witnessed [illegible]d that it has already run to capacity attendance for half of a year in [illegible]imultaneous productions of New [illegible] Chicago and Boston, prove that [illegible] biggest claims in its behalf are [illegible]ed by the popular verdict. Long [illegible] opposition at various times, it [illegible]d be added, "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censors everywhere; upheld, when appealed, by decisions of courts of review; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any other entertainment ever offered the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the reconstruction story.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

During the rush for tickets for the wonderful production of "The Birth of a Nation," it is impossible to answer the telephone, so patrons are requested to call in person for tickets, as no tickets will be laid aside for any one. Those desiring to see the picture are asked to bear this in mind and not consider it a discourtesy when they do not get an answer over the telephone. There are a number of good seats left for every performance, but it is advisable to get them as early as possible.

3/22

MORNING STAR, WILMINGTON

"The Birth of a Nation."

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Academy of Music, Wilmington, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of the Old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and the life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comment of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

At the Aedamey of Music Wilmington for four nights beginning Wednesday, March 29th, with matinees daily thereafter.

The Ku Klux Clansman in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy, March 29, Four Nights, Three Matinees.

Pa 3/22

ALLENTOWN CHRONICLE AND NEWS

BIRTH OF A NATION COMING TO LYRIC

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation will open a week's engagement next Monday matinee at the Lyric Theatre. The first class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts and a complete traveling organization of 50 people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the States as well as those of Reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the south—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered States. The wild adventures and achievements of the Klu Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

HENRY G. WALTHALL,
As "The Little Col," in D. W. Griffith's Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Lyric, Week of March 27th.

This Film Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation," to be seen at the Auditorium, is due to the colorful setting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Lyceum next Monday, is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical period in the history of the states, pictures the times that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached with levity. It is not a comedy, using the word comedy as used by Dante and Balzac. It is simply a fruthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of dramatic nature in those days. There is comedy in D. W. Griffith's famed spectacle, comedy of the delicate sort, but comedy never...

Jul 3/22

CONNERSVILLE EVENING NEWS

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Auditorium, March 27, 28 and 29, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Marion Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Herron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle. Mail orders now, if accompanied by money order and self-addressed envelope.

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Auditorium, March 27, 28 and 29, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron," but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displayed a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Connersville (Ind) Evening News 3/22

Lillian Gish, in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Auditorium for a three days' engagement, starting Monday, March 27.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE

DRURY LANE, LONDON, NOW PICTURE PALACE

"Birth of a Nation" Produced in England's National Theatre.

[By Cable to The Tribune.]

London, March 22.—Moving pictures achieved their greatest triumph to-day, when Drury Lane, England's national theatre, was converted into a picture palace for the production of "The Birth of a Nation."

The Drury Lane Theatre Royal was opened in 1663, and every English actor of the first rank since that year has appeared upon its boards, Nell Gwynne, Betterton, David Garrick, John Philip Kemble, Mrs. Siddons, Edmund Kean, William C. Macready and Henry Irving.

Reg 3/23

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL

PROCTOR'S GRAND.

"The Birth of a Nation."

At Proctor's Grand all this week at matinee and evening performances "The Birth of a Nation," a stupendous film, is being shown, this being a return engagement. An enlarged orchestra in some excellent interpretative music adds to the picture, which is the work of David W. Griffith, a wizard of the screen. "The Birth of a Nation" has attracted the attention of thousands all over this country. It is unusual and electrifying from beginning to end and its delightful romance of the Blue and the Gray; its stirring scenes during the clash of the armies of the North and the South, the ravages of the mobs in Southern cities, and many historical events make it of vital importance to young folk and of intense interest to those who recall the very incidents that are transpiring on the canvas. There are numerous big moments in this spectacular offering, and among the greatest of these is the assembling of the Ku-Klux Klan, a vast army of itself. The burning of Piedmont and the assassination of Lincoln and other scenes add to the impressiveness.

Allentown (Pa) Democrat 3/23

THE COMING OF THE BIRTH OF A NATION TO LYRIC NEXT WEEK

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Lyric for all next week. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and the stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wfought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime, the great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great-out-of-doors, where nature painted the background.

Easton (Pa) Express 3/23

Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation."

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little "Flora" in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Orpheum Theatre this week, is a prodigy of film-dom. In fact, it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts, who declare her to be the best "find" of the last thirty months in this wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spear-holding with the "merry, merry" was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "Big Sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavery" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility, could queen it in a palace or play a "biddy" in a kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit—with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero—had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention offhand a really great character actress in the photographic field the chances are ten to one that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan!

Easton (Pa) Free Press 3/23

AT THE ORPHEUM.

Comedy in "The Birth of a Nation"—A great deal of film comedy is horseplay, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Orpheum Theatre proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love sick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure-fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

THE COMING OF THE BIRTH OF A NATION TO LYRIC NEXT WEEK

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Lyric for all next week. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and the stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wfought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime, the great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great-out-of-doors, where nature painted the background.

Wilmington (Del) Star 3/23

"The Birth of a Nation."

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen at the Academy of Music in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil war history and of Ku Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith clan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

At the Academy of Music, Wilmington, for four nights beginning Wednesday, March 29, with matinees Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE

On Sunday, March 28, and continuing for seven days, D. W. Griffith's famous war spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be offered for a return engagement, for which seats are now on sale at the box office. This is precisely the same production, including the symphony orchestra of thirty, which was shown here during the week of January 11. It combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, musical and mechanical effects into harmonious ensemble, which captivates the eye and the ear. In its presentation of over two hours, it epitomizes the making of a nation. In the cast are such distinguished artists as Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Jos. Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Erich Von Crisp and many others.

MAE MARSH

In "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's for Seven Days, Beginning Sunday.

Allentown (Pa) Re. Item 3/23

THE COMING OF THE BIRTH OF A NATION TO LYRIC NEXT WEEK

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Lyric for all next week. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and the stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wfought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime, the great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great-out-of-doors, where nature painted the background.

Allentown (Pa) Call 3/23

WHAT DR. PARKHURST HAS TO SAY ABOUT THE BIRTH OF A NATI

It is impossible to witness the drama, "The Birth of a Nation" want to say something about it.

Everyone who has seen it is something about it. When one been crowded upon, pressed down run down, it is against nature not make some kind of an outcry.

The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance but a single feature of it—but it that which one feels most poignant after three straight hours. It begins an easy way but commences find its muscle and goes on to end pounding upon one's senses blows that come heavier and and more and more rapid.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with events of the Reconstruction Period along with the detailed scholarly which he has made of the wider history of events which the play covers renders the production one of surpassing educational value.

EASTON DAILY ARGUS 3/23

Ku Klux Klan in "The Birth of a Nation."

The Ku Klux Klan, which seem an interesting part of D. W. Griffith's great production, "The Birth of a Nation," was organized as a vet and social band in the state of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The third word Klan was added by the members who were in a large percentage descended from the Scotch who settled in old Virginia. Seats are on sale now for the remainder of the week.

Allentown (Pa) Leader 3/23

It is impossible to witness the drama, "The Birth of a Nation" not want to say something about it.

Everyone who has seen it is something about it. When one been crowded upon, pressed down run down, it is against nature not make some kind of an outcry.

The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever been put on the stage.

The tension of the performance but a single feature of it—but it that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way but commences to find its muscle and goes on to the end pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and harder and more and more rapid.

The intimate familiarity which Mr. David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the Reconstruction Period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider history of events which the play covers renders the production one of surpassing educational value.

Donnerstag, den 23. März

Der amerikanische [illegible] Olympic Theaters während der [illegible] Woche bekannt, daß die [illegible] sich an Griffith's großes Werk „The Birth of a Nation" (Geburt einer Weltwunder) [illegible] hatten gesichert haben. Es gibt Bücher, die man immer wieder lesen kann, ohne sie langweilig zu finden. Gelegentlich findet man einen Film, dasselbe artiges, was man nie wieder beobachtet hatte. Genau so bei Griffith's Meisterwerk.

Der erste Teil von „The Birth of a Nation" beschäftigt sich ausschließlich mit den Schrecken und Wirren des Bürgerkrieges, während der zweite Teil die Umwandlungen im Süden nach dem Kriege behandelt. Dieser zweite Teil ist auf Thomas Dixon's Novelle „The Clansman" aufgebaut worden. Verbunden ist dieser Teil mit einer reizenden Liebesgeschichte, welche die endliche Aussöhnung zwischen Nord und Süd symbolisiert. Dem Zuschauer werden die Heldinnen des Stückes mit einer so lebendigen Charakteristik vorgetragen, daß er vermeint, ein rührendes Theaterstück und nicht ein Wunderwerk der Kinematographie zu erblicken. Erhöht wird der Reiz noch durch die stimmungsvolle Begleitmusik, die von einem anderlesenen Orchester vorgetragen wird.

Date 3/23/?

MONMOUTH DAILY ATLAS,

The Clansman.

A capacity house greeted the first performance of the great picture from Dixon's "The Clansman" at the Patton Opera House last night. Some had already seen the picture in Chicago, Galesburg or elsewhere, but there is sufficient of interest and thrill to make it worth while to be seen again. There have been many objections to the play, "The Clansman," because of the possibility of stirring up racial hatred, but in the main the production is historically correct and the portraits of leading statesmen, soldiers, and people is as correct in detail as is possible to get them. Particularly is this true of Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Sumner, Thaddeus Stevens (Stoneman) and others. The production is probably the most expensive ever attempted, and such places as the old theater where Lincoln was assassinated, the old state house at Columbia, S. C., and many residences are reproduced to the minutest detail.

War scenes and the terrible aftermath in the Carolinas are pictured in most impressive style with the aid of thousands of people and hundreds of horses. The organization of the Ku Klux Klan, perhaps the only legal force which ever permanently succeeded in proving that some laws are oppressive and which influence social and racial conditions, is of course the central idea, and the work of the organized members of this terror-striking society of the Iron Cross was one of the most thrilling scenes ever transferred to the screen. The pictures will be shown here tonight and again tomorrow, as advertised in another column. A feature of the production which is particularly noteworthy is the orchestra and the careful adaption of all the music to the piece.

Albany Times-Union 3/23

TIMES-UNION.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Brilliant Production at Proctor's Grand Theatre.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation," this week at Proctor's Grand, twice daily, is occasioned by the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman, the part played by Lillian Gish. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look. Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans creole by birth, and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going to Los Angeles and the studio of Mr. Griffith. The costume worn by Mr. LeBlanc in this scene was a Rebellion uniform. The antebellum gown worn by Miss Gish is an heirloom of her family.

The Times-Picayune

ISSUED EVERY MORNING BY

The Times-Picayune Publishing Co.

314-318 CAMP STREET.

NEW ORLEANS.

Entered at the Postoffice

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

There has been appearing in this city, at the Tulane Theater, for over a week a moving picture production —"The Birth of a Nation"—which has attracted attention throughout the country, and which has been the subject of long and animated discussion and criticism in the press. It seems somewhat strange that this picture should have been shown first in the North, whereas its scenes are laid almost exclusively in the South and tell of the events that left indelible marks on this section and so greatly influenced and directed its developments ever since. It is probably best that the North should first see the Southern side of the Civil war and of reconstruction, in the most striking manner in which it can be presented. The written word can tell much; the picture is often even more impressive and appealing to many; but nothing can tell of the past better than moving pictures, which enable the looker-on to see events just as they occurred. They will always be accepted as one of the best teachers of history.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells the story of the Civil war—the heroic struggle the South made, and the sufferings it endured—and tells of its recovery from the ruin and desolation that the war left behind, when bitterness sought to destroy its civilization. It was, perhaps, best, in the results accomplished, that these pictures should have been shown first in the North, as they produced a profound effect in that section and corrected many false ideas that prevailed there. There was much opposition at first to this production, on sectional and other grounds, and various efforts made to prevent the production or to require the cutting out of many scenes; but it was soon made evident to all that the pictures were valuable, interesting and instructive, and they were generally shown throughout the country.

They have now come to New Orleans, the capital of the South, and are showing at the Tulane. They have been seen by thousands already, and will probably be seen by thousands more, as they will remain as long as the public is interested in them. The scenes they depict—dating back forty or fifty years—have not been witnessed by many persons. No history of that time has been written—certainly none for Louisiana—and of those incidents that occurred away from the South, no one can, of course, know anything. Yet these incidents are a part of American history, which we all want to know—the destruction of the old regime, the building up of a nation on new lines. While there is the vein of a love story running through the scenes, they are mainly historical, telling the conditions in the South during the decade following the secession of South Carolina. President Lincoln and his cabinet, the assassination of Lincoln, the surrender at Appomattox, the first session of the Reconstruction Legislature of South Carolina, carry stories we should all see and fully understand. The story of the South, its defeat and revival, could not be better presented than in this series of pictures, and in no better way can the lessons of history be taught or public interest better aroused in its study.

Date 3/22/?

CONNELLSVILLE EVENING NEWS

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco. "The Birth of a Nation," which will appear at the Auditorium next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, was produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. It was suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. The story is divided into two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War are re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea, is a feature.

107

10

NY Evening Telegram

MARCH 24.

Cable advices from London, England, announce the successful opening of the famous American spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at Drury Lane Theatre.

Manager Burlock, representing the Griffith interests in London, cables that the initial presentation in Drury Lane created a splendid impression. Within a fortnight other organizations directed from New York headquarters will introduce "The Birth of a Nation" in the leading theatre at Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, and Sydney, Australia.

3/24

Evening World

Cable advices state that "The Birth of a Nation" opened successfully at the Drury Lane Theatre, London, Wednesday.

Allentown (Pa) Democrat 3/24

SEATS FOR THE BIRTH OF A NATION ALREADY ARE SELLING FAST

Thousands of patrons who intend to witness the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lyric all next week, are taking time by the forelock and guarding against the conditions that prevailed during the last engagement of the mighty spectacle. The advance sale of seats for next week registers many thousands of seats sold. Patrons are buying about every minute in the day and many express gratification at being able to secure just about the location they prefer. With many who are holding back it will be a repetition of their former disappointment. Some are inclined to think that they can come to the Lyric any time and secure what they want. This is not so. It is the early buyers that do not meet with disappointment.

It will be well for those who contemplate attending for the last times here the greatest spectacle the world has ever known to secure their seats for afternoons or evenings during the fore part of the week. Many are waiting to go on Saturday. A word of good advise to these people would be to not figure on Saturday. A good portion of the theatre is already sold out for the matinee and the evening will see many who waited too long being sent away. Now is the time to protect yourself. Buy your seats today.

NY Journal of Commerce & Commercial Bulletin 3/24

Cable advices received in the New York offices of "The Birth of a Nation" announce the successful opening of the famous production at the Drury Lane Theatre in London. This is the first film production to appear in the famous theatre, which has housed such stars as Mrs. Siddons, the Kembles, Kean and Macready. "The Birth of a Nation" is to be shown in Buenos Ayres and Sydney within two weeks.

Albany (NY) Ave Journal

MARCH 24, 1916

PROCTOR'S GRAND.

"Birth of a Nation."

At Proctor's Grand, twice daily, "The Birth of a Nation" is proving that D. W. Griffith reproduced the principal events of Civil war times and the Reconstruction period as they never before have been seen on any stage. Here are historical facts and this nation's principal events pictured with such faithfulness to accuracy and detail that they are educative. For instance the best history obtainable can give but an idea of the battles of the Civil war. In the Griffith masterpiece we see war as it really was in the "sixties," fought again by thousands of men representing the Blue and the Gray—over miles of woods and fields, and fought as they waged war in those woeful days of strife. Here is pictured Sherman's March to the Sea as men who were makers of Sherman's army say it occurred, and here is shown the burning of Atlanta, with all the attending horrors of this act of war. Mr. Griffith spared no expense to make "The Birth of a Nation" faithfully picture the period which it depicts; and all authoritative works and every eyewitness it was possible to interview were consulted in order to attain this end. The two performances to-morrow will be the last chances to view this spectacle here.

Albany - (NY) Argus 3/24

"The Birth of a Nation."

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feathered quill from his kit and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed to it. The above bit of history is illustrated by David W. Griffith in the striking facsimile scene of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox" in "The Birth of a Nation," which is at Proctor's Grand twice daily this week. As history records, General Grant is seen in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, while General Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress. "My aim," said Mr. Griffith recently when discussing the spectacle's historic replicas, "was to show as little acting as possible. I have tried to be accurate in every detail and keep away from theatricalism."

THE ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TA THE LYRIC ALL NEXT WEEK.

Allentown (Pa) Leader 3/24

Thousands of patrons who intend to witness the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lyric all next week, are taking time by the forelock and guarding against the conditions that prevailed during the last engagement of the mighty spectacle. The advance sale of seats for next week registers many thousands of seats sold. Patrons are buying about every minute in the day and many express gratification at being able to secure just about the location they prefer. With many who are holding back it will be a repetition of their former disappointment. Some are inclined to think that they can come to the Lyric any time and secure what they want. This is not so. It is the early buyers that do not meet with disappointment.

It will be well for those who contemplate attending for the last times here the greatest spectacle the world has ever known to secure their seats for afternoons or evenings during the forepart of the week. Many are waiting to go on Saturday. A word of good advise to these people would be to not figure on Saturday. A good portion of the theatre is already sold out for the matinee and the evening will see many who waited too long being sent away. Now is the time to protect yourself. Buy your seats today.

Allentown (Pa) Call 3/24

BIRTH OF A NATION HAS A LARGE ADVANCE SALE AT THE LYRIC

Thousands of patrons who intend to witness the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation", at the Lyric all next week, are taking time by the forelock and guarding against the conditions that prevailed during the last engagement of the mighty spectacle. The advance sale of seats for next week registers many thousands of seats sold. Patrons are buying about every minute in the day and many express gratification at being able to secure just about the location they prefer. With many who are holding back it will be a repetition of their former disappointment. Some are inclined to think that they can come to the Lyric any time and secure what they want. This is not so. It is the early buyers that do not meet with disappointment.

Allentown (Pa) Chronicle & News 3/24

3/24 New Orleans (La)

TIMES-PICAYUNE,

Tulane Theater.

Seats will be placed on sale tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock for the third week of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tulane. The engagement of the Griffith spectacle has been extended again in compliance with a strong public demand and there are good indications that the third week will be the biggest of the engagement. Upwards of fifty thousand persons who have filled the Tulane twice daily during the past two weeks are advertising it as industriously as if they were paid employes of the Griffith corporation, and it is this powerful form of publicity that enables the spectacle to brush aside all records wherever it is presented.

Gonzalez (Fla) Leader 3/24

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Bird's Eye View of Gigantic Spectacle to be Played Here April 3 and 4

Premier performance March 3, 1915 at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, at Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five seperate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco. Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided into two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the great battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomatox, Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictoralized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a country for a day and cost $10,000.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000. Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells— costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches. Thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. Fifty people in the company with a symphonic orchestra, the musical score being synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes

"The Birth of a Nation" will appear at the Temple Theatre, Monday and Tuesday, April 3 and 4, with a matinee on Tuesday.

D. W. GRIFFITH.
The Man Who Created "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Wilmington, Four Nights, Beginning Wednesday, March 29th.

Wilmington (NC) Star 3/24

"The Birth of a Nation."

A great deal of film comedy is horse play, but Diavid W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatres proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "cure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

At the Academy of Music, Wilmington, for four nights, beginning Wednesday, March 29th, with a matinee Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Easton (Pa) Express 3/24

"The Birth of a Nation."

Among all the film [illegible] historical characters in [illegible] a Nation," the spectacle [illegible] the Orpheum to-night [illegible] and Donald Crisp, ha[illegible] most compliments on [illegible] of their work, the [illegible] Robert E. Lee and the [illegible] eral U. S. Grant.

The picture shows Gen[illegible] rendering to General Grant [illegible] Wilmer-McLean mansion at [illegible] tox Court House, Va. April [illegible] It is a most faithful rep[illegible] all the personages in the [illegible] toric scene and of the [illegible] of the action.

It is well known that many [illegible] ers of the defeated Confederac[illegible] ed to prolong the struggle by [illegible] of a guerilla warfare similar [illegible] used by the Boers towards [illegible] of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact [illegible] Wilkes Booth supposed that [illegible] ing President Lincoln he would [illegible] the support of the South in [illegible] struggle. But General Lee [illegible] different temper. He realized [illegible] the South had been beaten in [illegible] struggle on the fields of battle [illegible] that prolonging the fighting [illegible] merely add to the horrors and [illegible] ries endured by his people. [illegible] fore, after the battle of Five [illegible] he opened negotiations with [illegible] and on the morning of April 9th [illegible] der the budding apple trees of [illegible] Appomattox orchard, were decided [illegible] ed the terms of peace which were [illegible] mally written down at the Wilmer[illegible] McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough, General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket [illegible] stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful repetition of a great event.

Wilmington (NC) Star 3/24

"Birth of a Nation."

Manager Pease has secured a return engagement of the wonderful picture, "The Birth of a Nation" for two days, Friday and Saturday, April 14 and 15.

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan over 3,000 riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

Wilkes-Barre (Pa) Times 3/24

REVIEW MONMOUTH, ILL

CAPACITY HOUSE AT "BIRTH OF A NATION"

HUNDREDS ENJOYED OPENING PERFORMANCE OF GREAT PICTURE LAST NIGHT.

The opening performance of "The Birth of a Nation," which is here for the balance of the week, was given last night to a capacity house at the Pattee Opera house, and everyone left the theater with a feeling that all they had heard about the great picture was true in every sense of the word. Perhaps nothing has ever been shown in this city that has held an audience like this great picture did.

One not only sees the great picture, but he hears it. The truth of this becomes apparent when you realize that one man is engaged in making you see the film, while thirty more are making you hear it. The orchestra is composed of eighteen pices, just as it was advertised. In connection with this there are twelve men behind the screen engaged in producing noises to make the picture realistic. These men are kept busy during every minute of the production. One hardly realizes the important part they play in the picture. Then there is the orchestra which plays nearly every minute of the three hours. Appropriate descriptive music is played during the performance.

Five more performances will be given this week. A matinee is on this afternoon and tonight the regular evening show will be given. Tomorrow three performances will be given, the first at 10 a. m., the second at 2 in the afternoon, and the last at 8 in the evening. It would be safe to say that between 4,000 and 5,000 people will see the play here this week. A good portion of the audience last night was made up of out-of-town people.

3/24 Ind

CONNERSVILLE EVENING NEWS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, opens an engagement of three nights and two matinees starting Monday evening, March 27, at the Auditorium.

The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown.

SEATS FOR THE BIRTH OF A NATION ALREADY ARE SELLING FAST

Thousands of patrons who intend to witness the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lyric hall next week, are taking time by the forelock and guarding against the conditions that prevailed during the last engagement of the mighty spectacle. The advance sale of seats for next week registers many thousands of seats sold. Patrons are buying about every minute in the day and many express gratification at being able to secure just about the location they prefer. With many who are holding back it will be a repetition of their former disappointment. Some are inclined to think that they can come to the Lyric any time and secure what they want. This is not so. It is the early buyers that do not meet with disappointment.

It will be well for those who contemplate attending for the last times here the greatest spectacle the world has ever known to secure their seats for afternoons or evenings during the fore part of the week. Many are waiting to go on Saturday. A word of good advise to these people woud be to not figure on Saturday. A good portion of the theatre is already sold out for the matinee and the evening will see many who waited too long being sent away. Now is the time to protect yourself. Buy your seats today.

riam Cooper, in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the ium, March 27, 28 and 29.

GREENSBURG, IND., U.S.A.

'BIRTH OF A NATION' TO BE SHOWN HERE

GRIFFITH'S EPOCH-MAKING SPECTACLE WILL HOLD FORTH AT K. OF P. THREE DAYS

TELLS OF NATION RE-BORN

Wide Range of History and Characters Covered by Pictures—Special Orchestra of Twenty

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the K. of P. opera house for three days, starting Thursday, March 30. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the price cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal President; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina Legislature of 1870, are exact fac-similes of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay, now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies, anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the Master's hall,"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the Clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant respectively, George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant-colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegrade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Srnest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswood Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production is to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture-machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

OIL CITY BLIZZARD, Pa 4/4

Raleigh (N C) THE NEWS AND OBSERVER. 3/24

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" in "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

To be seen in "The Birth of a Nation," now showing at the Academy of Music, matinee and night.

(By the Press Agent.)

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

"MOVIES" AND THEATER.

OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Manager Pease has secured for his patrons a return engagement of this wonderful picture for Friday and Saturday of next week, April 14 and 15. It is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the two hours and 45 minutes' performance. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the states and the reconstruction of the Southland. Some faint idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor drama" cost half a million dollars.

112

Allentown Pa Leader 3/25

3/25

REPUBLICAN, KANE, PA.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with evening's performance opens an engagement of two days at the Temple theatre, Monday, April 3, and Tuesday, April 4, with matinee Tuesday. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist, Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos o fthe stricken South are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part-singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old war-time tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments" of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch. Matinee will be given on Tuesday, April 4.—ad.

Scene In The Birth of a Nation At The Lyric All Next Week

Judging by the way the seats are selling for "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be seen at the Lyric for all next week, the crowds attending will be just as great as they were the last time this mighty affair was presented here. It is strange that so many persons come to the box office window and ask the question if seats are on sale. It is a well known fact that every newspaper in this section is carrying large display announcements calling attention to the coming of the biggest affair of its kind known in the history of the American theatre. It is very evident that many of these same patrons who intend to delay the securing of their seats in advance as long as they can will be found among the lot who will not see it though they wanted to, and all because they neglected to take advantage of the invitation to buy the coveted pastepoards. "The Birth of a Nation" is something that is so far out of the ordinary that no comparison with other spectacles can be made. This will be the last times that this gigantic affair will be seen in this section of Pennsylvania. It is advised to secure good seats.

3/25

REPUBLICAN, KANE, PA.

SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA, A THRILLING FEATURE OF D. W. GRIFFITH'S MIGHTY SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE TEMPLE THEATRE, MONDAY AND TUESDAY, APRIL 3 AND 4. MATINEE, TUESDAY.

Albany Times Union 3/25

"The Birth of a Nation."

This afternoon and to-night offer the final opportunities to view "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's Grand. Owing to the demand of other cities to see the Griffith spectacle, it will not be shown here again this season. The local engagement has been attended by monster audiences twice daily and it is estimated that some 40,000 people have patronized it during the week it has been shown here. Mr. Griffith has unquestionably won a host of admirers by his present unusual and thrilling work, and they will be keenly interested to see his forthcoming mammoth production, which will deal with the world's attitude toward woman in her relationship to the laws of the different nations of the universe.

Final Performance of Famous Attraction at the Orpheum Tonight.

The record of all theatrical attractions in Easton or in fact any city the size of Easton will be broken when the "Birth of a Nation" completes it's twenty-fourth performance at the Orpheum Theatre tonight. The many wonderful things about this performance have been the principal topic of conversation for weeks and the big special symphony orchestra is an attraction in itself. While the advance sale for tonight is large, it is stated by the management for the benefit of those who have not seen it, that there are still a number of desirable seats to be had at the box office.

3/25

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE.

Commencing tomorrow afternoon "The Birth of a Nation" has been secured for a return engagement of seven days. The same production, including the symphony orchestra of thirty, which 18,000 people saw here in January, will be here again. This Griffith production combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble to captivate the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and forty-five minutes it epitomizes the making of a nation. From the introduction of African slavery right down through the Civil War and reconstruction days to the final real union of south and north in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people and three thousand horses were utilized in the making of the drama, which is composed of five thousand scenes.

ROWTH OF MOVIES IS PHENOMENAL

RMER MANAGER OF CITY EATRES TELLS OF CHANGE IN PUBLIC OPINION

e growth of the production and larity of the motion picture durthe past five years is one of the omena of the age. Examples of great growth, not only in the ty and standard of the pictures selves but in their popularity can ad in any part of the land to n the "movie" has penetrated and "movieless" spots in this country s scarce as the preverbial hen's

B. Willard, former movie magof this city, witnessing the rush for seats at the ticket y where "The Birth of a Natickets are being sold for prices have heretofore been charged when the best of the "legitimate" ctions, recalled that in 1912 he ged the Italia feature production, Fall of Troy," which cost $50,000 ne year's time to produce. This ction was then pronounced the ate in moving picture art and the first real feature film ever nted here.

hough the Willard theatre was d to capacity at each performmany persons turned away volly from the box office when they d that the admission fee for this ction was ten cents. Today the public is willing to pay two and down for the privilege of g the world's greatest extravawhich cost many times the necessary to produce "The Troy."

Greensburg Review 3/25

2 3/25

OIL CITY DERRICK

"BIRTH OF A NATION" RETURNS

Hundreds of people who were unfortunate enough to miss seeing the masterpiece film, "The Birth of a Nation," will gladly greet the announcement that Manager Pease, of the Opera house, has secured it for a return engagement in April. Oil City was one of four Pennsylvania cities to get a glimpse of this wonderful photoplay when it was first released and the impression it created, with the special music rendered by a special orchestra, will not soon be forgotten.

LILLIAN GISH
Noted Film Star, in "The Birth of a Nation," at Proctor's, Seven Days, Beginning Tomorrow.

ALBANY EVENING JOURNAL

PROCTOR'S GRAND.

"The Birth of a Nation."

To-night at Proctor's Grand offers the final opportunity to view the famous Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." This return engagement has been wonderfully attended, and it is estimated that some 40,000 people have patronized the performances during the two weeks that the picture has been presented in this city. The success of this film epic is unique in the history of theatricals, for all classes of people in all sections of the country have paid tribute to its interest, appeal and magnitude by making possible record-breaking engagements similar to the Albany one.

BIRTH OF A NATION HERE ALL NEXT WEEK

Judging by the way the seats are selling for "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be seen at the Lyric for all next week, the crowds attending will be just as great as they were the last time this mighty affair was presented here. It is strange that so many persons come to the box office window and ask the question if seats are on sale. It is a well known fact that every newspaper in this section is carrying large display announcements calling attention to the coming of the biggest affair of its kind known in the history of the American theatre. It is very evident that many of the self same patrons who intend to delay the securing of their seats in advance just as long as they can will be found among the lot who will not see it, though they wanted to, and all because they neglected to take advantage of the invitation to buy the much coveted pasteboards. "The Birth of a Nation" is something that is so much out of the ordinary that no comparison with other spectacles can be made. This will be the last times that this gigantic affair will be seen in this section of Pennsylvania. It is still tme to secure good seats.

This is all that can [illegible]

115

PRODUCING A PLAY ON A STAGE FIVE MILES LONG

AUTO FROM WHICH PICTURES OF THE ONRUSHING KU KLUX RIDERS WERE TAKEN.

SCENE AFTER THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG.

MR. GRIFFITH DIRECTING ACTORS FROM TOP OF SIXTY FOOT TOWER.

D. W. Griffith's Great Idea and How He Worked Out Historically Accurate Battle Scenes With 18,000 Actors and 3,000 Horses

An observing officer of a moving picture corporation was watching rehearsals for a little film drama one morning seven years ago when a complication developed, and it was patent that, as arranged for, the idea, in the language of the studio, would not get over. One of the players in the company, a slender young leading man, went up to the producing director and said, "Why couldn't it be done so and so?" indicating his plan.

The producing director nodded emphatically. "Right!" he said, and it was right. Whereupon the observing officer first mentioned turned to the director, saying seriously, "Why don't you try producing, Griffith?"

"I wouldn't mind having a chance [illegible] not a few little ideas," was [illegible]

In the generation further on there was a great grandfather in the Revolutionary war. Before that time there were Griffiths in Virginia.

After the war, of course, the Griffiths of Kentucky had, like many other families, mainly their memories to live on—memories and the products of a farm on the edge of the blue grass. The boy was born in that situation and received his education at the nearby country school.

The wander year came to the boy at twenty. In the meantime he had always liked to act in the dialogues at school Friday afternoons and a little later when they gave the plays at the Literary Society. In any event when he went out into the world he gravitated to Louisville and very promptly applied for a position with a modest little stock company which was giving everything from Shakespeare to Charles Hoyt at a local theater.

[illegible] always had a little bit of a sore spot over that. I know a little bit more about stage management now, you know. Then short story writing was not extra profitable, and I came back to New York from the country and found the moving picture game growing."

He began writing moving picture scenarios then at $5 and $10 apiece. That was all right if you could turn out enough of them. There are limits, however, to the physical capacity of even such plots as they used in those days, and the young man added moving picture acting to his other work. He went into the company of a corporation, the first one mentioned, studied the game as it was then, saw that it might be made an art and bided his time until the officer heard him make the suggestion to the producing director, whereupon another era was born.

There is no doubt the young manager grew a little more ambitious about that time. The corporation for which he worked had not been particularly prosperous, although today it is worth millions, but there was somebody in it wise enough not to impose any rules or regulations on the new director.

"Perhaps the reader will remember a modest, haunting little film. "I [illegible] to talking about details. Palestine and Jerusalem, a great cast, for I had chosen two of the foremost actors in the world—an initial expenditure of thousands—the thermometer dropped. It was madness." He paused. "Do you know it is a little gratifying to me now that within the last few days I have been approached by a syndicate which has asked me to do that very same thing, and they have said that I need not worry about a little thing like $500,000 or $1,000,000 if I need it."

By this time it is apparent Griffith had swung into his stride, and a year ago or a little more came "Judith," using about 2,000 people, where they built forty foot concrete walls, wide enough to have a battle on.

Then came "The Clansman." It seems that the chief producing director, as Mr. Griffith was, changed from one company to another, and according to reports he did so at a salary that would pay the President's yearly salary of $75,000 and more. He wouldn't talk about that. In any event, he had not worked long before he had the Dixon book handed over to him to read. He read it and lost interest in about everything else.

"I read the book," he says, "and I saw it. Not the book entirely, but as an opportunity for me to set forth [illegible] were professors of colleges, were asked to work out the correct historical data. There were interviews with veterans of the civil war on most important points, recourse to maps and reports down at Washington and finally a patient county by county tour of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and North Carolina until Piedmont was discovered.

Then came the location of the battlefields, after which the veterans with their maps went forth to lay out a battlefield just as it was at Petersburg and just as it was in part during the march of Sherman's army from Atlanta to the sea. Where approved territory was found the experts went to work upon it.

If a road wound this way, if there was a brook or a river or a house or a barn, that road, brook, house and barn were found or put in. If a town was needed along came an architect with his corps of builders, and they put it up just as some gray haired old man remembered it.

They remembered burnings, and a town, two towns, were put in—five altogether were built. One man remembered the burning of a town by night. Something must be done about that. A fireworks man said he could build bombs which, exploding in the air, would give enough light for the camera to work at night. Incidentally it [illegible] that by the time he had finished his long term of study Mr. Griffith did not use a scrap of paper, a book or scenario, yet he had arranged it all in his mind.

Ford's Theatre Reproduced In Actual Size and Five Southern Towns Built and Burned For the Sake of a Moving Picture

The great multitude for the flight from Atlanta and the town scenes were not actually under employment longer than two weeks. Then it may be added that the expenses ran far up into the thousands every day.

"The only way we could handle them was by military discipline," said Mr. Griffith. "We laid out a camp for the whites and a camp for the blacks. We set up two commissaries. Then we divided our forces into sections, each section commanded by a captain, who had his staff under him. That is how the picture was worked out.

"Every section leader in the big battle scenes or the town scenes kept his section, rehearsed it and looked after it. Complete telephone systems were installed for every section, and the [illegible] to preserve uniformity [illegible] or she, wore [illegible] individual did the first time [illegible] [illegible] was ready, and to the beat of a watch under telephone orders the action began. The air filled with smoke—the soldiers appeared as if in a real fight.

Trains of panic stricken refugees wound over the hills in flight, and then they stopped.

"We used the greatest number in all the scenes where they appear without reference to the position the pictures appear in the production," said Mr. Griffith. "That is always done. The multitudes were taken first and gradually the number was cut down until at last we had only the principals in their scenes.

"Some of the scenes which appear in order today were taken three or four months apart. That made more trouble, but if had to be done that way. You must remember exactly [illegible] paying his way in a [illegible] drama.

The man who produced that $2 movie is the man addressed in the studio seven years before, the man who said he had a few little ideas to work out.

He was Griffith then, now he is David Wark Griffith, for whom even the most surfeited regular dramatic critic had words of praise when that movie had its first night in New York and of whom also other men who study and observe rather than direct decline that he has raised the film drama to an art with a capital A and that he has unfolded new possibilities, pioneered in hitherto unsuspected fields.

In brief, Mr. Griffith took "The Clansman," a novel by the Rev. Thomas Dixon, and from it evolved an ambitious spectacle for the camera in which, working on a stage roughly speaking five miles long and two miles deep, he employed altogether 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses. He delineated battle scenes conducted according to the records preserved in the War Department at Washington, using artillery, cavalry and infantry as they were used in a real battle of the civil war.

His artillery duels were real artillery duels, his cavalry charges were passed by the men who participated in such a charge fifty years before. His men died as men had died in the trenches of the South, and they suffered just as the men who did suffer said they had. He built or caused to be built no less than five complete Southern towns, faithful to the last architectural detail, and he burned three of them.

He massed and handled great mobs as history said the real mobs acted. He reproduced one theater exactly life size and delineated the great national tragedy of the assassination of President Lincoln just as history says it occurred. He built the legislative halls of a Southern State and with an actual still photograph as a model brought back to life a scene in that chamber fifty years ago. Above all, throughout two hours and forty minutes he ran the threads of a love story.

Thus it was that Mr. Griffith leaned back in his chair puffing contentedly at an after luncheon cigar, taking his first vacation in about fourteen months. He was at that moment digesting, among other things, four questions which would take several hours to answer.

"Who are you?"

"Where did you learn how?"

"How did you do this?"

"What will come after?"

Mr. Griffith told how he was born in Kentucky some thirty odd years ago, the son of Jacob Wark Griffith, a brevet Brigadier General of the Confederate army. His family comes near to being eligible for about all the patriotic year's leading man.

Something else happened. In an odd moment on the road the young actor had written a short story or two and some verses. He came back to New York and sent them to a magazine, which promptly accepted them. Then he wrote a play, "The Fool and the Girl," and James K. Hackett took it. Another great romantic drama was begun and its acceptance promised. This was in the latter part of 1906 and the early part of 1907.

"That ended the stage for me," he explained. "No more of the hardships. I was going to be an author and draw down royalties. I woke up in about five months.

"The Hackett play failed, and I have [illegible] "The Merchant of Venice," rather ambitious; "A Blot in the Scutcheon," "Enoch Arden," a somber fancy; "Lines of White on a Sullen Sea," all of which led up to "Oil and Water," written by Mr. Griffith himself. A little more ambition and then came "A Corner in Wheat," the first pictures of which were modeled directly on Millet's "Gleaners," and the audience liked that.

"Just about that time," he put in, "it came to me that a wonderful thing could be done with 'The Life of Christ.' The divine tragedy has a universal appeal, and adequately done with reverence it could not fail of approval." He laughed. "I submitted my idea, and it was approved, but when I got the history of the country—reconstruction. There was a chance to show what the South thinks of Lincoln; there was a chance to show that the negro of the South did not of his own volition degenerate into the human being who made the Ku Klux Klan necessary, but rather he was seduced by the unscrupulous adventurers, who exploited a situation for their own selfish ends.

"There was nothing of race in my idea, and may I say there is nothing of race antagonism in my production. It is simply the pictorializing of an epoch."

Taking the book, reading it and dreaming about it, however, did not do the work. There were eight months of incubation. First three men, and they [illegible] tised in the newspapers that we want so many persons, men, women and children. We established employment bureaus, so to speak, and made our selections."

"How about the negroes?"

"They were the easiest. The negro is a natural actor, and I do not mind saying that among the 4,500 of them we took out of the fields, out of the shops and from every other place we found some with remarkable talent. A producer some day may put forth the tragedy of the negro on the film—he will find men and women of that race fully competent."

Of course, it was explained, they did not use the 18,000 persons all the five or six months they were actually photographing the drama. While it is true [illegible] scenes was a sixty-foot tower in front of the whole scene. It was there that George W. Bitzer, "best camera man in the world," Mr. Griffith says, and five assistants set their cameras. Every scene, it may be said, was taken six times.

Finally when every move of every section had been gone over again and again in rehearsal, when the soldiers knew when to charge or fall back, when to die or drop, even when the artillery knew the exact second when to wheel into action and the cavalry had its time schedule perfect, even to the exact place where a horse must stumble or fall, the section leaders came to headquarters.

Back in the hills the thousands were waiting. They dashed back to their commands. Word came that all [illegible] are shot and [illegible] Ku Klux come into the [illegible] horses jump over them as [illegible] the street. It took consid[illegible] suasion to get men to do that [illegible] the horses and their riders [illegible] best trained obtainable. [illegible] up with some men. "Men [illegible] do that for ladies as a [illegible] They got it.

"Take another case in the [illegible] invasion of the town. It may be [illegible] called that a man shot falls from the roof of a front porch head first on the ground. Many think the fall is made by a dummy. A real man does it and practiced it in a fire net until he got his fall just right, timed exactly as it had to be done to fit in with the scene.

"There is one case where a rider coming out of a house makes a flying leap into the saddle over the tail of his horse. That took time, and it does not show, but the man who did that had to jump over a railing encumbered by a robe.

"Many things were done in the work that do not appear in the film. There are twenty-five field guns in the battle scene pounding away, and they were too far away for the eye of the camera. Houses are burned of which you catch only a vague glow, people are fleeing over the hills and you can hardly see them."

The actual work was all over in five months, Mr. Griffith said. From their first camp they went to California for interiors and the honeymoon scenes, the allegories and theater scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln.

"The theater was the exact size of Ford's in Washington," Mr. Griffith explained, "and it was an exact duplicate. Old prints gave us every detail even down to the appearance of Laura Keene and her company in 'Our American Cousin.' We sought long before we got a man who could satisfy us as President Lincoln, and every man who became a member of his Cabinet was required to look like the original in size and general makeup.

"It was there that detail became almost overpowering. Men who lived in the old days were besieged. How did this man walk; how did he gesture; how did he wear his clothes; did he have any mannerisms? I tell you it kept a great many people awake nights. We took the famous painting of the surrender of Lee, and we never laid it down until I believe that every man in it had an exact double before our cameras."

Thus it all came out. There were more months as the film was perfected and made ready for the public. But at last it was done.

"Now what is the future of the moving picture?"

The man being interviewed lifted his hands. "Why, there are no limits to its possibilities in artistic work.

Easton (Pa) Express
Mar. 3/25

"The Birth Of A Nation" Has Appeared In All Big Cities Is Booked For Local Theatre

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a country for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfectedl at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every Board of Censors with one exception in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, Governors of States, Judges, Publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation reborn" as the result of War between the States and Reconstruction.

Coming to the Academy of Music Orangeburg, for three nights beginning Monday, April 3d, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

THE KU KLUX CLANSMAN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Academy of Music, Orangeburg, 3 nights beginning Monday, April 3d. Matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

Easton (Pa) Express
Mar. 3/25

"The Birth of a Nation."

The record of all theatrical attractions in Easton, or, in fact, any city the size of Easton, will be broken when "The Birth of a Nation" completes its 24th performance at the Orpheum Theatre to-night. The many wonderful things about this performance have been the principal topic of conversation for weeks, and the big special symphony orchestra is an attraction in itself.

While the advance sale for to-night is large, it is stated by the management for the benefit of those who have not seen it, that there are still a number of desirable seats to be had at the box office. This attraction will never appear in any but first-class theatres and at first-class prices, and at present there seems to be no possibility of the attraction coming to Easton again. The performance will commence at 8 o'clock, and those who have not as yet seen it will do well to take advantage of this last opportunity.

SEATS SELLING FAST FOR BIRTH OF A NATION AT LYRIC NEXT WEEK

Judging by the way the seats are selling for "The Birth of a Nation", which is to be seen at the Lyric for all next week, the crowds attending will be just as great as they were the last time this mighty affair was presented here. It is strange that so many persons come to the box office window and ask the question if seats are on sale. It is a well known fact that every newspaper in this section is carrying large display announcements calling attention to the coming of the biggest affair of its kind known in the history of the American theatre. It is very evident that many of these self same patrons who intend to delay the securing of their seats in advance just as long as they can will be found among the lot who will not see it, though they wanted to, and all because they neglected to take advantage of the invitation to buy the much coveted pasteboards. "The Birth of a Nation" is something that is so much out of the ordinary that no comparison with other spectacles can be made. This will be the last time that this gigantic affair will be seen in this section of Pennsylvania. It is still time to secure good seats.

"The Birth of a Nation."

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed at the bottom.

The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith during his staging of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox," one of his striking historical fac-simile scenes in Griffith's motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Academy of Music, Wilmington. General Grant is correctly represented in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, whilst General Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress. "My aim," said Mr. Griffith, in speaking of such scenes recently, "has been to introduce as little acting as possible. I have tried to be accurate in every detail and keep away from theatricalism."

At the Academy of Music, Wilmington, for four nights beginning Wednesday, March 29, with matinees Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The tickets for all performances are now on sale at Plummer's.

Connellsville Evening News
Sat 3/28

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the City of Atlanta. Imagine, if you can, a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the reproduction is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, drear and hopelessness.

Sherman's Army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the South. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the Confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox Court House with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle. Auditorium Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 27, 28 and 29, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

Wilmington (Del) Star
3/28

LILLIAN GISH AND HENRY WALTHALL
In a Scene in "The Birth of a Nation." Academy of Music, Wilmington, Wednesday, March 29, and Three Days and Nights Thereafter.

New Orleans
3/25

TIMES-PICAYUNE

Tulane Theater.

Although the Tulane box office is experiencing the heaviest rush since the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" began two weeks ago, there are plenty of good seats to be had for tonight's performance, and persons who have not yet witnessed the Griffith spectacle may find it to their advantage to come tonight instead of waiting until next week. Today's matinee is practically sold out, and it is strongly urged that those who can as conveniently attend the night performance arrange to do so and obtain their tickets at once. The opening of the sale for next week is expected another long line to the twin made this morning, and it surprise if the business of the Griffith spectacle is

3/25

ST. LOUIS TIMES

Last Week for "Birth of a Nation."

Large and enthusiastic audiences are greeting the final performances of D. W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Olympic Theater. Despite all rumors, the management announces positively that next week will be the last week of the great production in St. Louis for this season, and possibly for all time. Mr. Griffith is emphatic in his statement that he will withdraw "The Birth of a Nation" from the American stage as soon as it has completed its present run in the highest class theaters.

At its end, 17 weeks will have been played here, with a total of about 235 performances, equivalent to an entire season at any of the theaters playing the regular combination attractions. The usual local engagement consists of eight performances a week, and as 30 weeks is more than a normal season for St. Louis, "The Birth of a Nation" may be said to have played one entire season here. The absolutely final performances will be given on Saturday, April 1.

Lillian Gish in the greatest motion picture spectacle ever attempted. "The Birth of a Nation" personally produced by D. W. Griffith. Auditorium, Monday and Wednesday matinee and night.

Miriam Cooper, one of the leading players in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Auditorium, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday

Connellsville Daily Post News 3/25

Scene from D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Which Comes to the Auditorium Three Day Engagement Starting Monday, March 27.

FORT WORTH RECORD.

Mar 26

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

There Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

about "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's mighty spectacle of war and reconstruction days opens a return engagement for at Byers opera house Monday April 3, speak more eloquently merits than any words can do. upon Thomas Dixon's novel, ansman," it tells the true story South that culminated in the n and the chivalrous deeds of isible empire," far more vivid- loquently than the written or ken word can ever tell it. out it all there runs a double of the most beautiful romance ceived by an American novel- ramatist.

Birth of a Nation" contains mes, presents 18,000 actors and rses, cost $500,000 and eight of hard labor to produce, and during the two hours and e minutes of its exhibition a and vivid summary of the tensely interesting period of n history.

es of some of the greatest bat- the civil war are seen, culmi- inally in a detailed view of le of Petersburg, which was the most picturesque of the even excepting Gettysburg. aging of this battle, hundreds some costing as much as $80 re exploded and the effect, ac- d by a realistic roar of can- escribed as terrific.

is reproduced exactly as it 864, and the storming of the old southern city by General is one of the incidents of his e march to the sea, which Mr. has vividly visualized. The otography for the storming of and for the Petersburg battle nted and perfected by Mr. at a cost of $5,000.

d Grant are shown at their e meeting at Appomatox, t an end to the strife be- e North and the South, which way for the birth of a new d nation. The old nation of on and Jefferson was little a league of sovereign states. nation was destined to become strongly centralized and to take its place as the mightiest power on earth.

But even with the amicable adjustment of the difficulties between the armies of Lee and Grant, the way for the new nation was not smoothly paved. There was a mighty difficulty to be met in reconstructing a union that had been so violently torn asunder. Lincoln's proposal was to readmit the seceding states at once on their old footing—or rather to act as though there had never been a severance. He was for the binding up of the wounds immediately.

Unfortunately, however, the hand of an assassin stilled the mightiest heart that ever beat in an American breast, and the tragic night at Ford's theater is reproduced by Mr. Griffith to the smallest detail. Enemies of the South obtained control in congress. The carpetbaggers swarmed into a land that held out such splendid promise to crooked politicians. The result was an agony more terrible than war, and led to the formation of "the invisible empire." The terrific climax of "The Birth of a Nation" comes in the wild rides of the Kuklux Klans on their errands of vengeance and mercy. In the staging of these rides an entire county of southern California was commandeered for a day by Mr. Griffith at a cost of $10,000. More than 25,000 yards of cloth were consumed in the making of the Kuklux costumes.

Each of the 5,000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" is accompanied by musical and sound effects, making the spoken word unnecessary. Indeed, more than one critic has said that spoken words would destroy the tenseness of the illusion. For the rendition of the musical score, which is said to be on the high plane of grand opera, a complete symphony orchestra is carried.

New Orleans La
Times Picayune
3/26

Tulane Theater.

Two weeks of capacity business at the Tulane Theater has merely scratched the surface of the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" and the Griffith masterpiece begins its third week with strong prospects of breaking the records established during the early part of its run at the Tulane, when hundreds were turned away at nearly every performance. Two performances will be given today, at 2 and 8:15 p. m., and although the advance sale is very heavy, there are plenty of good seats left for both. Early visitors at the box office today will find an almost unlimited selection.

In this connection, it might be stated that persons who have not witnessed the spectacle will find it to their advantage to select seats for performances early in the week. As in other cities where it has been presented, the rush for the week-end performances has overtaxed the facilities of the theater and much confusion and disappointment have resulted. Beginning with Wednesday matinee, the afternoon performances have been sold out far in advance, while Monday and Tuesday performances have attracted little more than normal business. An even distribution of the attendance through the week would be to the advantage of both patrons and management. Students and teachers especially are urged to avoid the week-end performances.

Nothing else in the history of theatrical New Orleans has so stirred the city as has this wonderful dramatic epic of war and reconstruction. It has brushed aside the records established by "Ben Hur," "The Garden of Allah" and other spectacular offerings of mighty caliber and by remaining for three weeks at $2 scale it will have established itself in a class by itself. "The Merry Widow" was looked upon as a most sensational record-smasher when it played two weeks to a $2 scale in the season of 1909, but the Griffith spectacle has surpassed that feat, inasmuch as daily matinees have been given during the first two weeks of its run as against the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees of the Savage opera. The total attendance recorded during the run of "The Birth of a Nation" will stand as the Tulane's high water mark.

As to the probability of the spectacle remaining beyond this week, the Tulane management is giving no definite assurance. The attendance of the two weeks just ended indicates that it could be retained for an indefinite run, but the Griffith corporation will not agree to such an arrangement. It takes the position that it cannot afford to present its offering at the Tulane after it ceases to attract capacity audiences, because other cities are clamoring for the production and are ready to give it patronage limited only by the size of their theaters.

In producing "The Birth of a Nation" D. W. Griffith, a young Kentuckian, upset many heresies of the drama, one of these being that the spoken line is essential to a really big play. In his picturization of the South's sufferings during the war and reconstruction periods, he has substituted a musical score of surpassing beauty for the lines of the conventional drama and the result has been such as to stamp Griffith the creator of a new art. Reviewers have pronounced this new form of expression far more powerful than words. The score is fitted like a garment to the 5000 scenes of the play, the story of which is taken from Thomas Dixon's [illegible] South worked out its own salvation during the dark days of Reconstruction. Carpetbaggers and Ku-Klux Klan are the principal actors in the second part, which abounds in thrills and heart throbs.

3/26

St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat,

D. W. Griffith's Finale.

The last week of The Birth of A Nation in St. Louis begins with the matinee performance today at the Olympic Theater. D. W. Griffith spectacle has played almost a whole season here and it has been positively stated that the production is to be withdrawn from the stage altogether as soon as it has completed its run in the best theaters. The St. Louis engagement has established a world record and has been a success from every point of view.

Saturday next will be the final day of the engagement and the indications point toward an enormous week from a box office point of view.

Nur noch eine Woche, bis Sonntag abend, [illegible] Griffith's großartiges Bilderdrama „The Birth of a Nation" im Olympic-Theater. Es ist wirklich ein Wunder seiner Art. Nie zuvor hat man solche Massenszenen gesehen, wie die hier auf die Leinwand geworfenen Schlacht- und Straßenszenen.

Bekanntlich liegt dem Werke der bekannte Roman „The Clansman" zugrunde, worin geschildert wird, wie der Ku-Klux-Klan den Süden von der unter den „Carpetbaggers" eingeführten Negerherrschaft befreite. Griffith aber hat in „The Birth of a Nation" auch die Zeiten vor dem

"A BIRTH of a NATION" Olympic

Kriege geschildert, sowie einige der markantesten Episoden aus diesem selbst. Die Aussöhnung zwischen Nord und Süd, die Neugeburt der Nation, bildet den Abschluß des Ganzen. Was „The Birth of a Nation" besonders interessant macht, ist die absolut getreue Wiedergabe der darin erscheinenden historischen Figuren.

Pittsburgh-Blätter, Sonntag, den 26. März

3

EL PASO MORNING TIMES

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Texas Grand next week, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well-known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the south in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the south had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9th, under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough, General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

THE STORY OF THE KU KLUX KLAN

Probably the most thrilling scenes in David W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Texas Grand, are those in which the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the south.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed, "America for Americans." Somewhat like the Ku Klux Klan, the Vigilantes of California were organized to bring about law and order when the regular machinery of the law had broken down.

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as "an institution of Chivalry, Humanity and Patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed [illegible] Pulaski, Tennessee, in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the Grand Cyclops; his assistant was the Grand Magi; the marshal was the Grand Turk; the treasurer was the Grand Exchequer, and the guards were termed Lictors.

As the sorrows of the south under the baneful reconstruction acts began to be unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popularized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because so many of the original members were descendants of Scottish clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scottish Highlanders was again used as a call to arms.

A great gathering of the Klan in Nashville, Tenn., in 1867, passed the following resolutions which were at that time kept secret:

"We recognize our relations to the United States government, the supremacy of the constitution."

The aims of the organization were set forth as follows:

"1. To protect the weak, the innocent and the defenseless from the indignities, wrongs and outrages of the lawless, the violent and the brutal; to relieve the injured and oppressed; to succor the suffering and unfortunate and especially the widows and orphans of Confederate soldiers.

"2. To protect and defend the constitution of the United States and all laws passed in conformity thereto and to protect the states from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3. To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of the land."

The Empire, as the Klan was known, was ruled by the grand wizard, General Nathan Bedford Forrest, the gallant and dashing Confederate cavalry leader. Each state was known as a Realm and the ruler was the Grand Dragon. He was assisted by eight Hydras. A group of counties was called a Dominion, ruled by a Grand Titan and six furies.

Each county was a Province, under a Grand Giant and four Goblins. The unit of the organization was the Den and the members were known as Ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and ritual were never written until after the Grand Wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

A similar order was started in Louisiana known as the Knights of the White Camelia. The shibboleth of both organizations was "The Supremacy of the White Race," and that has survived in the south to this very day. At first the Ku Klux Klan devoted their efforts to putting down disorder among the bad negroes. Generally all that was necessary was to play upon the credulity and superstition of that race. They would ride up to a negro's cabin in the dead of night and one of the riders would call for a bucket of water, which he would drain to the bottom by using a concealed leather bag. He would then say that was the first drink he had had since he was killed at the battle of Shiloh. This is very effectively shown in "The Birth of a Nation."

Another would wear a skeleton hand and another would take off his skull and ask a negro to hold it while he adjusted his backbone. These things always had the desired effect. Later on they went after the vicious Carpetbaggers and Scalawags. It was the brave deeds of the Ku Klux Klan that saved the south from a worse fate than had ever before been the aftermath of war.

BALTIMORE AMERICAN.

The Picture That Mutely Avenged the Assassination of Lincoln

...the many thousands that will ...ing to Ford's to see The Birth ...Nation will be interested to know ...he portrait of George Washing- ...hich stands in the lobby is the ...cal picture in its original frame ...was part of the decorations of ...ox at Ford's Theater, Washing- ...in which President Lincoln sat ...ight he was assassinated by John ...es Booth. It was on the frame ...is picture that Booth caught his ... causing him to fall heavily to ...tage.

...picture is in a good state of ...rvation, having been in the pos- ...n of Mrs. John T. Ford ever ... the fatal occurrence. It is a ...rkable likeness of the first pres- ..., one of the most faithful of the ...vings that were made of him, ...ts historical value should make ...bby at Ford's the mecca of all ...are interested in the story of ...eventful night.

...ther historical relic in the pos- ...n of Mrs. Ford is the door of ...ox occupied by President Lin- ... In this door is an auger hole ... undoubtedly was bored by ... the morning of the tragedy. ... morning he had talked with ...L. Clay Ford, the brother of the ...ohn T. Ford, who was the treas- ...f Ford's Theater in Washington ...at time. Mr. Ford had men- ... casually that the President ... witness the performance that ... It was the belief of Mr. Ford ...shortly afterward Booth went ...he theater and, slipping back ... boxes, bored the hole in the ...o that he might peep through ...t night and see exactly where ...esident was sitting.

...ous historical societies have ...ager to buy these relics, but ...ord will not part with them. It ...ly because of the fact that ...rth of a Nation reproduces the ...y at Ford's that she consented ...ve the Washington picture ... in the lobby, so that school- ...n and all interested might have ...portunity of seeing that invalu- ...ble of the greatest tragedy in ...can history.

MORNING STAR, WILMINGTON, N. C., SUNDAY, MARCH 26,

Big Ball Room Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music Four Days, Starting Next Wednesday.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy of Musis next week is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical period in the history of the States . It pictures the times that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached with levity. It is not a comedy, unless the word comedy be used as it was by Dante and Balzac. It is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature in those days. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle, comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

A typical Southern home is shown where all is of good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A young Northern lad is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds there is pure comedy. A few months later they are destined to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each others arms.

Then there is shown the young daughter of the old Southern family; almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Later is seen her tragic end, when to save herself from fate worse than death, she jumps to her death from a high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy nevertheless.

Again there is a scene in "the negro quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the amusement of the Northern visitors. They dance the shuffle, buck and wing, and other steps to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw."

When the Camerons are besieged in the cabin of two Union soldiers by a mob of frenzied negro soldiers, a time when tragedy looms over the scene like a dread spectre, the audience gées into convulsions of laughter when the faithful old negro mammy hits a negro soldier on the head with a billet of wood. And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shades of life in striking contrast to the more sombre scenes. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times, for tragedy follows comedy ever.

At the Academy of Music Wilmington for four night beginning Wednesday, March 29th, with daily matinees thereafter. Seats are now selling at Plummer's for all performances. Matinee performances run from 50 cents to $1 Night prices range from 50 cents to $2

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SETS NEW RECORD AT TULANE

Wonderful Photo Drama to Be Here for Another Week and More Capacity Houses Are Expected.

THE TIMES-PICAYUNE, SUNDAY, MARCH 26.

New Orleans La Times-Picayune 3/26

THE HORRORS OF WAR.

[illegible] that supplement the film drama of "The Birth of a Nation."

New Orleans La Times-Picayune 3/26

SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," COMMENCING ITS THIRD WEEK AT THE TULANE TONIGHT

SENTINEL, AMSTERDAM

"The Birth of a Nation," Coming to The Amsterdam Theater, April 13, 14 and 15.

So pronounced was the success of D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," when it played the Amsterdam Theater in February that the enterprising management of the playhouse immediately sought a return engagement. Despite the demand of other cities to see this noted pictorial masterpiece Mr. Griffith yielded to persuasion with the result that the Amsterdama Theater announce a return engagement of three nights and two matinees to commence on Thursday evening, April 13th. This will positively be the last appearance of this drama in Amsterdam, and for that matter, in the vicinity. The remarkable popularity of this piece all over the country, as well as in Canada and London, England, has given it a world-wide reputation. It is now a subject of discussion in the trenches of the allies where Canadian and English soldiers have voiced its wonders and compared its thrilling scenes of the Civil war with modern methods of conflict. At the Drury Lane theater in the British metropolis its audiences are largely composed of wounded soldiers on sick leave.

As evidence of the fact that other countries wish to view this interesting and instructive spectacle, Mr. Griffith has announced that on April 22nd, performances will be given simultaneously in Sidney, Australia, and Buenos Ayries, Argentine.

Some six million people, in this country, have now seen "The Birth of a Nation." All classes, creeds and colors, the young and the old, have become its patrons and enthusiastic admirers. Apparently everybody is interested in this film epic and judging from its enormous patronage almost everybody is making the effort to become one of its patrons.

WEEK FOR "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The excited comments of friends who have seen "The Birth of a Nation," as it opens upon its second and final week at the Texas Grand today, the average person is apt to imagine that Griffith's stupendous spectacle of Civil War and reconstruction days is a series of big dramatic scenes. The excitement runs high in the battle of Petersburg, the blood-curdling rides of the Ku-Klux Klansmen, the assassination of Lincoln, the session of the South Carolina legislature and Sherman's march to the sea.

"The Birth of a Nation," as everybody who has seen it knows, tells a well-ordered story of romance and chivalry and is seldom lost sight of in instances of the roar of battle or the clattering of horses' hoofs. At Petersburg the great climax comes when Col. Ben Cameron of the Confederate army, charges the cabin of his old college friend, Capt. Phil Stoneman of the Federal army. These are the two of the double love story that runs through the drama, each afterwards married to the other's sister. The assassination of Lincoln, conspicuous in Ford's theater, in the presence, at the assassination of Lincoln, of the youthful Cameronns falls a victim to war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. The South Carolina legislature passes a law for the intermarriage of blacks and whites, making possible two climaxes in the story. The rides of the Klansmen are all the more exciting because the fact that their ultimate object is the rescue of persons in whom the audience is intensely interested.

Here has Griffith lost sight of his story and his spectacle is all the more epic in consequence.

Greenville (Ind) Journal
Mar. 27, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Today, tomorrow and Wednesday and night the eighth under the title, "The Birth of a Nation" will be exhibited at the Auditorium. Eighteen thousand people, thousand horses appear in the spectacle, which cost five thousand dollars to produce. "Birth of a Nation" played eight performances at New York five hundred in Chicago. The scenes of the decisive battles civil war, such as Sherman's the sea. Cities built up only destroyed before your eyes; and Lee at Appomattox; the of the death of Abraham Lincoln bravely the mothers and did their part; anguish of reunion; wild night rides of the Klan; history in the making. with the symphony orchestra city, will be the attraction exclusively, at the Auditorium for five nances beginning tonight. Those who have seen this stupendous dramatic narrative, recommend it to all their acquaintances.

3/27
Henecta Dy Gazette.

PROCTOR'S.

Probably the most thrilling scenes D. W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," which opened a seven days' return engagement at Proctor's yesterday, which will be seen at two performances daily, are those in which the ghostly garbed figures of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the South. The Ku Klux Klan was organized as "an institution of chivalry, humanity and patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuglos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tennessee, in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the grand cyclops; his assistants was the grand magi, the marshal was the grand turk, the treasurer was the grand exchequer, and the guards were termed lictors.

The sorrows of the south under the baneful Reconstruction acts between the unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popular as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because many of the original members members were descendants of Irish clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scottish Highlanders was again used as a call to arms.

The Empire, as the Klan was known, was ruled by the grand wizard, General Nathan Bedford Forrest, a gallant and dashing Confederate cavalry leader. Each state was known as a realm and the ruler was the grand dragon. He was assisted by eight hydras. A group of counties was called a dominion, ruled by a Titan and six furies. Each city was a province, under a grand and four goblins. The unit of organization was the den and members were known as ghouls. The membership at one time exceeded over 500,000.

BIRTH OF A NATION SHOW ON THE SCENE

Carries a Carload of Paraphernalia —Seat Sale

The material for the photo-spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" which will appear for the first performance at the Auditorium tonight, arrived this forenoon. It filled a full sized car. The special booth, the special machines, the screen and the films take up much space. The orchestra members, sixteen of them, came also. The work of setting up the place for the piece was well along at mid-afternoon. The ticket sale, though there are good seats left, is so large as to mean filled houses for every one of the five shows. There will be night performances tonight, Tuesday and Wednesday nights and matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

Orangeburg, S. C.

Big Demand Theater Tickets

The demand for seats for "The Birth Of A Nation" is already heavy. Reservations for all three days are being made. Some of the mail orders are being received from points as far as Georgetown, and tickets are being taken in blocks of from five to a dozen and more. The picture promises to be one of the biggest pullers that has ever been offered at the local Academy of Music.

Allentown (Pa) Ev. News 3/27

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS WEEK'S STAY AT THE LYRIC TODAY

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, comes to the Lyric today and all week, and is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the states and the reconstruction of the southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a brigadier general of the Confederate army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama after panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor.

Allentown (Pa) Leader 3/27

BIRTH OF A NATION AT LYRIC THIS WEEK

Greatest of All Picture Dramas Again in Allentown

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Lyric today commencing with a matinee.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted toa theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict, 18,000 people participating in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama

Allentown (Pa) Morning Call 3/27

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS WEEK'S STAY AT THE LYRIC TODAY

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, comes to the Lyric today and all week, and is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the states and the reconstruction of the southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a brigadier general of the Confederate army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama after panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor.

Westliche Post, Montag, den 27. März

Olympic.

Nur noch eine Woche, bis Samstag abend, verbleibt Griffith's großartiges Bilderdrama „The Birth of a Nation" im Olympic-Theater. Es ist wirklich ein Wunder seiner Art. Nie zuvor hat man solche Massenefekte gesehen, wie die hier auf die Leinwand geworfenen Schlacht- und Straßenszenen.

Bekanntlich liegt dem Werke der bekannte Roman „The Clansman" zugrunde, worin geschildert wird, wie der Ku-Klux-Klan den Süden von der unter den „Carpetbaggers" eingeführten Negerherrschaft befreite. Griffith aber hat in „The Birth of a Nation" auch die Zeiten vor dem Kriege geschildert, sowie einige der markanteiten Episoden aus diesem selbst. Die Aussöhnung zwischen Nord und Süd, die Neugeburt der Nation, bildet den Abschluß des Ganzen. Was „The Birth of a Nation" besonders interessant macht, ist die absolut getreue Wiedergabe der darin erscheinenden historischen Figuren.

Ft. Worth (Texas) Record 3/27

"BIRTH OF A NATION" COSMOPOLITAN HIT

Film Portraying Civil War Scenes Will Return to Byers for Solid Week.

That the sensation created by "The Birth of a Nation" the length and breadth of the United States not to be confined to this country alone has become evident through experiments that are being made in foreign countries, and the indications are that this gigantic spectacle, which returns to Byers opera house next Monday night for an entire week, will sweep the world.

It was feared by the producers that "The Birth of a Nation" might have a limited appeal, conditioned by a thorough understanding of the struggle between the northern and southern sections of the United States and the questions of race involved in the Reconstruction period.

But a test made in Canada proved the fears to be groundless. The spectacle was taken into eastern Canada, which is as much a foreign country as any kingdom of Europe, and which cares little about what is going on in the United States, its interests being centered in England. Western Canada is somewhat different, owing to a large percentage of the population being made up of settlers from across the border.

The eastern Canadians accepted "The Birth of a Nation" as enthusiastically as did the people of New York and Boston and Chicago, proving conclusively that its power is grounded in true drama and not in mere historical interest.

On this showing, companies are being organized for the invasion of England, Australia, South Africa, Cuba, South America and other foreign sections. Two, indeed have started in England and another in Australia. As soon as war conditions in Europe will permit, other companies will be dispatched to France, Germany, Italy and other continental countries.

Lead (Ky) Publicans 3/27

A scene in D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Na ion," at the Temple Theatre, two nights, beginning Monday, April 3. Matinee Tuesday.

3/27 9A

GREENSBURG, DECATUR COUNTY

3,000 Horses Used in Birth of a Nation

Cavalry experts figure that the life of a horse in war times is about 10 days. These high-strung animals knock under to the nervous strain of battle. When D. W. Griffith was building his big scenes for "The Birth of a Nation" he used 3,000 horses. These were used in relays and each horse was given a two days' rest between times that it was used in the mimic warfare. In this way the producer was able to save all of the fine horses and not a fatality was charged up against the production.

"The Birth of a Nation" comes to the K. of P. theatre March 30-31 April 1.

New Orleans (La)

TIMES-PICAYUNE, MONDAY, MARCH 27,

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" BEGINS ITS THIRD WEEK ENGAGEMENT

"The Birth of a Nation" begins the third week of its phenomenal run at the Tulane with the heaviest advance sale to date and every indication of a continuation of capacity business. Even the most sanguine hopes of the management have been exceeded. The big film-and-music spectacle has cast its spell over the entire southern portion of Louisiana and the knowledge that it will never be presented except in the leading theaters of principal cities is driving hundreds in from the smaller towns. Two-thirds of yesterday's audiences were excursion visitors to the city.

The splendid symphony orchestra of thirty is, of course, being held intact for the entire engagement and the mechanical and sound effects are as realistic as when the spectacle was first shown in New York more than a year ago. It is Mr. Griffith's determination to maintain a high standard of excellence in each presentation that places the offering beyond the reach of the smaller cities. Only in a large modern playhouse like the Tulane can the necessary facilities be found and the producer has repeatedly stated that it will never be presented except in theaters of that class. The remarkably clear and steady projection attained by the specially patented Griffith devices is the marvel of the motion picture world and it has never been duplicated in the showing of any other film offering. The equipment used by "The Birth of a Nation" company fills two 60-foot baggage cars and it represents an outlay equivalent to the cost of a Broadway musical production. Altogether, the services of fifty persons are employed in each presentation, from which it will be realized that it is vastly more than a moving picture.

Two performances will be given daily a week at 2 and 8:15 and seats for all formances are selling fast.

The Reds were the guests of the management of the Tulane Theater to-night to see that great work of art, "The Birth of a Nation," the privilege of observing which is denied the citizens of Ohio, though it is an education in itself.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT LYRIC THEATRE ALL OF THIS WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music will begin its engagement at the Lyric today. This is the great offering that opened a new era in the theatres of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many, many months. Despite great opposition the play has never been suppressed, but has met the approval of censor boards, judges, municipal authorities, publicists, editors and clergymen everywhere. It is pleasing to be able to note the fact that a metropolitan production of the finest quality and elaboration will be shown here.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sheridan's march to the sea, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theatre, April 14, 1865 live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this tim against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel" Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company of 50.

Altoona (Pa) Tribune 3/27

Southern "Lassie" and Her Northern Admirers in D. W. Griffith's Gigantic Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation", Lyric Theatre, All This Week.

"Birth of a Nation."

Manager Pease has succeeded in securing a return engagement to Oil City on April 14 and 15 of this wonderful moving picture which made such a favorable impression when exhibited here earlier in the season..

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theater—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's, "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade

The great deeds of the Civil war and the horrors of reconstruction are made to live again and the nation reborn is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of 50 years ago.

Oil City (Pa) Blizzard 3/27

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

HOW do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and hold on to it till you are middle aged, then marry and rear a family, releasing fame from your grasp and finding joy in a quiet, secluded country home?

Not so bad, you say, for some bookish individual who isn't attractive anyhow and hasn't a chance at the sweets of life? But utterly preposterous for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life program for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics; not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology;" not even a suffragette; but a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly in "The Birth of a Nation," running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her pursuer!

Too Busy For Love Affairs.

Yes, sir. Little Mae Marsh, the blue eyed, the golden haired, the adored, the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "up stage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no fur topped boots, no lip rouge.

If that time old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument, for at the first glance and after a minute's conversation any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great civil war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now, when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dignity that just escapes being primness and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same alternating repression and expression [illegible] on that make the girl of the [illegible] adorable and that go so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that have characterized any play on stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been, "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now give me sensible togs, lots of work and a typewriter to compose plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage, or, rather, it would have taken courage, had I been of a wavering disposition."

She is still frail looking and still slender, but graceful as a fawn and with some of that pretty creature's characteristics—the quick intelligence, quick movements, alertness, and when she is off guard, when she forgets she is being interviewed, when she is not constantly reminded by the whispers and stares of passersby that she is a heroine of the films, she is entirely natural. Apropos of that, she says it is on the screen that she is really her most natural self and that it is in conventional life she finds herself acting.

"I suppose," she says, "that sort of subconsciously I have the idea that I must show a difference in my manner, but I have done so much of the picture work and so thrown myself heart and soul into it that it is really difficult for me to separate myself from it."

"But"—with the little quizzical look that suggests laughter and tears and other things at the same time—"I suppose it's that way with every one who makes any sort of success out of what he undertakes, though my work is really nothing more than play to me, because I am so enthusiastic about it. I shall be perfectly content to be a moving picture actress all my days; that is"—hastily—"provided I can continue to live in California.

"I wrote Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working, I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty, and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

"I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully, only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake. I was at school at the Sacred Heart Convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried: 'Oh, don't! Don't, sister! I won't do it again.' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to get us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures, and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Appleple Mary in 'Home, Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and the Law,' or 'Tolerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother at the same age I am now, twenty. It is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr. Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is a most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children."

The conversation shifted to faith, finally to faith in prayer.

"When I have prayed for anything I have always gotten it"—again Mae Marsh was seriousness itself—"provided it was good."

HENRY WALTHALL
"The Mandelf of the Movies," the Hero of "The Birth of a Nation," at Proctor's All This Week, Matinee and Night

Mar 28
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE

PROCTOR'S.

W. Griffith, producer of "The of a Nation," which is being all this week at Proctor's, is est talked about and probably est sought after man in America. a said on the first night of the's presentation in New York only the son of a soldier could conceived and executed the battines in "The Birth of a Nation." Kentucky lad, tht son of Brig-General J. W. Griffith, he drank Civil War narratives greedily. grew up, came the poet's vision entire struggle and of reconlion days. In the pripe of manawoke the genius to make it a . While planning the Battle of burg, Griffith, with the aid of al guardsmen, drilled his regias faithfully as Kitchener in nd or McClellan on the Potomac. the drill he taught them the of picture evolutions and then is thousands of milliamen on a 's countryside campaign, each ron being commanded by a subor. Thus completely equipped modern Joffre or Von Kluck, saw everything. In the artilctions real cannon were used, discharged real shells. All of the 1864 pattern. When the ry got busy they used the anSpringfield muskets with the shioned bayonets. As the men s it is to be seen that their uniare far from spick and span, of them are coatless and hafthe clothing of others is tathe flags, even, have the look ttle-scarred ribbons. For the me the grime, dirt, sordidness n as the glory of war is acly presented.

Allentown (Pa) Leader 3/28

W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, Birth of a Nation," opened its ement at the Lyric yesterday. will be two performances daily 2 and 2.30 p. m.

hing like this wonderful attrac has ever been seen upon the boards. It is given here exact it is being presented in New city, where the big drama has n every record in the stage his of the first city in the country. addition the piece has piled up engagements in Chicago, Boan Francisco and Los Angeles.

Morning Star 3/28 Wilmington (Del)

"The Birth of a Nation."

Optical experts responsible for the perfect results of "The Birth of a Nation" projection at the Liberty Theatre, New York, arrived in Wilmington, N. C., yesterday and started work at the Academy of Music. The same scientific methods will be used in "The Birth of a Nation" engagement here. To the rear of the Academy of Music orchestra stalls masons have laid a concrete base, above which steel workers have built a steel framework for the picture booth, thus assuring the picture machines' perfect rigidity and steadiness. The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focusing. They have likewise selected by means of eye tests those locations in the house which will afford an optometrically perfect view of the film space table. Such seats are in the centre and rear of the ground floor and command $2 prices. Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted. Its complete success in New York shows the marvelous progress of picturized drama from the status of a toy to the eminence of an art. At the Academy of Music Wilmington for four nights beginning Wednesday March 29, with matinees Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Tickets are now selling at Plummer's.

Wilkes Barre Record 3/28

AT THE BYERS.

"The Birth of a Nation."

So strenuous is the fighting in the big battle scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to Byers opera house Monday for a week's engagement, that the spectator has difficulty, it is said, in making himself believe it is not real battles that were photographed. There is apparent no such faking as is seen in the fights of "supers" on the regular stage in Shakespearean and other plays where battles are portrayed.

As a matter of fact, there was a good deal of fighting in making "The Birth of a Nation" not so grim and terrible as that being witnessed daily on the battlefields of Europe, but as strenuous and exciting as that which characterizes a football game between two colleges, where rivalry is intense. During the several weeks of rehearsing and photographing these battles, an average of five men were carried to the field hospital daily for medical and surgical treatment. Fortunately, however, not a single death occurred.

There is no "faking" either, in the falling from their horses of several of the clansmen in their battles with the carpetbag rabble. The men impersonating the Clansmen actually tumbled from their horses at full gallop, while the cameras were turned on them. These men are "trick riders," who formerly made a dangerous living with "Wild West" shows, and who are now in great demand by the motion picture producers. Mr. Griffith corralled the best of them for "The Birth of a Nation," and it is they who furnish so many thrills in the battle scenes. Mr. Griffith also employed some "trick horses" very difficult to train for this dangerous work, which will fall, as though shot dead, instantly at command of their riders, no matter how fast they may be galloping at the moment. These horses play their daring part in the battles of the Ku-Kluxers.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT TEMPLE NEXT MONDAY TUESDAY; MATINEE TUESDAY

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance besides this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 200,000 details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theatres of the country. Seats now selling at Temple Pharmacy.—ad.

Allentown (Pa) Morning Item 3/28

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS WEEK STAY AT THE LYRIC

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama. By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of reconstruction are made to live agai nand the nation reborn is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago.

Mar 28
ALLENTOWN CHRONICLE AND NEWS.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT THE LYRIC

Art is long, says the poet, and outlasts throne or emperor. Occasionally, however, old art ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the sceptre and remakes the world. This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which was seen at the Lyric yesterday and which remains at the Lyric all this week.

Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: A new kind of grand opera—"motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

The director put on "The Birth of a Nation" as no other filmed play—not even "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis"—had been put on. (He used half a great state for his locale; 150 years of American history as his subject; 18,000 people as his actors; 3000 riders and steeds as his cavalry; 5000 scenes instead of a few score or a few hundred. His work dwarfed the old-fashioned stage art to such pettiness that many are wondering whether the so-called "indoor" drama is not doomed to long and possibly total eclipse.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotisb culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of Civil War and reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill.

10

Baltimore American.
AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1916.

Birth of Nation—Ford's

D. W. Griffith's photo-spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, began its fourth week yesterday at Ford's Grand Opera House. Since this remarkable picture has been shown in Baltimore it has been viewed by many thousand persons. Only once in a lifetime is such a magnificent production produced and those who have viewed it are willing to see it time and time again. There is a fascination about The Birth of a Nation that is irresistible. It charms, interests and holds the audience spellbound.

It is claimed that the play cost $500,000 to produce and that 18,000 persons took part in its construction. One of the charms of the production is the music, which is inspiring. The play has been splendidly cast with such eminent artists as Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden and a host of others.

The battle of Petersburg, the assassination of President Lincoln and the awe-inspiring rides of the Ku Klux Klan, are but a few of the many tremendous incidents brought upon the screen, and the skill of the master hand that intermingled the tragic with elements of romance comedy, is sure to command the highest respect and admiration.

Incidental to the showing of the picture is a musical score which is a marvel in synchronization, for each melody is illustrative of the shifting scene and the whole field of musical composition has been searched with the soul of a true artist. This score, played by a symphony orchestra of 30, accentuates the dramatic effects so skilfully contrived by Producer Griffith.

Allentown (Pa) Record 3/28

THE BIRTH OF A NATION OPENS WEEK STAY AT THE LYRIC

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama. By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of reconstruction are made to live agai nand the nation reborn is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago.

Tulane Theater.

More than five hundred students from the girls' high schools and several grammar schools attended the matinee performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tulane Monday. They were in charge of their teachers, and if their enjoyment of the spectacle might be measured by the noise they made, they had the time of their lives. Each appearance of Lincoln, Lee, Grant and other notables of the war and reconstruction periods was greeted with loud applause, and during the second half, when the white-robed Ku Klux dashed across the screen on missions of life and death the din was almost continuous.

The theater management has received numerous requests from teachers that special arrangements be made for handling their students at the matinees, and this has been done as far as possible at the afternoon performances early in the week. Monday the groups chaperoned by their respective teachers were admitted to the gallery for first choice of seats, and others will be handled in this way at the Tuesday matinee. But it will be impossible to extend this privilege at the matinees later in the week owing to the heavy attendance of regular gallery patrons, and the consequent danger of crowding out persons who have stood at the entrance an hour or more.

allentown Call 3/25

NEW DRAMATIC ART IN BIRTH OF A NATION AT LYRIC THIS WEEK

The new theatrical art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," which opened at the Lyric yesterday, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such production. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Frietchie", seem tame after seeing the splendors of "The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Romeric grandeur. The night riding of the Ku Klux Klan looks like a company of avenging spectres sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

This realistic picture of history in the making is of untold value to both old and young. Besides the historical worth of this great spectacle the constant emotional throb of the romantic story thrills the hearts of all. It is the supreme achievement of modern histrionism in its new guise untrammelled by the limitations of the theatre.

Schenectady Gazette 3/22/16

Scene showing the assembling of the Ku Klux Klan in the noted spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor's, all next week, starting tomorrow, Sunday.

One view of the Famous Emancipator as tured in "The Birth of a Nation" at Proctor next week, starting tomorrow.

CONNERSVILLE, INDIANA

FILM SPECTACLE IS ONE OF REAL WORTH

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SHOWN AT THE AUDITORIUM

DEPICTS THE EARLY SOUTH

Drama Was One of Great Educational Value—Connersville Was Very Enthusiastic—Excellent Music

No more interesting spectacle was ever witnessed by a Connersville audience than D. W. Griffith's master-piece "The Birth of a Nation," presented at the Auditorium Theatre last evening. The audience was large, appreciative and at all times enthusiastic. This film production which has been nationally acknowledged as the greatest of all great dramatic efforts was fully as entertaining as the advertising literature claimed. An orchestra of thirty-five pieces gave soul stirring music from the opening scene till the finish. Nine reels of film constitute this drama, with a division of acts, allowing but a short intermission.

The detail work was perfect. It was evident that every care had been exercised by the producer. The characters are portrayed by capable actors, and suitable locations were selected for the production of this historical play. War, our great civil war, and the horrible circumstances following this conflict were shown. The audience, at times, almost believed it was on the battle fields where the battles were fought and won to obtain the freedom of the negro.

Following the assassination of President Lincoln, the unscrupulous politicians and their carpet-bagger representatives are introduced into the play. Incident after incident of thrilling interest follow and for more than an hour the audience is held in suspense regarding the outcome of the final chapter. The Auditorium was rocked with cheers. The enthusiasm was not given by the usual film devotees, but it was demonstrated by men and women who seldom witness a photo-play. "The Birth of a Nation," is a production that is considered of educational and historical value. It is a drama that everyone should see and especially it has been recommended that every colored man, woman and child see this production dealing with the ruin and the redemption of the negro race.

Baltimore Star

MARCH 28, 1916

FORD'S

D. W. Griffith's photo-spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, began its fourth week yesterday at Ford's Grand Opera House. Since this remarkable picture has been shown in Baltimore it has been viewed by many thousand persons. Only once in a lifetime is such a magnificent production produced and those who have viewed it are willing to see it time and time again. There is a fascination about The Birth of a Nation that is irresistible. It charms, interests and holds the audience spellbound.

It is claimed that the play cost $500,000 to produce and that 18,000 persons took part in its construction. One of the charms of the production is the music, which is inspiring. The play has been splendidly cast with such eminent artists as Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden and a host of others.

The battle of Petersburg, the assassination of President Lincoln and the awe-inspiring rides of the Ku-Klux Klan, are but a few of the many tremendous incidents brought upon the screen, and the skill of the master hand that intermingled the tragic with elements of romance comedy, is sure to command the highest respect and admiration.

Incidental to the showing of the picture is a musical score which is a marvel in synchronization, for each melody is illustrative of the shifting scene and the whole field of musical composition has been searched with the soul of a true artist. This score, played by a symphony orchestra of 30, accentuates the dramatic effects so skilfully contrived by Producer Griffith.

10

THE BALTIMORE NEWS
PUBLISHED EVERY AFTERNOON, INCLUDING SUNDAY.
TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1916.

SEE PICTURE AGAIN

Many View "Birth Of A Nation" Second Time.

Interest In War Drama Seems To Grow—Picture In Ford's Lobby Also Attracts.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's very remarkable photoplay founded on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," is the attraction at Ford's again this week. In the audience last night were many persons viewing the pictures for the second time, and they were among the most enthusiastic in their praise of the production.

The producer of this thrilling photoplay has left but little to the imagination in his presentation of the horrors of the Reconstruction period in the South after the Civil War. The large majority of the audience last night were sympathizers of the Confederacy and made no attempt to conceal their emotions.

The very pretty romance that is staged in the arena of warfare has the effect to relieve at many turns the awesome scenes of bloodshed and carnage, and the actors who played this part of the production proved themselves real artists. The little touches of comedy that run through the pictures serve well to relieve the tension.

Second in interest only to the production itself is the historic picture of George Washington that stands in the lobby of the theater, the property of Mrs. John T. Ford, the widow of the founder of the theater in which President Lincoln was shot in Washington in 1865. This picture was hanging in front of the royal box the night of the tragedy, and it was on its frame that Booth tripped as he sprang to the stage after firing the fatal shot. Hundreds gathered about the picture as they went into the theater and examined the break in the frame caused by contact with the assassin's spur.

THE SUN

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK-DAY
Increase..... 9,321
BALTIMORE, TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1916.
SIXTEEN PAGES.

MADE OLD SOLDIER WEEP

"Birth Of A Nation," At Ford's, Gave Him Southern Viewpoint.

FILM STILL DRAWS CROWDS

Drama Seems To Be Clearing Away Misunderstandings In Northern Minds Of Southern Life.

"The Birth of a Nation," that remarkable and spectacular photoplay by D. W. Griffith, is still the centre of interest at Ford's and the subject of comment among theatre patrons.

A Northern man of high culture, who was a Federal soldier during the Civil War and served under General McClellan at the battle of Antietam, recently witnessed the play and said: "I was moved almost to tears by this very exceptional war play and I now understand, as I never understood before, the viewpoint of the Southern people and the principles they were defending in the war, and in the reconstruction period immediately following it. The impersonations of prominent men of war times are exceptionally fine and the character represented as the Hon. Austin Stoneman in the photo-drama is intended, in its political aspect, to represent Thaddeus Stevens, and looks exactly like that statesman."

It appears to be the mission of "The Birth of a Nation" to clear away many mists of misunderstanding in the Northern mind as to many conditions of Southern life and politics of which the country as a whole was not well informed. Certainly, the drama is a very moving one, no matter upon which side of the conflict the sympathy of the spectator is inclined. It has historical value, since facts, not fiction are its basis. It mirrors a political period that was the most critical crisis of the United States, since the country as a house was then divided against itself in convictions of duty. It also shows Southern home life under conditions that will never exist again. It is a strong argument for preparedness, since it pictures the tragedies of war and illustrates the necessity of the Government having sufficient armed power to enforce, without protracted warfare, the policies agreed upon by those chosen to executive office into whose hands the welfare of the nation is committed and to whom allegiance is due by the nation as a whole.

Gettysburg (Pa) Eve. News

Wonderful Photoplays Have Over Spoken

By Famous Photoplay Director

(By D. W. Griffith.)

While there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the [illegible] the $2 motion picture it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theatre, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theatre world said it would not succeed. You see they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cents proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture as undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But given the theme the understanding and the ability to project his ideals the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can only show certain scenes in the limits of three walls and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects which are after all only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Everyone of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privilege of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theatre. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living breathing thing you are a part of for a single evening. Long years afterwards in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and plyaer. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI" can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd. These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning. It was the art int[illegible] [illegible]. The player an[illegible] [illegible] great figure in [illegible] moving picture [illegible] poetic simulation, th[illegible] which arrests atte[illegible] memories that are [illegible] power. The brain bei[illegible] [illegible]ver revealed. It lens[illegible] [illegible] concealment which is on[illegible] [illegible]est attributes of true a[illegible]t. [illegible] thing is subjective. The[illegible] [illegible]ary with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and if artistically one will live. The more presentati[illegible] [illegible] be ephemeral but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a [illegible]r[illegible]e field in which to operate. On the stage these so-called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film pla[illegible] we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that ten thousand people were part of this conflict we engage ten thousand people, rehearse them in minute detail and when we are ready we show you that scene, as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily with eight or ten performances a week and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries runs up to $2,500 a week so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we [illegible] [illegible] the side [illegible] blooming in [illegible] mountain i[illegible] [illegible] ground. In our drama the tree [illegible] wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dew drops, are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best off the legitimate stage but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to 5 cents audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture and we crowd the theatres everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the super-producer from spending three time that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

Battle scene in "The Birth Of A Nation," Academy of Music, Orangeburg, three nights Beginning Monday, April third, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

"Birth Of Nation" Raises Questions

What Might Have Happened Had Lincoln Lived To Carry Out His Plans For Reconstruction.

Contrasts Clearly Drawn and Accentuate Pictures Conveyed. President's Kindliness Of Heart Shown.

Underneath the story told simply, yet so thoroughly and effectively, by "The Birth of a Nation," which last night began its fourth week at Ford's Opera House, is the question: What might have happened if Abraham Lincoln had lived to see his plan for the reconstruction of the South accomplished? Altogether aside from its richness in depiction of historical events that followed the turning point of the Civil War, the great photoplay is invaluable in that it turns the mind to an analysis of the situation during those turbulent times and suggests the means that the martyred President had in mind for effectively healing the breach.

The tragedies of the South, crushed under the heel of a ruthless statesman, who saw the establishment of the black race on an equal plane with the white man as a step to national power, are shown as it would be impossible to describe them in history. Its noble efforts, its self-sacrifices, its fearless men are symbolized in the series of events flashed on the screen with a vividness that is almost beyond verbal expression.

Full Of Appealing Points.

The play is so full of appealing points that different people will come away with different scenes uppermost in their minds. Is it the naive light-heartedness and determined fortitude of Flora Cameron or the spirited courage of the Ku Klux Klan that is more impressive? Is it the feeling of repulsion against the leering blacks or the pretty denouement of the intertwined romance that sticks after the curtain is drawn? Or does the heroism of Col. Ben Cameron as he leads his Confederate infantrymen up to the Union breastworks, or the willingness of the Union veterans, trapped in the log cabin, to sacrifice their own children rather than leave them to suffer humiliation or degradation at the hands of the besieging negroes, remain uppermost? Whatever it may be, the play is rich as a thought stimulant.

Contrasts are clearly drawn and accentuate the pictures intended to be conveyed.

From a scene of peace and plenty, of wealth, comfort and gayety, the South is plunged into war, gradually being stripped of its riches until nothing is left but the shell. The tragedy of war is painted skillfully in a dozen different scenes, in as many different aspects. Exploits of valor on fields of battle, for a slowly losing cause, are contrasted with patient self-sacrifice of women in the homes. Gradually the story is carried to the end of the war, the surrender of General Lee, the death of President Lincoln and the temporary ascendency of the negro.

Where South Can Begin Again.

Then comes the scourge of the period following the war, the reign of terror that enveloped the South until the clansmen, with their wonderful secret organization, swept the interlopers out of power and carried the South back to a point where it could begin again. The feeling inspired by the pictures is such as is not often obtained from dramas on the legitimate stage. The adaptability of the motion picture to a big production was never more thoroughly demonstrated.

"I could just throw my arms around him," one woman was heard to remark of President Lincoln when he had lifted a death sentence that hung over Colonel Cameron—symbolic of the many benefactions attributed to him. And there are other incidents that touched one just as much.

By the dominance through the play of individual characters the trend of events is kept more clearly before the onlookers. It is unusual in that the thread of romance is clean cut through the play, in spite of the momentous events of national importance that might easily overshadow the intensely human side.

News
3/28

Greensburg, Ind.,

THE Most Talked Of

picture in the world, "The Birth of a Nation." Judging from the large advance sale of tickets this morning almost everybody is going to see the Birth of a Nation. Seats are on sale today for Thursday and Friday, matinee and night, and for Saturday the sale will open Monday.

To secure good seats you must buy early, and remember your seats will be held until Thursday evening, and Friday evening, if not taken then will be resold. If you go once, you will want to go again to see this wonderful spectacle.

Evening Herald

, March 28, 1916.

SOME "INSIDE DOPE" ON KU KLUX SCENE IN BIG SPECTACLE

"The falling of several of the Clansmen from their horses in the battles in which the Ku Kluxers engage with the carpetbag rabble in 'The Birth of a Nation,' being presented twice daily at the Texas Grand, is not 'faked,' as many of the over-wise spectators, who have read of the marvelous manipulations of motion picture camera men are apt to think," said E. F. Maxwell, manager of the theater. "The men impersonating the clansmen actually fell from their horses at full gallop while the camera was turned on them. These men are 'trick riders' who formerly made a dangerous living with the 'wild west' shows, but who are now in great demand by the motion picture producers. David W. Griffith, producer of 'The Birth of a Nation,' corraled the best of them and it is they who furnish so many thrills in the battle scenes. Griffith has also some 'trick horses,' very difficult to train for this dangerous work, which will fall as though shot dead, at command of the rider. These horses also play their daring part in the battles of the Ku Kluxers."

3/28 12

THE BRADFORD ERA

THE BRADFORD THEATRE

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation."

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, New York, July 3; Nixon theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly.

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided into two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

"The Birth of a Nation" will play a return engagement at the Bradford theatre April 5 and 6. Matinee daily.

3/28 12

THE GREENSBURG NEWS

THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT THE PYTHIAN THEATRE

D. W. Griffith was eight months making his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has created such a furore in all sections of the country and which comes to the K. of P. Theatre for engagements on March 30, 31 and April 1st. Griffith took all his photographic and player forces to five different states to get the proper color. Some scenes were taken in Virginia and others in the Carolinas. The bulk of the picture was made in California. One big scene had to be taken in Mexico.

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film, but impossible for the "indoor drama" is illustarted by the Ford's theatre scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's theatre in April, 1865, but also the auditorium of the theatre, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman whose head has fallen back in the stage box and at the assassin Booth who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical realism has never been achieved before. It is part of what is mean by the so-called "new art" for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous achievements of the film drama.

...CTS FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" ...W PLAYING AT LYRIC

...premier performance March 3, 1915, ... the Liberty Theatre, New York. ...me of the subsequent productions ...re: Tremont Theatre, Boston, ...ss., beginning April 10; Illinois ...eatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; ...ighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., ...y 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, ...J., July 18. All these were long ...s of many months, the five separ... companies aggregating a total at...dance of 50,000 patrons weekly. ...ver before has a play run half a ...r simultaneously in so many cities, ...luding also seventeen weeks in Los ...geles and eighteen weeks in San ...ncisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the ...emost of directors and pioneer of ... new art. Suggested by Thomas ...xon's novel, "The Clansman." The play contains 5,000 scenes; pre...ts 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; ...t $500,000 for actual production ex...nse, and took eight months to pro...ce. Story divided in two acts. To... time of performance, 2 hours and ... minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the ...vil War re-enacted. A reproduction ... Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up ... be destroyed by fire, in the picture ... Sherman's march to the sea. Lee ...d Grant shown at Appomattox; ...rd's theatre, Washington, reproduc... to the smallest details for the Lin...n tragedy. Reconstruction picto...ized in the actual South Carolina ...nes, climaxing with a series of wild ... Klux Klan rides that commandeer... a county for a day and cost $10,000.

3/29

...ENECTADY GAZETTE.

PROCTOR'S.

...realistic reproduction of the ...ination of President Lincoln by ... Griffith in his pictorial master... "The Birth of a Nation," which ...eek, with two performances ... recalls the fact that the play ... prominently identified with the ... of this country was the place ...h the great emancipator was ... on the night of the tragedy. ...merican Cousin," and this was ...y that later in the century ...he title of "Lord Dundreary" ... notably connected with the ... of that celebrated actor, the ...other. On the night of the ...nation Miss Keene who, by the ...as the first actress in this ... to manage her own company, ...aking the final appearance of ...-season stock engagement in ...gton. John Wilkes Booth, tha... though a member of Miss ... organization, was not in the ...f "Our American Cousin," ...oubtless made possible the op...ty for his act.

...is dead, shot in a barn, so ... says, by one of the soldiers ...ursued him, and so, with the ...on of W. J. Ferguson, is every ...member of Miss Keene's com... Mr. Ferguson, one of the best ... of our old-time actors, was ... vaudeville stage last season. ...ow in Los Angeles connected ...e studio of D. W. Griffith, the ...r of "The Birth of a Nation." ...ath three years ago of John ...rs, the Mr. Coyle, attorney, ... American Cousin," left Mr. ...n the sole survivor of the ...al organization which was so ... and tragically thrust upon ...ation of the American nation. ... who remember Ford's Theater ... have complimented Mr. Grif... his fidelity of reproduction. As ...d during the unfolding of the ... drama, the shooting of Lin... incident in the theater pre... his act, and the tumult which ... it, are pictured so true that ...ritnesses of the tragedy have ...d at th convincing reality ... entire season. Even Booth's ...n the pasidential box to the ...ring the course of which he ...is foot in the bunting that ...d the bo, thereby falling and ... his aule, is shown with ...e to historic detail that one ... with hisory doubts they are ...ing a pcture of the actual ... questior

al Enterprise 3/29
Chronicle & News

BIRTH OF A NATION HAS OPENING TO-DAY

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Lyric to-day exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination fested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and within this frame work they make these wonderful characters live again.

They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across bloodstained plains. The human note weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded.

3/29

TROY TIMES, TROY, N. Y

—"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's famous historical spectacle, will come to Proctor's New Theatre for a return engagement of one week commencing Sunday evening, April 2. Matinees will be given daily. The same production, including the symphony orchestra of thirty, that 20,000 people saw here in January will come here again. No theatrical presentation in a decade has created wider discussion. Music supplies the absence of speech for the 12,000 feet of film that depicts the thrilling romance of the Civil War and the reconstruction period of the Southland.

Assassanation of Abraham Lincoln, big Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Sumter, 3 Nights, beginning Thursday, April 6th Matinees Friday and Saturday.

Mar 29

ALLENTOWN CHRONICLE AND NEWS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LYRIC

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the re-union of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

SUMTER DAILY ... MARCH ...

"The Birth of a ..."

The magnitude of David ...fith's feat in stating "The ... Nation," is almost ... to the devotees of the ... theatrical entertainment. ... are the little groups of actors ... pinchbeck scenery and the petty ... erties of the so-called "legiti... drama? By comparison with the ... art, the "legitimate" measures to ... mountain like a molehill. Instead ... scenery for his background Grif... has used nature. For subject he ... covered 150 years of American ... tory. Eighteen thousand people ... done his bidding and in the hair-... ing rides of the Ku Klux Klan ... thousand riders and horses ... over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnif... historical spectacle is the talk of ... country. It has established an en... ly new art in the realm of the th... tre—the art of pantomimic ... spectacle with an orchestral ... perfectly synchronized to the act... it has also created a tremen... sensation because of its vaster ... more forceful treatment of the th... of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansm..." which both as book and play cr... the greatest furore of the last dec...

The great deeds of the civil ... and the horrors of reconstruction ... made to live again and the nation ... born is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, ... neer among directors, managed ... stupendous achievement without ... aid of dialogue or speech, for mo... pictures with music and effects ... vividly this thrilling tale of fifty ye... ago. At the Academy of Music, S... ter, for three nights, begin... Thursday, April 6th, with a mat... Friday and Saturday.—Advt.

3/29

OIL CITY BLIZZARD

Birth of a Nation.

For the offering at the opera house on April 14 and 15 Manager Pease has secured a return engagement of that wonderful moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which scored such a hit with the citizens of Oil City and vicinity two months ago.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation" has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 1,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 20,000 details the result of eight months of labor alone and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at Ferguson's Opera House, the principal theater of this country.

Big Battle Scene in "The Birth Of A Nation," Academy of Music, Orangeb... ...

News
3/28

Greensburg, Ind.,

THE Most Talked Of

picture in the world, "The Birth of a Nation." Judging from the large advance sale of tickets this morning almost everybody is going to see the Birth of a Nation. Seats are on sale today for Thursday and Friday, matinee and night, and for Saturday the sale will open Monday.

To secure good seats you must buy early, and remember your seats will be held until Thursday evening, and Friday evening, if not taken then will be resold. If you go once, you will want to go again to see this wonderful spectacle.

3/28 12

THE BRADFORD ERA

THE BRADFORD THEATRE

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation."

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, New York, July 3; Nixon theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly.

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided into two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

"The Birth of a Nation" will play a return engagement at the Bradford theatre April 5 and 6. Matinee daily.

Elkhart Pub. Herald

, March 28, 1916.

SOME "INSIDE DOPE" ON KU KLUX SCENE IN BIG SPECTACLE

"The falling of several of the Clansmen from their horses in the battles in which the Ku Kluxers engage with the carpetbag rabble in 'The Birth of a Nation,' being presented twice daily at the Texas Grand, is not 'faked,' as many of the over-wise spectators, who have read of the marvelous manipulations of motion picture camera men are apt to think," said E. F. Maxwell, manager of the theater. "The men impersonating the clansmen actually fell from their horses at full gallop while the camera was turned on them. These men are 'trick riders' who formerly made a dangerous living with the 'wild west' shows, but who are now in great demand by the motion picture producers. David W. Griffith, producer of 'The Birth of a Nation,' corraled the best of them and it is they who furnish so many thrills in the battle scenes. Griffith has also some 'trick horses,' very difficult to train for this dangerous work, which will fall as though shot dead, at command of the rider. These horses also play their daring part in the battles of the Ku Kluxers."

3/28 2d

THE GREENSBURG NEWS

THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT THE PYTHIAN THEATRE

D. W. Griffith was eight months making his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has created such a furore in all sections of the country and which comes to the K. of P. Theatre for engagements on March 30, 31 and April 1st. Griffith took all his photographic and player forces to five different states to get the proper color. Some scenes were taken in Virginia and others in the Carolinas. The bulk of the picture was made in California. One big scene had to be taken in Mexico.

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film, but impossible for the "indoor drama" is illustarted by the Ford's theatre scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's theatre in April, 1865, but also the auditorium of the theatre, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman whose head has fallen back in the stage box and at the assassin Booth who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical realism has never been achieved before. It is part of what is mean by the so-called "new art" for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet the spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous achievements of the film drama.

CTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" W PLAYING AT LYRIC

Premier performance March 3, 1915, the Liberty Theatre, New York. e of the subsequent productions re: Tremont Theatre, Boston, s., beginning April 10; Illinois atre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; ghton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., y 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, J., July 18. All these were long s of many months, the five separ- companies aggregating a total at- dance of 50,000 patrons weekly. ver before has a play run half a r simultaneously in so many cities, luding also seventeen weeks in Los geles and eighteen weeks in San ncisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the emost of directors and pioneer of new art. Suggested by Thomas on's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 3,000 scenes; pre- nts 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; st $500,000 for actual production ex- nse, and took eight months to pro- ce. Story divided in two acts. To- time of performance, 2 hours and minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the il War re-enacted. A reproduction Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up be destroyed by fire, in the picture Sherman's march to the sea. Lee d Grant shown at Appomattox; rd's theatre, Washington, reproduc- to the smallest details for the Lin- n tragedy. Reconstruction picture- ized in the actual South Carolina enes, climaxing with a series of wild Klux Klan rides that commandeer- a county for a day and cost $10,000.

3/29

ENECTADY GAZETTE,

PROCTOR'S.

realistic reproduction of theination of President Lincoln by Griffith in his pictorial master- "The Birth of a Nation," which reek, with two performances recalls the fact that the play prominently identified with the of this country was the place th the great emancipator was on the night of the tragedy. merican Cousin," and this was y that later in the century the title of "Lord Dundreary" notably connected with the of that celebrated actor, the othern. On the night of the nation Miss Keene who, by the as the first actress in this to manage her own company, aking the final appearance of -season stock engagement in gton. John Wilkes Booth, the though a member of Miss organization, was not in the f "Our American Cousin," oubtless made possible the op- ty for his act.

is dead, shot in a barn, so says, by one of the soldiers ursued him, and so, with the on of W. J. Ferguson, is every member of Miss Keene's com- Mr. Ferguson, one of the best of our old-time actors, was vaudeville stage last season. ow in Los Angeles connected e studio of D. W. Griffith, the r of "The Birth of a Nation." ath three years ago of John s, the Mr. Coyle, attorney, American Cousin," left Mr. n the sole survivor of the al organization which was so and tragically thrust upon ation of the American nation. who remember Ford's Theater have complimented Mr. Grif- is fidelity of reproduction. As d during the unfolding of the drama, the shooting of Lin- incidens in the theater pre- his act, and the tumult whch it, are pictured so true that itnessesof the tragedy have d at th convincing reality ntire sason. Even Booth's n the pasidential box to the ring the course of which he his foot in the bunting that d the bo, thereby falling and his axle, is shown with e to historic detail that one with hisory doubts they are ing a pture of the actual questior allentown Chronicle & News 3/29

BIRTH OF A NATION HAS OPENING TO-DAY

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Lyric to-day exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and within this frame work they make these wonderful characters live again.

They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across bloodstained plains. The human note weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded.

3/29

TROY TIMES, TROY, N. Y

—The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's famous historical spectacle, will come to Proctor's New Theatre for a return engagement of one week commencing Sunday evening, April 2. Matinees will be given daily. The same production, including the symphony orchestra of thirty, that 20,000 people saw here in January will come here again. No theatrical presentation in a decade has created wider discussion. Music supplies the absence of speech for the 12,000 feet of film that depicts the thrilling romance of the Civil War and the reconstruction period of the Southland.

Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, big Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Sumter, 3 Nights, beginning Thursday, April 6th Matinees Friday and Saturday.

Mar 29

ALLENTOWN CHRONICLE AND NEWS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LYRIC

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the re-union of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

SUMTER DAILY ... MARCH

"The Birth of a Na...

The magnitude of David ...fith's feat in stating "The ... Nation," is almost appalling ... to the devotees of the old ... theatrical entertainment. What ... are the little groups of actors ... pinchbeck scenery and the petty pro- erties of the so-called "legitima... drama? By comparison with the ... art, the "legitimate" measures to ... mountain like a molehill. Instead ... scenery for his background Griff... has used nature. For subject he ... covered 150 years of American ... tory. Eighteen thousand people ... done his bidding and in the hair-r... ing rides of the Ku Klux Klan the ... thousand riders and horses swe... over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnifice... historical spectacle is the talk of ... country. It has established an entir... ly new art in the realm of the the... tre—the art of pantomimic scre... spectacle with an orchestral sco... perfectly synchronized to the actio... it has also created a tremendo... sensation because of its vaster a... more forceful treatment of the the... of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansma... which both as book and play creat... the greatest furore of the last deca...

The great deeds of the civil ... and the horrors of recontsruction ... made to live again and the nation ... born is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, p... neer among directors, managed t... stupendous achievement without ... aid of dialogue or speech, for moti... pictures with music and effects ... vividly this thrilling tale of fifty ye... ago. At the Academy of Music, Su... ter, for three nights, begin... Thursday, April 6th, with a matin... Friday and Saturday.—Advt.

3/29

OIL CITY BLIZZARD

Birth of a Nation.

For the offering at the opera house on April 14 and 15 Manager Pease has secured a return engagement of that wonderful moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which scored such a hit with the citizens of Oil City and vicinity two months ago.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation" has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 200,000 details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theaters of the country.

Orangeb... Col. Leader 3/29

Big Battle Scene in "The Birth Of A Nation," Academy of Music, Orangeb... urg, 3 nights, begin...

Albany (N.Y.) Knickerbocker Press 3/29

KNICKERBOCKER PRESS.

STATE CENSORSHIP OF FILMS FAVORED

Legislators Believe Bills Have Good Chance to Become Laws This Year.

TWO MEASURES IN HOUSE

Wheeler Act Puts Work Under Direction of State Board of Regents.

That there will be some sort of legislation providing for state censorship of motion pictures, if not this session, at least within a year or two, many legislators feel certain. Assemblyman Heber E. Wheeler of Holcomb, Ontario county, yesterday amended his censorship bill, which was on the order of second reading, and later declared his belief that there will be a considerable following for the measure when it comes up again for [illegible] tomorrow.

The Wheeler bill would provide for censorship under the direction of the state board of regents. The regents would appoint a board of three members, and the censored pictures would bear the words "Approved by the Regents of the University of the State of New York." The amendments offered by Mr. Wheeler yesterday were mainly technical and of a nature intended to make the measure complete in every way.

The legislature already has before it a bill introduced by Chairman Fred M. Ahern of the codes committee, and the arguments of the backers of the Wheeler measure against the Ahern bill is that the latter is incomplete in many ways and would not result in as satisfactory a practical application as the Wheeler bill.

Many of the legislators feel that one or the other of the censorship bills has a good chance of passing this year, although others are not so sanguine. It is understood that Speaker Sweet is in favor of a censorship measure. Majority Leader Simon L. Adler of Rochester, however, so far has been rather inclined against such a bill, it is understood.

One of the arguments put forward for the Wheeler bill in preference to the Ahern measure is that the former does not create a new state department, while the latter does. Under the Ahern bill the state board of censors would be an entirely separate and distinct branch of the government, like the athletic commission, while under the Wheeler bill, it would be a part of the department of education. In each bill the number of commissioners is the same—three, but the salary in the Ahern bill is $5,000 compared with $4,000 in the Wheeler bill, for each commissioner.

No Exemption Allowed.

Under the Wheeler bill there would be no exemptions to the films to come under the state board of censors. All to be exhibited in the state must be censored. In the Ahern bill, films need not be censored which are now in use or manufactured before the bill takes effect, or films censored by federal court before the bill takes effect. In the Wheeler bill a review by the board of regents is provided in case of dissatisfaction with the ruling of the censors. Court review is provided in the Ahern bill.

One of the chief features to which supporters of the Wheeler bill point in support of their contention that this measure is more complete and carefully drawn than the Ahern bill, is the provision for payment of examination fees by the film producers. In the Ahern bill the fee is $2.50 for each "reel" without any specification as to length and no provision for duplicate reels. In the Wheeler bill the fee is five dollars for each 500 feet of film examined, with a fee of $2.50 for each duplicate 500 feet used. Another smaller feature is pointed out in that the Ahern bill simply provides for the stamping of each examined reel with the words "Approved by the New York state board of censors." The Wheeler bill, it is pointed out, goes carefully into this, as in all other details, and specifies that the stamp of approval must be exhibited for at least six seconds on the end of each film approved, and serial numbers must appear at the beginning and end of each such reel. The serial numbers provide a means of rapid identification in case of complaints or other reference to specific films being exhibited.

Board Interested.

Mr. Wheeler said yesterday that he has been assured the board of regents is willing to assume the new responsibility if the legislature wishes to give it to the board. He declared that this is the logical place for vesting the power of censorship of motion pictures. [illegible] become a very great educational force for good or evil, as the case may be, and the stamp of approval by the board of regents should be welcomed by all honest manufacturers.

"In the town where I live," he said, "we have a motion picture exhibition every Saturday night. At present, however, many parents who are careful where their children go will not permit them to attend the performances. If pictures came there with the stamp of approval of the state board of regents, there would be swarms of children and others every week to see them."

Wilmington (Del.) Star 3/29

Seven.

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinch back scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama. By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its master and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation re-born is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of 50 years ago.

At the Academy of Music, Wilmington for four nights, beginning tonight, with matinees tomorrow, Friday and Saturday. Seats are selling at Plummer's.

Henry Walthall, as the "Little Colonel, in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Wilmington, Tonight.

Pa 3/29

ALLENTOWN DEMOCRAT

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NOW PLAYING AT LYRIC

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 19; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Orangeburg (S.C.) Times 3/29

"The Birth Of A Nation" Great Photoplay Academy Next Week

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Academy of Music Orangeburg for three nights beginning Monday, April 31, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorial action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861—'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Amng the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton, and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Detroit Times 3/29

Tre present attraction at the Lyric Theatre, D. W. Griffith's wonderful production, "The Birth of a Nation," is repeating its great success scored some months ago. This mighty spectacle has turned the theatre records of America topsy turvy. It hold the long-distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour, whicr is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history, showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not so much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression with an operatic accompaniment in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothing like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished again until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

E BIRTH OF A NATION

Greensburg certainly should be ngratulated on being able to secure is wonderful musical spectacle. No her city in this section of the state ll have it. It's so wonderful that ery man, woman and child who s seen it cannot say enough in aise of it. The music alone is a eat and with the combination of at and the picture it holds you ell bound for three hours and you ng to see more.

It seems to you almost impossible r a human to picture such a spec- cle in his mind much less be able portray it to you on canvass, in e-like action, with thousands of ople, horses, whole towns being urned before you so as to vividly ring these scenes before you and to ake them as realistic as possible. Words can hardly describe to you is marvelous production. If you ave not already reserved your seats, ou owe it to yourself to see it ther on Thursday night, Friday ight Saturday night, Friday mati- ee or Saturday matinee.

Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation" at the K. of P. opera house for a three-day engagement, starting Thursday evening, March 30, with matinee Friday and Saturday at 2 o'clock.

"The Birth of a Nation"

tual battles are shown with tens housands of soldiers in the con-

Eighteen thousand people par- ate in telling the story. Cities uilt only to be destroyed by fire. hundred costumers and seam- ses worked for three months to the costumes. One thousand s of cloth were used making the mes for the women, while 2,500 were used in making the Ku costumes. And, yet, with all a simple, human story of love romance weaves through the vast d of action and grips the hearts e audience. The symphony or- ra accompanies the acting and a potent force to the drama. y one should see this spectacular re, and if you have not already so secure your seats. It's the test event in the history of the P. theatre. It's for only Thurs- Friday and Saturday, with a mat- Friday and Saturday. You can y comprehend the magnitude of wonderful picture. Don't miss it.

S SURRENDER WRITTEN WITH FEATHER QUILL

en General Robert E. Lee, at Ap- ttox, wished to make some mar- notes on the papers of the final nder, he asked the bystanders pencil. Strange to say, not one numerous officers and sides-de- was able to offer him one. At an officer of Lee's staff extracted cket instand and feather quill his kit, and with the aid of these istoric document was written and ames of Grant and Lee affixed bottom.

e above bit of history was dug y David W. Griffith during his g of "Lee's Surrender to Grant ppomattox," one of his striking ical fac-simile scenes in Grif- motion picture, "The Birth of a n," coming to the K. of P. thea- Thursday, Friday and Saturday. al Grant is correctly represent- his fatigue uniform, dusty and l-stained, whilst General Lee is n in the complete panoply of mil- dress. "My aim," said Mr. Grif- in speaking of such scenes re- y, "has been to introduce as lit- ting as possible. I have tried to curate in every detail and keep from theatricalism."

Greensburg Review 3/-1

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the K. of P. opera house Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 30, 31 and April 1, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patent's office hospital.

"I haven't known you long" [illegible] the little Confederate [illegible] Ben Cameron," but I ha[illegible] [illegible]ed you about with me fo[illegible] and years." He displays [illegible] faded daguerreotype of [illegible], a picture she had give[illegible] brother and which had fall- [illegible] Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as [illegible] Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "[illegible]eole" blonde type which [illegible] or photographic beaut[illegible] is singplarly graceful, a[illegible] features never lose their [illegible] in in or outdoor scenes T[illegible] before the camera are most [illegible]ssive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm —at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation" does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the civil war and reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

PERU DAILY CHRONICLE

Peru, Indiana, March 29, 1916.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

Three Days Next Week at Wallace Theatre, Starting Thursday, April 6th.

The Birth of a Nation, bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with evening's performances, opens an engagement of three days at the Wallace theatre, starting Thursday evening, April 6. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Fort theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown. The great out of doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old war time tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments," of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae March as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as oCngressman Stoneman; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons and Walter Seigmann as Lynch. Matinees will be given daily throughout the engagement.

Mail orders will be received now if accompanied by money order and self-addressed stamped envelope.

The regular box office sale will start Monday, April 3.

MORNING STAR, WILMINGTON, N. C.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Thrills Big Audience at Academy of Music, Where It Will Be the Attraction for Remainder of Week.

An audience of more than 1,000 Wilmingtonians and out-of-town people entirely filled the Academy of Music last night and witnessed the first engagement of the marvelous motion picture production of "The Birth of a Nation," which vividly portrays conditions in the South immediately following the war, when the country was overrun with "carpetbaggers" and negro politicians.

The picture is based upon Thomas Dixon's "Clansman" and is of peculiar interest to the people of this section on account of the fact that the story is located in the Piedmont section of the Carolinas. It will be given each afternoon and night for the remainder of the week. The management decided to give a number of performances in order that there may be room for everyone who wishes to attend at each performance given.

"The Birth of a Nation," has to be seen to be appreciated. No one can see it without being thrilled by the many stirring scenes depicted. It should be seen by every citizen, and especially by every Southerner.

In "The Birth of a Nation" some new feature was presented in every one of the numerous battle scenes. Thousands of [illegible] thousands of soldiers were engaged [illegible] picture, while the battle scenes were as different from the ones ordinarily shown in moving picture play as day is from night. Especially was this true of the night scenes, where the coloring of the action was most noticeable. The scenes faithfully portrayed the horror and uselessness of war.

The pleasure derived by the audience from the production was greatly enhanced by the magnificent music rendered by a 16-piece symphony orchestra, which travels with the film. The music was filled with martial airs which with its pathetic notes deeply stirred the emotions of the audience, keeping time with the particular scene portrayed and rendering them doubly plain and realistic.

From the opening scene, showing a peaceful country town in the Southland before the terrible War Between the States to the closing scene ,showing the lovers of the North and the South spooning by the seaside, the picture was an accurate reproduction of the most thrilling epoch in the country's history.

Especially well acted was the solemn scene where Lincoln signs the call for 75,000 volunteers to put down the rebellion of the South. Equally faithful was the reproduction of scenes which occurred in every Southern village when soldiers left their dear ones to fight for the principles they held dearer than life itself. As those Southerners marched away to the tune of "Dixie" the members of the audience were filled with as real enthusiasm as if the incidents shown were happening today instead of more than 50 years ago.

Possibly the most inspiring scene of the entire picture was that of the thousands of Ku Klux Klansmen galloping across the country to suppress the negro disorders caused by their elevation to power by the carpetbaggers of the North. As the audience of Southerners sat in the Academy of Music watching the huge negro brute, "Silas Lynch", make love to the white daughter of "Austin Stoneman," who had raised Lynch to his power of Lieutenant governor of South Carolina, their blood fairly boiled in their veins, but as the thousands of white-clad clansmen came swinging across the fields on their white-robed chargers, bent upon suppressing the negro and saving the South their cheers were enthusiastic.

The closing scene of the picture was a most magnificent one, it comparing peace by showing first the hugs war god, Mars, mounted upon a giant charger, waving a flaming sword over his subjects; then a beautiful conception of Jesus Christ casting blessings upon a multitude of His subjects, closing upon "a united and inseparable people."

TIMES AND DEMOCRAT, ORANGEBURG, S. C.

SUMTER DAILY ITEM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Academy of Music, Sumter, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the War between the States and the Reconstruction of the Southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a brigadier general of the Confederate Army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old-fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama after panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor. At the Academy of Music, Sumter, for three nights beginning Thursday, April 6th. Matinees Friday and Saturday.—Advt.

DON'T MISS THIS CHANCE TO SEE BIG PICTURE THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Patrons who are waiting for Saturday afternoon to see "The Birth of a Nation," are going to be disappointed. The entire balcony is sold out and the first floor nearly so. Many good seats may be had for either Thursday or Friday.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foot-hills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan, live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion pictures, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000 employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870——the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots", it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theatre at every performance.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Story of the Ku Klux Klan Told in Great Production.

Probably the most thrilling scenes in David W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," are those in which the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the South.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed, "America for Americans." Somewhat like the Ku Klux Klan, the Vigilantes of California were organized to bring about law and order when the regular machinery of the law had broken down.

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as "an institution of Chivalry, Humanity and Patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tenn., in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the Grand Cyclops; his assistant was the Grand Magi; the marshall was the Grand Hurk; the treasurer was the Grand Exchequer and the guards were termed Lictors.

As the sorrows of the South under the baneful Reconstruction acts began to be unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popularized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because so many of the original members were descendants of Scottish clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scottish Highlanders was again used as a call to arms.

A gathering of the Klan in Nashville, Tenn., in 1867 passed the following resolutions which were at that time kept secret:

"We recognize our relations to the United States government, the supremacy of the constitution."

The aims of the organization were set forth as follows:

"1. To protect the weak, the innocent and the defenceless from the indignities, wrongs and outrages of the lawless, the violent and the brutal; to relieve the injured and oppressed; to succor the suffering and unfortunate and especially the widows and orphans of the Confederate soldiers.

"2. To protect and defend the constitution of the United States and all laws passed in conformity thereto and to protect the states from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3. To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of the land."

The Empire, as the Klan was known, was ruled by the Grand Wizard, General Nathan Bedford Forrest, the gallant and dashing Confederate cavalry leader. Each state was known as a Realm and the ruler was the Grand Dragon. He was assisted by eight Hydras. A group of counties was called a Dominion, ruled by a Grand Titan and six Furies.

Each county was a Province, under a Grand Giant and four Goblins. The unit of the organization was the Den and the members were known as Ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and ritual were never written until after the Grand Wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

A similar order was started in Louisiana knewn as the Knights of the White Camelia. The shibboleth of both organizations was "The Supremacy of the White Race," and that has survived in the South to this very day. At first the Ku Klux Klan devoted their efforts to putting down disorder among the bad negroes. Generally all that was necessary was to play upon the credulity and superstition of that race. They would ride up to a negro's cabin in the dead of night and one of the riders would call for a bucket of water, which he would drain to the bottom by using a concealed leather bag. He would then say that was the first drink he had had since he was killed at the Battle of Shiloh. This is very effectively shown in "The Birth of a Nation."

Another would wear a skeleton hand and another would take off his skull and ask a negro to hold it while he adjusted his backbone. These things always had the desired effect. Later on they went after the vicious carpetbaggers and scalawags. It was the brave deeds of the Ku Klux Klan that saved the South from a worse fate than had ever before been the aftermath of war.

"The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Academy of Music for three nights, beginning Monday, April 3, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE.

PROCTOR'S.

A trio of contrasting feminine charm, talent and temperament is featured in "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at Proctor's all this week in the persons of Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper. To these three attractive young women fall roles so important in sentiment, in love, humor and romance that any actress, no matter what her ability or reputation in the world of mimic art, would gladly welcome the opportunity to interpret.

Mae Marsh, for instance, is a veritable wonder of changing personalities. She has been seen as a tomboy, a young miss just home from boarding school, a biddy at the wash tub, a sweet girl graduate, a young woman of fashion, a romantic heroine, a grisette and a slavey, a soubrette cut-up and as she is seen at Proctor's, an everyday freckle-faced, rather homely and always roughish kid. A roguish kid, by the way, expresses Miss Marsh herself. Due to her youthful love of adventure and without any experience in acting whatever, she asked Director D. W. Griffith for an opportunity to act, and got it. She has proved one of Mr. Griffith's greatest "finds" of filmland.

Lillian Gish is of the adorable blonde type. She has a style of beauty that lends itself to every representation of daintiness. The life of a blonde before the camera is hardly one of peaches and cream for a poor light or an indifferent pose substitutes age for youth in the most distressing fashion. Miss Gish, however, is camera proof and for this season she enjoys the reputation of being the one blonde among many whom the photographic machine cannot play tricks with. Away from picture land Miss Gish is a well groomed, fashionably garbed, delightfully slim young woman whom one would never suspect ever posed, at least before a movie camera.

Miriam Cooper, the southern belle, Margaret Cameron, is the antithesis of Misses Marsh and Gish. She is a distinct brunette with a wealth of raven hair, classic features and big expressive eyes. A southerner by birth and breeding, Miss Cooper was admirably equipped in every wal to play her present part.

DO ANYTHING BUT MISS SEEING "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT LYRIC

Patrons who are waiting for Saturday afternoon to see "The Birth of a Nation" are going to be disappointed. The entire balcony is sold out and the first floor nearly so. Many good seats may be had for either Thursday or Friday.

It is brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction ever in New York where it broke every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leads to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

NY Telegraph 3/30

"Birth of a Nation" in Australia.

Cable messages were received yesterday at D. W. Griffith's offices from George Bowles, who is representing "The Birth of a Nation" in Australia, and from Guy C. Smith, representing it in South America, announcing the opening dates in those distant countries.

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin its Australian engagement in the Royal, Sydney, on April 22. The South America season will begin in the Opera House at Buenos Aires on April 24.

The next presentations will be in Rome and Petrograd. Arrangements for these engagements are now under way.

NY Journal of Commerce Commercial
MARCH 30, 1916.

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin an engagement in Sydney, Australia, on April 22, and on April 24 at Buenos Ayres. The great spectacle is now running in London and Manchester, England, and the next presentations will be in Paris, Rome and Petrograd.

3/30
NEW YORK TIMES

According to cablegrams received at D. W. Griffith's New York offices, "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown for the first time in Australia at Sydney, April 22, and in South America at Buenos Aires, April 22.

Pickets' Activities for Enterta

3/30
NEW YORK PRESS.

"The Birth of a Nation" will open in Sydney, Australia, April 2 and in Buenos Ayres April 24.

3/30
NEW YORK COMMERCIAL.

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin its Australian engagement at the Royal, Sydney, on April 22. On April 24 the South American season begins in the Opera House at Buenos Aires. The Griffith spectacle is now running at Drury Lane, London and the Queen's Theatre Manchester, England. The next presentations will be in Paris, Rome and Petrograd.

Republican Name Pa 3/30

Departure of the Troops, a Big Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Temple Theatre, Monday and Tuesday, April 3 and 4. Matinee Tuesday.

Ny Dy. Trib

MARCH 30 1916

A World-Circling Film.

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin its Australian engagement with an indefinite run in the Theatre Royal, Sydney, New South Wales, on Saturday night, April 12, and on Monday night, April 24, the South American season begins with a run in the Opera House at Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic. The Griffith spectacle is now running at Drury Lane Theatre, London, and the Queen's Theatre, Manchester, England. The next presentations will be in Paris, Rome and Petrograd. Arrangements for these engagements are now under way.

Allentown Pa Leader 3/30

Patrons who are waiting for Saturday afternoon to see "The Birth of a Nation," are going to be disappointed. The entire balcony is sold out and the first floor nearly so. Many good seats may be had for either Thursday or Friday.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foot-hills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan, live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion pictures, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own, which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theatre for the remaining performances.

Ny Dy. World

March 30.

"The Birth of a Nation" will open in Sydney, New South Wales, April 12, and at Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, April 24.

Allentown Pa Ger. Item 3/30

GO ANYTHING BUT MISS SEEING "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT LYRIC

Patrons who are waiting for Saturday afternoon to see "The Birth of a Nation" are going to be disappointed. The entire balcony is sold out and the first floor nearly so. Many good seats may be had for either Thursday or Friday.

It is brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction ever in New York, where it broke every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" tends to sounds extravagant because there is no other film in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 15,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 15,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

Ny Globe Commercial Advertiser

MARCH 30, 1916.

National Board Changes Name.

The national board has eliminated the word "censorship" from its title. It will hereafter be known as the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The new name is a more accurate indication of the nature of the board's work because the word "censorship" implies a type of official control and supervision that is repugnant to the American ideal of free speech. The National Board believes in the free expression of ideas in the press, the theatre, and the motion picture. It has come to the point where it would rather go out of existence than seem to stand for the kind of bureaucratic blue pencil that works in secret and enforces its decisions on the public without ever giving the public a chance to decide for itself.

3/30 Day

FORT WORTH RECORD

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE AT BYERS

Wonderful Screen Drama to Be Shown Here for a Week, Starting Monday.

D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," returning to Byers opera house next week, has authorized the announcement over his signature that the spectacle will never be exhibited in any other than a first-class theater, at first-class prices. When it has outlived its usefulness in such playhouses, it will not be let out to the cheaper houses, after the manner of many other theatrical attractions, but will be withdrawn entirely. Consequently, all who wish to see the spectacle must see it in the larger theaters.

Mr. Griffith is in the business permanently of producing great spectacles, and it is his intention to keep his name associated with the present high standard of excellence. He is a young man of 35, and has a long career before him. He is now at work on another huge production entitled "The Mother and the Law," and has started the preliminary research work for a mighty spectacle on the theme of "The Holy Grail." These, and the ones to follow, like "The Birth of a Nation," will be shown in the first-class theaters at first-class prices.

Mr. Griffith will never consent to cheapen his productions to the point of making them profitable in second or third-rate theaters. For example, his big symphony orchestra of thirty pieces, coming to the Byers opera house, could not be taken into a cheaper house, and his expert mechanicians and electricians could not be paid their present salaries with the price of admission lowered. The Birth of a Nation" in its present state of excellence could not be transferred to a cheaper theater any more than could "Ben-Hur," and Mr. Griffith is determined that not one jot of excellence shall ever be sacrificed. He intends to make his name on the screen as sure a guarantee of excellence as Charles Frohman's was as sponsor for a star in drama.

For 3/30

OIL CITY DERRICK

BIG PICTURE COMING BACK.

Even greater crowds than those that saw the first engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" in Oil City are expected when the big motion picture triumph is brought back here on April 14 and 15.

Manager Pease states that the same splendid orchestra which added so much to the enjoyment of the Griffith masterpiece early in the winter will be here again and the production will be identical in every way.

Seats may be guaranteed now by mail order.

3/30 New Orleans

TIMES-PICAYUNE.

Tulane Theater.

"History by lightning flash" is the description applied to "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Tulane Theater, by a certain eminent man for whom a private exhibition was given in Washington some months ago. Ethics forbid the use of the speaker's name, which is a household word throughout the civilized world. The 50,000 or more Orleanians who have witnessed the Griffith spectacle during its phenomenal run at the Tulane will agree that it is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that have been written large upon our country's scroll of fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies, and with this framework they make these wonderful characters live again.

INCOLN PORTRAYED IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Manager Dunn urges every one in the city who can and is intending to attend "The Birth of a Nation to Purchase his tickets for tonight or Friday, owing to the great demand for seats from out of town for Friday and Saturday and in that way we can accommodate all our patrons.

This is the most important engagement in the history of the K. of P. theatre, and every one who can should take advantage of it. Do not fail to secure your seats if laid away before 7 o'clock night of engagement, or they will be resold. But don't miss seeing this musical spectacle.

y Walthall as "Little Colonal" in The Birth of A Nation, Academy usic, Three Nights Begin ng Apr l 3. Matinee Tues. and Wed scene is only one of the many in "The Birth of a Nation" which begi three-day engagement at P. theatre tonight. The scene shows the Ford theatre in Washingt on advance notices say the theaproduced in every detail.

SCENE SHOWING ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN

"Birth of a Nation"

Manager Dunn urges everyone who can and are going to the "Birth of a Nation" to attend tonight or Friday owing to the great demand for tickets from out of town patrons for Friday and Saturday. This is the greatest engagement of any attraction ever playing this city and will meet with packed houses.' It is so well advertised and every one who has ever seen "The Birth of a Nation" cannot say enough in praise of it, and advise every one to see it during the engagement in this city, which opens tonight at the K. of P. theatre at 8 p. m.

CALLS MOVIE CENSORSHIP A STEP TO END OF FREE SPEECH AND FREE PRESS

From an address by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation and vice president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America.

The "reformer" loves a shining mark.

There is no need for me to define my meaning of "reformer" for the public is amply aware of the difference between those persons who are sincerely striving for the public good and those who assume the same guise for the purposes of personal gratification, publicity or private gain.

The "reformer" loves the new like he loves the calicum.

It used to be fashionable to assail the novel as a device of Satan. Then a few years ago editorials rang with denunciation of the so-called sensational press. Mr. Yellowly rather found he could break into the newspapers by assailing them. Yet, according to my own observation, the principal difference between the sensational newspaper and the conservative paper is in the size of type and the number of pictures per page.

Then the "yellow back" dime novel came in for general assault. It was an easy and popular byword of condemnation. It became a stock property with the joke smiths and the headline writers. The messenger boy with his "dime novel" was a rubber stamp in the hands of the humorists, cartoonists and the reporter hunting for a "feature" with which to enliven the story of a small boy gone wrong.

Now the motion picture being new and popular is the mark.

A NEW RUBBER STAMP.

"I learned it at the movies" is the new rubber stamp for the small-boy-gone-wrong story. It makes a headline just a little newer than the timeworn "dime novel" angle.

So the newspapers have been in a degree themselves responsible for this public impression of the terrible influence of the motion picture on the young.

But let me point out that because of all this agitation and the decrying of the "dime novel" for example no one dared seriously to seek to establish a censorship of all publication. No one got any serious consideration for the idea that everybody who printed novels and newspapers and magazines and books should submit them to a board of censors.

Why?

Because the institution of a free press had been so firmly established.

The publishers of bad books have been discouraged.

The publishers of immoral books have been punished.

But the publishing business is subject to no censorship save public taste.

The present widespread agitation for censorship of the motion picture is possible only because the true nature of the motion picture as a form of publication has not been recognized intelligently by the public.

ALWAYS EXCEPTIONS.

Let me refer back to the "I learned it at the movies" line again. Investigation of should such stories in the press, conducted by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, revealed the fact that in only one isolated instance was there the slightest suggestion of anything to support the accusation.

It is true that there are motion pictures made and produced for the screen which are not intended for the child mind. So too there are books, magazines, public libraries and gardens which are not calculated for the child mind. The daily newspapers are full of often crimes with stories not intended for the child mind.

But all that does not mean that these books and stories do not serve a purpose, that their publication should be censored or suppressed.

The spirit of censorship is perfectly illustrated in an instance of the operations of the Kansas censors some months ago when they refused to permit the motion picture theaters of the state to screen a film which discussed the question and presented the consideration of the people. It is could only be paralleled in absurdity by a ruling which would forbid the newspapers to discuss the postal rates or the publicity law, or any other matter which involved their existence.

In investigation of the origin of a very large number of the various local censor boards we find the fact that they are boards created to create jobs. The rapid rise of the motion picture industry and its prosperity has attracted the attention of the parasites on the political of the politicians controlling political powers. Censors have been put on the job for a lot of reasons, but on the job for a lot of reasons, because they needed the money, because they wanted jobs, because they were they wanted a title and because they wanted to do because some mayor wanted to "play in the grandstand." But who ever heard of a censor being appointed because he knew something or because he was supposed to be especially fitted for his work?

Politicians have learned to fear the newspapers.

Will it be necessary to make them fear the motion pictures? The motion picture has all the powers of publication. It can lampoon, it can caricature, it can editorialize and it can expose. It can necessarily may increase its powers.

A just fight will give the motion picture strength.

WII

Pa day
Na

Chica Angele towns c are tha tre for

to ream

BRADFORD PA.

HE BRADFORD THEATRE

Surrender of Lee at Appomattox.

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of Nation" spectacle to be seen at the radford' theatre Wednesday and hursday, April 5 and 6, Howard Gaye d Donald Crisp have received the ost compliments on the faithfulness Their work, the one as General Rob- t E Lee and the other as General S. Grant.

It is well known that many sup- orters of the defeated Confederacy ished to prolong the struggle by eans of a guerilla warfare similar to hat used by the Boers towards the lose of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact ohn Wilkes Booth supposed that in illing President Lincoln he would ave the support of the South in a ew struggle. But General Lee was f a different temper. He realized hat the South had been beaten in a air struggle on the fields of battle nd that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries ndured by his people. Therefore, af- ter the Battle of Five Forks, he open- ed negotiations with General Grant and on the morning of April 9th un- der the budding apples trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were for- mally written down at the Wilmer- McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and in- dict Lee for treason but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event. Seat sale opens Monday morning, April 3d.

3/31

W YORK COMMERCIAL

MOVIE CENSOR BILL APPROVED

Albany Measure Reported to Senate by Education Committee.

Albany, Mar. 30.—The Cristman-Wheeler bill providing for a state board of motion picture censors under the supervision of the state board of regents, was favorably reported to the Senate today by the educa- tion committee. The supporters of the measure believe it will pass the Senate at least, and possibly the Assembly also. The measure provides for a board of three members to be appointed by the regents, and to serve for annual salaries of $4,000. A fee of $5 for each 500 feet of film examined would be exacted from the producers, with an additional fee of $50 for duplicates. Approved films must exhibit at their conclusion the words: "Ap- proved by the board of regents of the uni- versity of the state of New York," for at least six seconds. Producers would have the right to appeal to the board of regents.

Chas. Mar 31
Am. Star
3/31

LAST TIMES TODAY AND TOMORROW, "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT LYRIC

The run of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lyric is rapidly drawing to a close. The engagement has been a most successful one with the Lyric being well filled at each performance. This time, like the previous one, many are not going to see the great spec- tacle for the reason that they have been lax in securing reservations in advance. Many are waiting for to- morrow matinee. These should re- member that the Lyric, spacious as it is, will not be able to hold all who will want to crowd in. A little forethought on the part of these people will sug- gest that they try and go this after- noon or this evening. Many choice seats are available for both perform- ances. "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the rare spectacles that comes but once in a life time. That time is at hand and if you neglect to enjoy it you are going to be among the very few who will do so.

Allentown Call 3/31

BIRTH OF A NATION AT LYRIC LAST TIMES TODAY AND TOMORROW

The run of "Birth of a Nation" at the Lyric is rapidly drawing to a close. The engagement has been a most successful one with the Lyric being well filled at each performance. This time, like the previous one, many are not going to see the great spectacle for the reason that they have been lax in securing reservations in advance. Many are waiting for to-morrow matinee. They should remember that the Lyric, spacious as it is, will not be able to hold all who will want to crowd in. A little forethought on the part of these people will suggest that they try and go this afternoon or this evening. Many choice seats are available for both performances. "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the rare spectacles that comes but once in a life time. That time is at hand and if you neglect to enjoy it yo [illegible] going to be among the very f [illegible] will do so.

3/31

ALLENTOWN DEMOCRAT

LAST TIMES TODAY AND TOMORROW, "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT LYRIC

The run of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lyric is rapidly drawing to a close. The engagement has been a most successful one with the Lyric being well filled at each performance. This time, like the previous one, many are not going to see the great spec- tacle for the reason that they have been lax in securing reservations in advance. Many are waiting for to- morrow matinee. These should re- member that the Lyric, spacious as it is, will not be able to hold all who will want to crowd in. A little forethought on the part of these people will sug- gest that they try and go this after- noon or this evening. Many choice seats are available for both perform- ances. "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the rare spectacles that comes but once in a life time. That time is at hand and if you neglect to enjoy it you are going to be among the very few who will do so.

Mar 31

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE.

PROCTOR'S.

Quite the most wonderful of the many remarkable scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" which is being shown at Proctor's all this week, is the one showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently between the hills. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated. Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snippers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation of a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal, the sea.

Atlanta is reached and sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is very realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation." Another move had been made in the big war game to end at Appomattox Court House with the surrender of Lee. The surrender took place in the Wilmer-McLean Mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. As the scene unfolds, Grant, played by Donald Crisp, is seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee, played by Howard Gaye, is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

Allentown Leader 3/31

The run of "The Birth of A Nation" at the Lyric is rapidly drawing to a close. The engagement has been a most successful one with the Lyric being well filled at each performance. This time, like the previous one, many are not going to see the great spectacle for the reason that they have been lax in securing reservations in advance. Many are waiting for tomorrow matinee. These should remember that the Lyric, spacious as it is, will not be able to hold all who will want to crowd in. A little forethought on the part of these people will suggest that they try and go this afternoon or this evening. Many choice seats are available for both performances. "The Birth of A Nation" is one of the rare spectacles that comes but once in a life time. That time is at hand and if you neglect to enjoy it you are going to be among the very few who will do so.

3/31

TIMES-PICAYUNE, N

Tulane Theater.

In "The Birth of a Nation," now in its third week at the Tulane Theater, one sees a new form of theatric art which has enabled D. W. Griffith, its originator, to surpass by far any stage spectacle produced heretofore. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such offerings, but they sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 300 riders and 200,000 separate and distinct details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and an expenditure of half a million dollars. Aside from its magnificence in a theatrical sense, the Griffith masterpiece holds a strong patriotic appeal and during its record-smashing run at the Tulane it has attracted thousands of elderly people whose days of theater going are almost done.

El Paso Herald
3/31

SUNSHINE IN THE HOSPITAL.

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which closes its two weeks' engagement at the Texas Grand tomorrow night, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate Colonel, Ben Campbell, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded diguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil War reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war time to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

Orangeburg (SC) 3/31

FILM PLAY THE GREATEST OF PHOTOPLAYS

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with evening's performance opens an engagement of three nights at the Academy of Music, Orangeburg, beginning Monday, April 3d. Matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's Theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part-singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old war-time tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments," of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln, Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee, Mae March as Flora Cameron, Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers, Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman, Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch.

Orangeburg (SC) 3/31

Big scene in "The Birth of a Nation" Academy of Music, Orangeburg, 3 nights, beginning Monday, April 3d.

Daily News 3/31

Greensburg, Ind.,

STUPENDOUS FASCINATING HISTORICAL

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" UNQUESTIONABLY THE MOST POWERFUL PHOTOGRAPHIC FEATURE EVER PRODUCED

HERE ALL WEEK

When David Wark Griffith, the master creator of emotional photoplays conceived and caused to be materialized "The Birth of a Nation," he gave to the world a work of genius that will live through the ages and which can be truly said to be immortal.

Widely advertised before it came to this city last night for a three nights' engagement the stupendous, fascinating and wonderfully constructed photoplay masterpiece was welcomed by a large and appreciative audience.

Picturing that period of the civil war near its crisis, the dark days of the reconstruction of states laid waste by the ravages of the war, and the vicissitudes and problems that confronted a defeated yet heroic people, Griffith not only has interwoven realism and sentiment into this choice fabric, but he has builded most skillfull around actual historic events as are today a prominent factor in our civic life.

The depictions of Sherman's march to the sea, desperate conflict of brother against brother, destruction of cities and the laying waste virgin lands and wooded hillsides, the evolution of a people, chronicle of the conflict of statesmen and the eventual ending of a race problem, are but a few of the multitude of soul stirring events that with perfect realism are brought into vision.

As all know the dramatization is from Thomas Dixon's story of "The Clansman," and Griffith's poetic imagination takes one across dreamy dales, through swaying trees and back to distant mountains. In a flash the scene will change and one sees nations grappling and battling for military supremacy. An unscrupulous radical, a lame statesman, is shown in his failure to persuade the immortal Lincoln to put to death the Southern leaders, and in the next scene comes the assassination of President Lincoln in the historic Ford theatre in the Nation's capital. The terrorizing reign of the armed negro, the "carpet bagger" and the tramping down into the dust of a proud southern people, comes in turn, and the climax is reached with the organization and operation of the Ku Klux Klan. It was through a period of four years of war and eight years of mortal agony known as the reconstruction time of the south, that a Nation was really born, and none today have so conscientiously, so splendidly and superbly documented this in photoplay as has Mr. Griffith. The music in connection with this great feature is one of the pleasing incidents of the presentation. Turned exactly to meet every climax throughout the several thousand feet of pictures, it alone is worth the price of admission.

"The Birth of a Nation" shows again tonight, Saturday matinee and Saturday night, and despite the fact many people are coming from surrounding towns, there will be plenty of seats at each performance for the country people. No one can afford to miss this great production, as a few terse facts as follows will convince:

There are over 5,000 distinct scenes and 18,000 people and 3,000 superbly trained horses were utilized in making this narrative.

The approximate cost of the production was $500.000. The women's dresses of the period of 1860 used up 12,000 yards of cloth.

Over 25,000 yards of white material were sewed into the costumes of the Ku Klux Klan. Every piece of ordinance and musketry used in battle is an exact reproduction of the artillery and arms used on both sides during the civil war. and to depict the ravages of Sherman's march to the sea a city was specially built, only to be destroyed. $10,000 was spent in a single day in a county to permit the Ku Klux Klan to ride over it, and special shells prepared for the artillery duels cost $80 each. Nearly 200,000 feet of film was originally taken, 12,000 is now used in the condensed form and Mr. Griffith worked eight months to complete the picture.

3/31

FORT WORTH RECORD,

"The Birth of a Nation" to Be at Byers One Week Starting Monday

Lee and Grant at Appomattox, scene From "Birth of a Nation"

The painstaking accuracy with which D. W. Griffith staged "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to Byers opera house Monday night for a week, is illustrated in the meeting of Generals Lee and Grant at Appomattox. Careful observers will note the slovenly appearance of Grant as contrasted with the immaculate appearance of Lee. It also will be noted that Grant and several of his generals are in their private uniforms — their "everyday clothes," as it were—instead of their uniforms of state befitting such an occasion as the surrender of one great army to another.

The explanation of the appearance of Grant and his staff is that the great Federal leader was not expecting the final culmination of the negotiations for peace at Appomattox. There had been strong intimation and even practical assurance that Lee was unwilling to prolong the struggle, but that the end was so near was not guessed. Grant and his staff were in their "business clothes," and had just come in from a hard ride, with their uniforms and their boots all splashed with mud.

Grant, who had all the instincts of a gentleman and who never wilfully violated the "proprieties" of good society, was very much ashamed of his own appearance when he saw Lee in the full military regalia of his rank, carefully pressed and even his boots polished to the last finish of perfection. In the losing struggle, half-starved along with his men, and with his mighty heart broken, General Lee had yet found time and means to prepare himself properly for the last bitter moment of the Confederacy. Grant never quite forgave himself for his appearance on that memorable day.

3/31

OIL CITY DERRICK,

GRIFFITH FAVORS OIL CITY.

Producer Breaks Long-Standing Rule to Show Pictures Here Again.

It was only after the most strenuous efforts that Manager Pease was able to book "The Birth of a Nation" for a return engagement at the Opera house this year. When the Oil City manager sought to bring back the big picture he ran into a list of prohibitions and rules longer than the ordinary reel. Griffith is opposed to playing two engagements of "The Birth of a Nation" in the same town in the same season. The business done here at the first five performances was so good, however, and there were so many scores of requests at the box office that it be brought back that the local management was able to overcome the producer's law in this case. The same production, with its big orchestra, will be shown here again on April 14 and 15.

"BIRTH OF NATION" IS OVERWHELMING

GRIFFITH'S MIGHTY SPECTACLE THRILLS LARGE AUDIENCE AT OPENING PERFORMANCE

WORTH ANY PRICE YOU PAY

Bigness of Production Makes You Talk—Perfect Cast, Wonderful Scenic Effects, Fine Music

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, is overwhelming. It is impossible to see this historical spectacle without wanting to say something about it. What that something will be depends upon your viewpoint. At any rate one can not see this wonderful picture without wanting to tell everyone he meets of the bigness of it. If you haven't seen "The Birth of a Nation" you've missed something. The show is worth any price you pay to see it.

The production thrilled a large audience at the K. of P. theatre last night at the opening performance. The public is fortunate in having an opportunity of witnessing the mightiest spectacle ever filmed. Manager Dunn is to be commended upon his efforts to give the public the best.

In this historical spectacle, dealing as it does with American history with which most of us are familiar, D. W. Griffith shows his ability to faithfully portray events of the past, and without a doubt his work can be placed at the top of the ladder of motion picture accomplishments.

A perfect cast, scenic effects beyond description, flawless photography and wonderful music combine to make the production the biggest and best ever filmed. When one sees the picture through he then begins to understand the advance notices wherein it was stated that the picture required eight months in the making, and cost $500,000. To one unfamiliar with the cost of moving pictures it would seem that there must have been millions of dollars spent to accomplish the desired results.

The characters in this wonderful drama are made to live. The fact that there are two special operators in a booth manipulating the machinery which makes it possible to show motion pictures, is forgotten and the audience becomes absorbed in the characters on the screen, feeling all the while that a "regular" play is being enacted.

The civil war period and the reconstruction are shown with consideration for every detail. The great battles of the war are vividly portrayed and there is no doubt, but that Griffith exceeded all expectations from outsiders in his great work. Following the civil war, began the building up of the south, but the radical views of one man, a leader, came near meaning the overthrow of the remnant of the Confederacy. This man tried to put the negro on an equal footing with the white man, and the result was disaster. Eight years of horrible reconstruction was the result and it finally culminated in the organization of the Ku Klux Klan. This powerful band overthrew the radical rule of the negroes and restored the south to its rightful position.

Sherman's march to the sea, the surrender of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant, the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theatre, reproduced in detail are three of the big features from the artistic standpoint.

Speaking of the criticism regarding the negro in the picture, Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., of New York, had the following to say:

"The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity, is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him, and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty, so new and untried, that he had not yet learned to understand it, and was ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time."

There is a beautiful love story running through the entire production.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown tonight, tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow night at the K. of P. theatre.

To appreciate the picture you must see it. To see it is to appreciate the efforts made to bring motion pictures up to their present high standard.

Last night's attendance was up to expectations, a large crowd being present. The seat sale is heavy for tonight. Many out of town people are attending.

Mrs. Wolfg[illegible] and Miss Frances Harrison, of [illegible], will attend "The Birth of a N[illegible]" on Saturday.

Edgar Spill[illegible] and wife, Mr. and Mrs. James [illegible]an, and Mr. and Mrs. Edgar T[illegible]s, of Milroy, were in this city las[illegible]ning and witnessed "The Birth of [illegible]tion."

Dr. and Mrs. John [illegible], of Lotto, are here to attend "[illegible] Birth of a Nation" at the K. of P[illegible]atre.

El Paso (Texas) Herald

Friday, March 31, 1916.

HISTORY SHOWN UPON A SCREEN

Accuracy of "The Birth of Nation" Makes it a Real Educator.

Recognizing the value of "The Birth of a Nation" as an educational picture, The El Paso Herald arranged Thursday to have its carrier boys attend the performance at the Texas Grand theater. All Herald carriers are pupils in the public schools—most of them in the high school—and students of history. The boys were greatly interested in the picture, and The Herald feels confident that they have profited a great deal as a result of their visit.

Great attention to detail and historical accuracy was given in the making of the picture. For instance, in the scene at Appomattox Courthouse, Gen. Grant is correctly represented in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, whilst Gen. Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress.

Extreme Accuracy Shown.

This fact illustrates the extreme accuracy of D. W. Griffith, producer of the photodrama, in the matter of historical detail. A stage director of less genius would have represented the two generals in showy regalia, striking theatrical military attitudes. But the simplicity of Grant and Lee in the scene as depicted by Griffith makes it strike truer to the heart of the spectator than any other conception would have done. When Grant walks over to Lee and unaffectedly extends his hand in token of the warm friendship that is to bind up the wounds of the north and the south, the audience rises to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. The scene was made from a historical drawing of the incident.

Assassination of Lincoln.

The care exercised by Mr. Griffith in staging the assassination of Lincoln, which is a five-minutes incident in this great spectacle of three hours, is another illustration of his methods that give his production such extraordinary weight and authority.

The exact manner of the assassination of Lincoln can never be definitely determined. Mr. Griffith, in his researches, found 18 distinct accounts, all of them differing in small but important details.

Professors Approve Play.

From these accounts, he selected what he considered the most probable chain of events, and every movement made by the actors in the scene as he visualized it, is found by the student of history to be authenticated by one or another of the accounts. University professors who have seen the Griffith production have given it as their opinion that Mr. Griffith has admirably performed a difficult feat, and it is probable that his interpretation will be the one that will live in history.

Date Less

Huntington (Ind) Herald Date?

K. OF P. THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" will conclude a very satisfactory three nights' engagement here this evening. This great spectacle has been witnessed by thousands and all who have seen it, pronounce it not only amazing from every point of view, but as educating as it is stupendous. Many seat reservations were made early today by persons living out-of-town.

Huntington (Ind) Herald Date?

BIG MOTION PICTURE FEATURE STARTS TONIGHT

Don't let any previous engagement cause you to miss seeing "The Birth of a Nation," which opens a three day's engagement at the K. of P. Theatre tonight with matinees on Friday and Saturday. There is an unusual demand for seats, and as this is the only place in southern Indiana where the films will be shown, many people from out-of-town are coming for it. Admittedly, this is the greatest moving picture of the age and it teaches a moral that all should be familiar with.

Huntington (Ind) Herald

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

To see Sherman's memorable march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, the awful tragedy of Lincoln's death at Ford's Theatre, all of these and many others, see "The Birth of a Nation" for three nights, Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Pythian Theatre. There are fully 5,000 wonderful scenes in this great spectacle, so different from anything yet ever attempted. This wonderful photoplay narrative is filled with tears and smiles, and it grips the hearts of the audience in a fashion that will never be forgotten. So eager has been the public to see this drama that standing room in all the larger theatres of the country has been sold at a premium several weeks in advance. Remember Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

to tl nigh ous, const was w precia
Pict
y

Huntington (Ind) Press

Scene from D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" which will come to the Huntington theater April 2, 4,

Huntington (Ind) Herald

Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Huntington theater.

HUNTINGTON HERALD

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

[illegible] extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a three-days engagement Monday evening at the Huntington theater. The first class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of fifty people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 510 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of Reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the president in Ford's theater and the succeeding orgy in the south—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered states. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of southern and northern sweethearts.

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

One of the [illegible] scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Huntington theater shows Miss Elsie [illegible] ter of the "Great Commoner" [illegible] congress in Lincoln's [illegible] guitar to solace a wounded [illegible] cer in the Patents' Office [illegible]

"I haven't known you [illegible] the little confederate [illegible] Camerون' "but I have carried [illegible] about with me for years and [illegible] He displays a half-faded [illegible] type of the girl, a picture [illegible] given her brother and which [illegible] len into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben [illegible] a rapid recovery. In the second [illegible] of the story, the scene of which [illegible] to South Carolina they are swept [illegible] in the dread time of the second [illegible] ern uprising. To portray the [illegible] er of northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as [illegible] Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden [illegible] blonde type which makes for [illegible] graphic beauty. She is singularly [illegible] ful, and her features never lose [illegible] piquancy in in or outdoor scenes. [illegible] acting conveys sincerity as well [illegible] true feminine charm—at least [illegible] New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish [illegible] two being sisters) are the [illegible] actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation" does most of his work. [illegible] took eight months to stage the [illegible] War and Reconstruction epic. [illegible] the Stoneman Reeve [illegible] scenes from the early war-time [illegible] the end of Reconstruction [illegible] marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish [illegible] hardly an idle moment.

Huntington (Ind) Herald

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's mighty [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation" will be [illegible] at the Huntington Theater, April [illegible] and 5, exactly as it is being [illegible] New York and several other [illegible] where it has made record [illegible] runs.

This new force in the art of entertainment is perhaps the [illegible] widely discussed production [illegible] made in America. It is shown [illegible] the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. [illegible] condensing the living events of [illegible] most strenuous periods of [illegible] history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours [illegible] are not told about it, nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical [illegible] tions of what took place. Instead [illegible] see it by lightning flashes. [illegible] tory revived and shown in its [illegible] Some of the greatest names that [illegible] written large no the scroll of [illegible] country's fame appear on the [illegible] The players who enact the [illegible] studied the minute descriptions [illegible] these men both from photographs [illegible] intimate life studies and with [illegible] frame work they make these [illegible] ful characters live again.

Huntington (Ind) Press

Scenes from the Birth of a Nation. Huntington Theatre, April 2, [illegible]

A PPIL

April 1

Personal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work In "The Birth of a Nation" Has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, Is Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

THERE is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices and has got the so called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up. On observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain, just as in the big crashes of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by a flash of field flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is work, and he seeks relaxation in dancing. There is a story going along Broadway that recently Griffith turned down an offer from the manager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the trottery. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the Boniface why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh, and he is chubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the silent drama. He looks upon it as the youngest sister of the fine arts, and he hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blending of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score to "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he correlated tone to every action and unconsciously hummed the several tunes and chords which now form a part of the wonderful score which Breil has synchronized so well to this stirring action. These notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Breil while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an [illegible] crack [illegible] has an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

April 1 — Greensburg Tribune

BIRTH OF NATION TO CLOSE TONIGHT

MIGHTY SPECTACLE WILL BE PRESENTED AT K. OF P. THEATRE FOR LAST TIME

"The Birth of a Nation" has been a big drawing card in Greensburg. There was a large attendance at the matinee at the K. of P. theatre this afternoon and a larger crowd is expected tonight.

It is not often that the people of a town of this size are given the opportunity of witnessing such a mighty spectacle as "The Birth of a Nation," and Manager Dunn has been receiving many compliments for bringing the monster production here. The music with the picture is alone worth the price of admission. The cast is one of the best ever assembled and the scenic effects are the most wonderful ever thrown upon the screen.

It will pay you to see "The Birth of a Nation." Here tonight at the K. of P. theatre for the last time.

The rapid strides of the motion pictures industry in comparison with the stage where the spoken drama flourishes is astonishing when you study the figures. Take the case of Griffith, the man who created "The Birth of a Nation." He draws a salary of $100,000 a year. There are few big combinations/of business in this extravagant age which can boast of more than one $100,000 per year man. The spoken stage is considerably over a one hundred years old in America. The "movie" has flourished about ten years. Yet there is a $100,000 man in the motion picture business. Who ever heard of a director in stageland who earned a salary of $100,000 or what is more important who ever drew that much regular money from any of the big producing firms?

April 1

TROY TIMES, TROY, N. Y

—Commencing to-morrow evening Proctor's New Theatre will once again have for its attraction D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement is for one week of twice daily performances. This historical drama has proved the greatest theatrical success of the present century. Over six million people have already seen it. As in New York, so in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, its popularity is measured by months of continuous performances. The story, which commences with the coming of African slaves to America, pictures the Civil War with its terrific battles; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the fall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant; the assassination of President Lincoln; the ordeal of the reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem and the final establishment of an everlasting peace. These historic scenes are all shown in a way that links history to romance. It is all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world. There are more than 5,000 scenes and 200,000 historical details. The picture took eight months in the making and gave employment to 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses. Among the principals of the largest cast ever assembled for a dramatic entertainment are Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lew, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reed, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Jones, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, John McGlynn, Ernest Campbell, John French and J. A. Berlinger. A symphony orchestra of thirty will interpret the score.

April 1

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE.

PROCTOR'S.

With the two performances today, the return engagement of the D. W. Griffith famous war spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be brought to a close. This will be the last opportunity the people of this city will have to witness this gorgeous production, which has already delighted millions of persons throughout the country. The elaborate presentation of this great masterpiece of motion pictures gives it the foremost place in screen productions, and to have missed seeing it means to have missed one of the biggest photoplays ever produced. The famous battles of the Civil war, the assassination of President Lincoln, the reconstruction period in the south following the great war, and the wild rides of the celebrated Ku Klux Klan, all are vividly portrayed, and at the same time, two pretty love themes are interwoven into this wonderful drama.

OPERA HOUSE.

Keep in mind the return engagement of that wonderful picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which Manager Pease has secured for April 14 and 15 at the opera house. This photoplay which startled the world made a great impression on the host of residents of this city and vicinity who saw it at the opera house three months ago and no doubt the attendance on the return date will be very large.

SUMTER DAILY ITEM, APRIL 1, 1916.

A Mother's Appeal to the President of the United States. Scene in "The Birth of a Nation, Academy of Music, 3 Nights Beginning Thursday, April 6th. Matinees Friday and Saturday.

THE SURRENDER OF GENERAL LEE AT APPAMATOX.

Scene from D. W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen for the last time at the Bradford theatre—April 5-6th. Matinee daily.

April 1

THE BRADFORD ERA.

THE BRADFORD THEATRE

Greatest Spectacle of Age, "The Birth of a Nation," Next Week.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Bradford theatre April 5-6th. There will be two performances daily, at 8:15 and 2:15 p. m.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York city where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacles have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eye witness of the actual occurrence.

Seat sale opens Monday.

OIL CITY PERRY.

SHOWS LINCOLN'S DEATH

Scene in Ford's Theatre One of Best Triumph of "The Birth of a Nation"

A play within a play is a bit of dramatic construction which has often been utilized by dramatists since the play became an institution. Perhaps the earliest and most prominent illustration of this constructive detail, as far as the English-speaking stage is concerned, is the player scene in "Hamlet" which Shakespeare uses as an effective part of the earlier development of his tragic plot.

Nothing of this sort has ever been revealed upon so pretentious a plan as is shown in David W. Griffith's mammoth picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which will return to Oil City, April 14 and 15. Griffith's scene is the representation in historic and dramatic detail of Ford's theatre, Washington, D. C., on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth before the eyes of a gala audience gathered on that occasion to celebrate the close of the Civil war.

This scene is one of the most dramatic moments in a story full of astonishing for its thrilling action. The drama is a complete story within itself and yet is a vital part of the larger story which is covered in the larger plan of the spectacle. From a technical viewpoint is is one of the most remarkable achievements in the annals of the American stage.

In the language of motion picture production it is known as "a studio set." This means that it was built indoors and had to be specially constructed to give the desired effect. It is the largest interior set ever built for a motion picture story. The scene is, in minute detail, an exact reproduction of Ford's theatre as it appeared upon this historic occasion. Numerous authentic works upon the subject were studied to get the exact measurements and dimensions of the theatre. In this research the fundamentals were furnished by John Hay's "Abraham Lincoln, a History." It will be recalled that the writers were as secretaries to President Lincoln and were in close touch with the events of that period. A detail showing the thoroughness of the work is the picture of Booth's leap from the presidential box after he had fired the shot. The distance covered in this was 12 feet. This actor performed had to be carefully rehearsed in the scene and to get in the proper detail of his spur catching in the flag draped the box. This accounted for the fall which resulted in Booth breaking his leg. The leap takes just a second in the picture, but it had to be rehearsed time and time again and Raymond who played Booth before the picture was caught just as Booth did in his jump to the stage and rushed across the theatre, via way of the footlights. Walsh wore out three pairs of trousers at the knees before the right picture was caught. This will give one an idea of the difficulties of the leaps he made.

April 1

FORT WORTH RECORD.

"The Birth of a Nation" to Run a Week at Byers Opera House

Critics of art and music find as much in "The Birth of a Nation," returning to Byers opera house next week, to excite their sensibilities as do critics of the drama. The dramatic appeal, indeed, is reduced to a mathematical demonstration by the Griffith spectacle. No one who sees the frenzies of excitement that pass through the audience wave after wave can question for a moment the power of the production from the dramatic standpoint.

From the standpoint of the art of the landscape painter, Griffith must be accredited with achievements new in the world of the motion picture. It cannot be the camera alone that gives to the creation of Sherman's march to the sea an atmosphere, as the art critics term it, that differentiates the work of a painter from the work of a photographer. It is a power of selection and grouping that seems instinctive with Griffith and that no other producer possesses. Sherman's march is a work of genius as surely as are the vast military canvases of David.

The musical critic finds in the score of "The Birth of a Nation" the same qualities that make the Wagnerian operas so remarkable. His ear is delighted with the constantly recurring themes and motives so truly interpretive of the actions and passions of the personages involved.

And yet, with all the marvelous correctness and technical perfection, the art and the music are as simple and direct and stirring as are the dramatic qualities. Like all works of true genius, "The Birth of a Nation" is universally comprehensible. The "Iliad" of Homer is as easy to read as "Gulliver's Travels" and vice versa, Gulliver is as sure a stroke of genius as

"OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the O'Dowd Theatre, commencing an engagement of three nights on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 10th, 11th and 12th.

its sweep and power, it covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. Eighteen thousand people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed

Gastonia (SC) Daily Times April 1

h matinees on Tuesday and Wed-day, 11th and 12th.

will be brought here in exact re-duction of the greatest attraction ch is now in New York where it broken every record of the Ameri stage. These achievements alone e aroused more comment upon the ject of this great story than was r devoted to a theatrical enter-e before.

he merest statement regarding e Birth of a Nation", leaps to su-latives before because there is no er form in which it can be written. ple facts in relationship to its elopments sound extravagant until have seen the production and by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.—Adv.

PERU DAILY CHRONICLE

eru, Indiana, [redacted] 1, 1916.

HE BIRTH OF A NATION.

new theatric art invented by W. Griffith in producing The of a Nation, coming to the Wal-heatre, April 6, 7, and 8, has d him to surpass by far any spectacle. Ben Hur and The Bird were supposed to be the vater mark of such productions. sink into insignificance beside pic of American history with 00 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,-ers and 200,000 details, the re-eight months of tireless la-d the expenditure of half a dollars. The war plays of the uch Shenandoah, Held by the and Barbara Frietchie seem after seeing the splendors of rth of a Nation. In the Grif-ecatacle the scenes of sheer and strength are of Homeric r. The night riding of the x Klan looks like a company ging spectres sweeping along ulit roads. There is a pictor-sh in every scene.

realistic picture of history in ing is of untold value to both young. Besides the histori-th of this great spectacle the emotional throb of the re-story thrills the hearts of all. e supreme achievement of au-trionism in its new guise un-ed by the limitations of the

THE PERU JOURNAL

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

IT is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

1554

st.
"I
the an
tr

SENTINEL, AMSTERDAM, N.Y., APRIL 2, 1916.

156

ddin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

s a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run U to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

EFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is a reporter's notebook sketch of events, and there is a sordid of money in it.

nk of three girls still in their who are piling up annual in- s of over $100,000 in the aggre- The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae n and Miriam Cooper, who play eminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

HERALD

BRADFORD THEATRE

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Bradford Theatre Wed. and Thursday. This work, partly from nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the price cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assissination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendship between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again and in the role of romaneic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where Nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's Theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina Legislature of 1870, are exact fac-smiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that History in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the diapason of War, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall,"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitles the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the Clansman; Lilian Griggs as Elsie Stoneman, Miss Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gayle and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant respectively, George Seigmann as the mulatto Lieutenant-Colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegrade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Camphell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture-machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

Seat Sale Opens Tomorrow at 9 a. m. Adv.

FOR SALE—Baby chicks. Phone 8034 Rural. 277-3tc

GOOD Rhode Island Red eggs for setting. 50c for 15. Phone Rural 8001. Ring 12. 278-3tc

Strayed

STRAYED from Geo. Ray's Store in Factory district, one bay horse, shod all around; also one black mule. Any information will be liberally rewarded by Geo. B. Ray. Phone 1560. 278-3tp

AMERICANS ARE A NATION OF HOME BUILDERS

Let us sell you a lot on 11th street in the 1600 block. North front, and loan you the money to build a home. WHY PAY RENT?

Cravens, Maer & Walker

Kemp & Kell Building. Telephone 8

for light housekeeping. Phone 1456. 277-3tc

ROOM for rent, furnished for light house keeping. Close in. 612 Travis. 278-2tc

FOR RENT—Two nicely furnished light housekeeping rooms. 407 Travis. Phone 824. 278-3tc

FOR RENT—Two or three furnish housekeeping rooms; references exchanged. 907 Scott. Phone 2018. 277-3tp

TWO unfurnished light housekeeping rooms for rent. 1105 Bluff. Phone Moore 1287. 277-3tp

FOR RENT — Three unfurnished room, close in. Phone 1386. 77-3tc

FOR RENT—By April 3rd, two modern light housekeeping rooms, beautifully furnished, to couple only. Phone 610. 277-2tfc

FOR RENT—Two furnished light housekeeping rooms, modern. 308 Lee St., Phone 1850. 278-3tc

FOR RENT—Two light housekeeping rooms, modern, reasonable price. 307 Travis. 278-3tp

FOR RENT—Three modern rooms, very desirable, best location for summer. Phone 2095. 1011 11th St. 278-3tc

Help Wanted—Female

WANTED—White girl for general housework. Call at 704 Austin St. Phone 1296. 272-tfc

WOMAN, $30 for distributing 100 free skeins wear-proof darning cotton with hosiery, your section. Exnerience unnecessary. Inter Hosiery Mills, Dept. 400, Norristown, Pa. 277-1tp

Bargains

Extra good, well built cottage, home on 10th street, on pavement, in best part of Floral Heights, owned by non-resident, and we are instructed to get an offer on this place. You let us show you and then make an offer. We can arrange terms.

Five room, modern home, nearly new, located on 14th street, near school. Well improved and fine location. Will sacrifice for quick sale or might trade for cheaper house, clear of debt. Encumbrance $850, payable monthly.

EXTRA—Well located, large east front lot, for sale cheap. Will consider offer.

Thomas & Bland

Exclusive Agents

606 8th street . Phone 99

Kemp & Kell Building

Yesterday was an important anniversary at Electra, marking the end of the fifth year since Clayco No. 1 Putnam, the well which in a way really opened up things at Electra, was drilled in. It was the first well north of the tracks and was also the first in the 1500 foot sand and after it came in, things began to boom vigorously at Electra.

The first well to be drilled in at Electra was No. 1 Waggoner, a Producers' venture, which was completed early in November, 1909. It became known that oil had been found there, but all details were closely guarded; several additional wells were started by the Producers on the Waggoner, and at the time of the drilling in of the Clayco well, there had been six completions on the Waggoner and one on the Bywaters.

Up to that time Electra had been a fairly prosperous rural community with a population of several hundred; so small a town that when Fowlkes, Texas appeared on the map with a Bank of England.

The gold reserve in the Bank of England at the present time is estimated at about $225,000,000. There are other gold reserves of course, in the hands of other joint stock banks. One of the aims of the government is to prevent sovereigns going out of the country to keep up the reserve gold supply and to prevent the gold from reaching the enemy.

For the past six months, or even since the munition workers began to work night and day and draw great increased wages they have been melting gold coins melted for jewelry. This practice is said to have become especially noticeable in Birmingham, where many of the large jewelry manufacturers are located. There is no law against the practice of melting government moneys.

Hume Williams, a member of Parliament from Nottingham, who thinks the government ought to make it a punishable crime to melt sovereigns down to make jewelry, said:

"As the law now stands, a man c

ONE MAY BE FORGIVEN

every form of negligence save one, that of neglecting to assist in the beautifying of our local CEMETERY, by failure to erect a suitable stone.

All other cases of human forgetfulness may be forgiven and overlooked, but what can one say when we mark a grave for $5.00.

WICHITA MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS

Phone 440 A. G. Deatherage, Prop.

SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA. A THRILLING EPISODE IN D.W. GRIFFITH'S "BIRTH OF A NATION", WHICH WILL BE SEEN AT THE BRADFORD THEATRE, APRIL 5-6—WITH MATINEES DAILY

e Birth of a Nation," Gigantic Spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction Days, at Byers One Week Starting Monday Night

On its final tour of Texas this sea-n, "The Birth of a Nation" returns Byers opera house tomorrow night. e engagement this time will continue roughout the entire week. When W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle of i war and reconstruction days yed the Byers last November it yed for only three days. The rush seats was so great that two morn-g matinees in addition to the regu-afternoon matinees had to be yed, and still the theater was unable to accommodate the great throngs of amusement seekers. On the final night of the engagement the street in front of the opera house looked like political headquarters on the night of election and fully 2,000 people had to be turned away disappointed. It was because of this rush that "The Birth of a Nation" was booked this time for ay entire week.

The company presenting "The Birth o' a Nation" is identically the same in every respect that appeared here in lovember. No so much as a musician in the large symphony orchestra that travels with the organization has been changed. The engagement this time will, therefore, be of the nature of an extension of the former engagement.

This will be the last opportunity of people living in and near Fort Worth to see "The Birth of a Nation" this season. For, with the advent of warm weather, the organization is on its way back North. From Texas it goes to Oklahoma for a few weeks and then into Missouri.

War and hate are skillfully blended with love and romance in the telling of the story of "The Birth of a Nation." The gigantic spectacle is in 5,000 scenes that flit before the eyes of the spectator during the course of two and three-quarter hours, accompanied by a grand operatic score, fitted in a Wagnerian fashion to every incident of the drama.

Among the truly magnificent scenes of "The Birth of a Nation," whose like were never before exhibited in a theater in any form, are the battle of Petersburg, staged on a field five miles in extent, and involving 18,000 men in a startlingly realistic conflict; Sherman's march to the sea, culminating in the storming of Atlanta; an exact reproduction of Ford's theater, on the night of the assassination of President Lincoln, showing the crowded auditorium, the stage and the President's box and detailing every move of the saddest tragedy in American history; the session of the first South Carolina legislature elected under the influences of the carpet-baggers; and the thrilling rides of the Kuklux Klans, who rescued the South from terrors of degradation worse than death.

The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of unionist, Captain Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout "The Birth of a Nation." Never, in the most terrific scenes of the spectacle, is the romance based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," quite forgotten. In the battle of Petersburg, for example, the "little colonel" leads a thrilling charge against the command of his old school friend, Captain Stoneman, one of the brothers of Margaret Cameron falls a victim to war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. Elsie Stoneman and her brother Phil are present in Ford's theater the night of the assassination of Lincoln. It is to save the honor of his sweetheart, Elsie Stoneman, that the "little colonel" leads the Kuklux Klansmen in the most sensational ride ever staged.

The spectacle is in two parts. The first half exhibits the salient events of the civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy in Ford's theater live before the eyes of the spectator as vividly as did the actual events in the era depicted.

In the second half is shown the second uprising of the South. This time against the carpet-bagging regime. Horrors worse than those of war are enacted, and there springs up the "invisible empire" with its vast hordes of 100,000 men. The Aryan race is restored to its rights after a secret and terrible combat. It is in this half of the spectacle that Griffith tells for the first time accurately and vividly the true story of the Kuklux Klan.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Griffith utilized a full operatic score for the first time in its true relationship to the enlargement of his varied themes. It is the Wagnerian idea fitted to the screen drama, and the synchronization was so perfectly adapted to this story that it becomes a very important part of the epical form of the narrative. The score was arranged by Joseph Carl Breil, who will be remembered for his beautiful songs introduced into "The Climax." Mr. Breil spent months with Griffith while he was making the picture and caught his thematic ideas in snatches of tunes that Griffith would hum while he was working out his big dramatic ideas. Griffith, who had thoroughly saturated his mind with the history and traditions of the period of civil war and reconstruction, had not neglected the music, and his mind, which is perhaps the most poetical in the moving picture world today, found the old tunes of love and romance and war telling their part of the story. The finished score, as it came finally from the pen of Mr. Breil, is one of the most unusual ever devised. Persons around the theater who have seen the picture two or three times can readily follow the screen drama while in the lobby by listening to the music. Some enthusiastic music lovers have even expressed the opinion that the score is half the production.

159

New Orleans (La.) 3/12

PICTURE IN FOURTH WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation" in Last Week of Its Record Breaking Engagement in New Orleans.

Owing to the insistent demands of the public and the tremendous business done in New Orleans by the great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Manager Campbell has decided to keep the tremendous picture at the Tulane Theater another week. The Griffith masterpiece came here originally for two weeks, but Mr. Campbell had an option for two weeks more, and so many persons were turned away from the Tulane, unable to get seats, that he determined to exercise his option. But this will be the last week of the spectacle.

The Orpheum Theater promises another fine vaudeville bill this week, with a grand opera singer and a dramatic star sharing the place of honor. The singer is Mme. de Cisneros, late prima donna of the Chicago Opera Company. The dramatic star is Miss Julia Dean, best remembered for her work in "Paid in Full."

Tulane Theater.

Fourteen more performances of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Tulane Theater this week, beginning with the matinee and night performances today, and the engagement of the spectacle that has swayed New Orleans from tears to laughter will be brought to a close Saturday night. Except on Monday and Tuesday, hundreds were turned away at each performance last week, and three weeks of capacity business seems to have served merely as an introduction to the big film-and-music offering.

Upwards of 70,000 persons have witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tulane to date, and at the close of its four weeks' run next Saturday night the total attendance will not be far below 100,000. Never before has a theatrical offering exacted such heavy tribute from New Orleans, and never up to this time has an attraction commanding $2 for the best seats at night been presented for longer than two weeks. The Griffith masterpiece already has piled up a record that towers high above anything recorded in local theatrical annals, and the extension of its engagement for another week will widen the gap that separates it from the plays that have made up the Crescent City's regular theatrical fare.

Several special features calculated to bring the mighty historical epic within the reach of certain classes for whom it holds a strong patriotic and sentimental appeal will be introduced during the last week. Tickets entitling all Civil and Spanish war veterans, Sons and Daughters of the Confederacy, and teachers and students of the New Orleans schools, to a special price concession, have been issued, and can be had upon application at the box office. These tickets are good at the Sunday, Monday and Tuesday performances only.

Confederate veterans will be admitted free at the Monday matinee as guests of the New Orleans Rotary Club, and it is expected that hundreds of sons and daughters of the veterans will avail themselves of the special Monday prices mentioned above by accompanying the venerable warriors to the performance. Arrangements have been made by the Rotarians to have the best seats on the lower floor reserved for the veterans. A delegation of residents at the Soldiers' Home will be guests of honor, but a committee of Rotarians will be on hand to see that all wearers of the gray presenting themselves at the theater will be admitted free. Their bronze crosses of honor or any part of the Confederate uniform will serve as their identification.

The advance sale of seats for the remaining performances was begun Saturday, and the rush was the heaviest recorded since the opening of the first advance sale Thursday morning, March 9. But there still is a good selection for all performances, and early comers will experience no difficulty in obtaining seats of any particular price or location. It is well understood now that "The Birth of a Nation" is not a mere motion picture show, but a vast spectacle depicting the salient events of two stormy periods of American history. It is the South's own story of the war and reconstruction, picturized in 12,000 feet of film, and synchronized to a symphony score of rare beauty. The musical accompaniment is played by an orchestra of thirty, and, altogether, the services of fifty persons are employed in each presentation. Among the historical characters shown are President Lincoln, General Robert E. Lee and General U. S. Grant, and in the reproduction of the battle of Petersburg 18,000 men and 3000 horses are seen in action.

BIRTH OF A NATION
FOURTH WEEK at the TULANE

FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA—TO BE SHOWN AT WICHITA THEATRE APRIL 10, 11, and 12

April 3 1916

THE BRADFORD ERA,

THE BRADFORD THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" Wednesday and Thursday with Daily Matinee.

The official biographer of David W. Griffith, the great motion picture producer, asked for some data and got the answer that "he was born in Kentucky, that he grew up in a house like most boys; started out after his school and college days to find his place in the world, and that since he went into the business of producing pictures he has lived most of the time under his hat."

Strangely reticent about his personal affairs, the creator of "The Birth of a Nation" (when you know him) has one of the most interesting personalities in the world.

Few men owe more to their parents than the famous director does to Brigadier General Jacob W. Griffith and Mrs. Mary Perkins Griffith. The father held distinguished command in the Southern army. He died when D. W. Griffith was but a lad, nevertheless the sixth sense of military strategy that the boy inherited and the vivid depiction of Civil War campaigns that General Griffith used to tell have remained ever with the son. Mrs. Griffith, the mother, was David's best friend. She gave him a good education, schooled him in the old-fashioned chivalry of Kentucky, and watched his welfare and progress with a whole-hearted love and devotion. Mrs. Griffith lived long enough to see her son achieve fame.

He wanted to be an actor or a dramatist, but he did not quite know which. A stock company director named Oscar Eagle gave him his first job at Macauley's theatre, Louisville, from which post he drifted to New York and alternated between playing parts and writing plays. The row of a new playright is hard to hoe, so after one of the early partly successful attempts young Griffith attached himself as utility actor at $5.00 a day to the Biograph studio. Soon they were taking small scenarios from him, and when one of the directors got sick they allowed Griffith to make a one reel picture. His new ideas of the "close up," "fade out," "switch back," and "parallel action," revolutionized the technical side of photographic acting. His choice of talent in this field was likewise almost uncanny, so that in five years time he developed a majority of the motion picture actors and actresses who are justly eminent today. Furthermore, he had the literary sense and beside using the stock dramatic material of the routine motion picture director, he invaded poetry, fiction and standard literature for his subjects. The union of these three diverse talents, together with marvellous executive ability, made him the greatest motion picture director in the world

Bradford Era April 3

D. W. GRIFFITH,
Producer of "The Birth of a Nation" to be seen at Bradford Theatre Wednesday and Thursday, April 5-6.

THE ILLINOIS STATE JOURNAL SPRINGFIELD APRIL 3

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AGAIN DRAWS CROWDS

GRIFFITH SPECTACLE TO SHOW IN CITY THREE MORE DAYS.

Griffith stupendous film spectacle, "Birth of a Nation" at his opening performance yesterday at the Chatterton theatre on its return engagement was welcomed by large crowds both at the matinee and night performances. It is believed that the production will duplicate the great record made when it was shown in Springfield the first time, when crowds were turned away from each performance.

Special inducements to students have been made by the management of the Chatterton during the engagement of the "Birth of a Nation." One price of fifty cents will be made to students, so that every school pupil in Springfield can have an opportunity of witnessing this great feature.

The same company and the same orchestra, which is the original New York orchestra for the production are again with this picture.

The story of the film is known by almost everyone in Springfield. It is based on the Civil war for most of the first part culminating in a victory for the north. The assassination of Abraham Lincoln is shown at the close of the first part. The second part deals with reconstruction days in the south and based on Thomas Dixon story, "The Clansman."

The musiv for the picture alone is well worth the price of admission. A twenty piece orchestra ably handles the music written for the picture by Carl Joseph Briele. Many of the different selections played have been hummed and whistled since the production was here the first time.

The "Birth of a Nation" will be presented today, tomorrow and Wednesday. Two performances will be given daily. One matinee and one night performance. Those wishing desirable seats are urged to make their reservations early, as large crowds are expected from out of the city during the local engagement.

THE SURRENDER OF GENERAL LEE AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT CHATTERTON

"TURN OF THE ROAD" IS LYRIC OFFERING

VIRGINIA PEARSON, BOBBY CONNELLY AND OTHERS ARE STARS.

BARRYMORE FINE IN "LOST BRIDEGROOM"

SHOWED TO CROWDED HOUSES AT EACH PERFORMANCE YESTERDAY.

H. B. WARNER AT CHAT IN "THE BAIDE

GRIFFITH PRODUCTION ST WHO MADE "JIMMY ENTINE" FAMOU

APR 3 1916

FORT WORTH RECORD

THE PET SISTER IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Miss Mae Marsh.

Mae Marsh, who plays the little pet sister, Flora Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation," lives near Los Angeles, Cal. One day she went with her older sister, Marguerite, who is also a film actress, to the studio of D. W. Griffith. Mr. Griffith glanced carelessly at the little, ugly, freckled-faced child, and saw something in the wistful, pathetic face that arrested his attention. The little girl smiled, and Griffith saw there were tears back of the smile. He took a fancy to the girl instantly and gave her a small part in a picture he then had under way. Under his guidance, the little girl has developed into the most appealing actress in the entire length and breadth of the phantom stage. She can put more feeling into a smile or a little twitch of the lips than a novelist can in a whole chapter of feminine psychology. In "The Birth of a Nation," little Miss Marsh, without any apparent effort, brings the handkerchiefs from the pockets to the eyes of the strongest man. There seems to be no effort to act—just a little bit of feminine woe that nobody can withstand.

SPRINGFIELD NEWS-RECORD

LARGE CROWDS SEE "BIRTH OF NATION"

D. W. GRIFFITH'S MASTERPIECE IS AGAIN SHOWING AT CHATTERTON

In plays of the modern drama, it has often been proved that the representations of historical events always were the most popular in the opinion of theater-goers. This is emphasized in "The Birth of a Nation," one great spectacle of the new dramatic art.

The picture showed to great audiences at the Chatterton theater Sunday, when it started its return engagement of four days at the theater. It will also be shown matinee and night, today, tomorrow, and Wednesday.

D. W. Griffith, author of "The Birth of A Nation," brought forth the most impressive drama that has ever been seen by the American public. All critics concede that. That he exhibited great wisdom in selecting for his subject the history of the Civil war has never been questioned. It is the most grossing page in the history of this country, and the picture clearly shows to be.

When the production was seen here at its previous visit to the Chatterton theater, many persons who witnessed it were suprised at the stupendous spectacles which were staged. It is being shown here this time identically the same as before, with the same big New York orchestra. In fact, the same organization in every detail is handling the picture on its return visit.

ILLINOIS STATE REGISTER

FAMOUS FILM IS CROWD MAGNET

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS CAPACITY HOUSES

Sunday Appearances Are Greeted By Throng—Returns Engagement Offers Same Orchestra and Accompaniments as First.

"The Birth of a Nation," which early in January played an engagement of fifteen performances at the Chatterton theatre, returned to the North Sixth street playhouse yesterday and was greeted with a capacity audience in the afternoon and a heavy attendance in the evening.

The film, orchestra and other things is just the same as during the previous engagement. After hearing the opinions of the spectators who attended the matinee and night performances it is safe to say Griffith's masterpiece brings more pleasure and amusement the second time than when seen for the first time.

This gigantic photo-spectacle will remain at the Chatterton theatre until Wednesday night, with daily matinees. The advance seat sale is large. Special excursions will be operated on several roads. The C., P. & St. L. has a special train from Havana tonight, while the B. & O. offers special rates from Pana and intermediate stations Tuesday night. The other roads and the traction system will handle the delegations with special equipment.

"The Birth of a Nation" was produced by David Griffith, and some of the points of the story follow:

Poet-Leader Dreams.

Among our fathers lived a poet-leader who dreamed a new vision of humanity—that out of the conflicting interests and characters of the thirteen American states, stretching their territories from the frosts of the north to the tropic jungles of Florida, there could be built one mighty people. For eighty years this vision remained a dream—sectionalism and disunity the grimest realities of our life.

Lord Cornwallis, the British commander, had surrendered at Yorktown, Va., to the allied armies of the kingdom of France and the original thirteen states, by name—New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. Through seventy-five years of growth and conflict these states clung to their individual sovereignty, feeling with jealous alarm the slow but resistless growth of a national spirit within the body of the Federal Union. This new being was stirred at last into conscious life by Daniel Webster's immortal words—"Liberty and Union, one and inseparable, now and forever!"

A Nation is Born.

The issue, which our fathers had not dared to face—whether the State or the Union should ultimately have supreme rule—was joined in 1861 over the problem of the negro.

The South held with passionate conviction that we were a republic of republics, each state free and sovereign. The North, under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln, held that the Union was indestructible and its sovereignty supreme.

Until Lincoln's day the right of each state to peaceful secession was scarcely disputed, north or south. New England had more than once threatened to withdraw long before South Carolina in her blind rage led the way.

And yet unconsciously the new being within had grown into a living soul, in the mortal agony of four years of civil war and eight years or more horrible reconstruction, a nation was born.

The Play's Message of Peace.

If this graphic presentment serves no other purpose its message for universal peace marks it of great importance. Morally and educationally it establishes the futility of armed conflict. A member of the senate of the United States expressed the following sentiment:

"Anyone contemplating war should see this picture," added the senator. "I sincerely believe it will do more to deter people from engaging in war than anything written or spoken on the subject in years."

Great care has been taken not to glorify battle. Even the music stops in its motif of glorification to sound the note of terror and desolation which is the real truth of war.

Armies seldom settle disputed questions of state. But where they accomplish this much, in the wake of conflict, arises newer and more terrible questions. But for the hatred engendered in the civil war, the suffering of the reconstruction period never would have been known.

DAILY TIME, FLORENCE, S. C.,

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

A great deal of a film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the O'Dowd Theatre, Florence, for three nights beginning Monday, April 10th., with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, proves that refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure re" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaslustomed.

ORANGEBURG, S. C.,

GREAT PLAY OF FILMDOM HERE TONIGHT

No other industry in the same given time ever grew as rapidly in America as the business enterprises that are commonly classified as motion picture industries. In capital invested and financial returns from those inventions the moving picture is now the fifth greatest combination in America.

The thing began as a five cent enterprise. In ten years' time it has steadily grown until today great institutions all over the land are devoted to the manufacture of moving pictures. Millions are invested in some of the finest theatres in the world. Hundreds of thousands find employment in the different branches of the work. Even high finance has taken notice of the once lowly "movie" and films are now a common stock for dealings on the great exchanges of the country. The one man who has done more than all others to dignify the new form of art is David Wark Griffith, whose tireless energy and art are responsible for the first $2 moving picture "The Birth of a Nation." It is estimated that before this great production has exhausted its earning capacity it will be seen by ten million people in America. Later on it will exceed these figures in the other countries of the world. It is conservatively estimated the big attraction will ultimately earn over eight million dollars. Not a bad income on an original investment of $500,000. This prospect stamps "The Birth of a Nation" the greatest piece of theatrical property the current century has brought forth if not the greatest winner of all ages.

This wonderful photoplay will be presented at the Academy of Music this evening, and again tomorrow and Wednesday. The advance sale has been greater than for any attraction ever booked at the Academy and the audience will be made up of, not only of local theatregoers, but visitors from the cities and towns in this section of the state.

TIMES-PICAYUNE, MONDAY, APRIL 3,

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" BEGINS ITS FOURTH AND LAST WEEK HERE

With two hundred or more Confederate veterans in attendance as guests of the New Orleans Rotary Club, the Monday matinee performance of "The Birth of a Nation" should establish a new record for enthusiasm at the Tulane. The veterans will attend in full uniform, assembling in the arcade at 1:30 p. m. to obtain their tickets from a committee of Rotarians who will be on hand to receive them. Each will be admitted on his Cross of Honor.

It was a happy thought on the part of Benjamin C. Brown, the president, and other active members of the club, in arranging the theater party for the wearers of the gray. Only they can appreciate the realism of the scenes shown in the Griffith masterpiece in which they themselves were actors more than fifty years ago. As many of the veterans at the Soldiers' Home who are physically able will be brought to the Tulane this afternoon in a special car. Special rates have been arranged for the wives and daughters of the veterans, and, in fact, everything has been done to give the Monday matinee the aspect of a real Confederate reunion.

Seats are selling fast for the fourth and last week of the record-breaking run of "The Birth of a Nation" in New Orleans.

Gathering of the Ku Klux Klan, "The Birth of a Nation," Opera House, Monday and Tuesday, April 10-11. Matinee Tuesday.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil war and reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Grand, April 10-11, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen.

Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State.

The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all its cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

April 3

THE SUMTER DAILY ITEM

Big Battle at Petersburg. Big Scene in D. W. rGiffith's "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, 3 Nights Beginning Thursday, April 6th. Matinees Friday and Saturday.

April 3

HISTORICAL ACCURACY [illegible] "THE BIRTH OF A [illegible]

Among all the film actors [illegible] historical characters in "The [illegible] of a Nation" spectacle to be [illegible] the Wichita Theatre, April [illegible] and 12 Howard Gaye and [illegible] Crisp have received the most [illegible] ments on the faithfulness of [illegible] work, the one as General [illegible] Lee and the other as General [illegible] Grant.

The picture shows Gen[illegible] surrendering to General Grant [illegible] Wilmer-McLean mansion at [illegible] ttox Court House, Va., April [illegible] It is a most faithful reproduc[illegible] all of the personages in the [illegible] historic scene and of the minute [illegible] tails of the action.

It is well known that many [illegible] porters of the defeated Confe[illegible] wished to prolong the struggle [illegible] means of a guerilla warfare [illegible] to that used by the Boers towards [illegible] close of the Anglo-Boer war [illegible] fact John Wilkes Booth supposed [illegible] in killing President Lincoln [illegible] would have the support of the [illegible] on a new struggle. But Grant [illegible] was of a digerent temper. He [illegible] fied that the South had been [illegible] in a fair struggle on the [illegible] battle and that prolonging the [illegible] ing would merely add to the [illegible] and miseries endured by its [illegible] Therefore after the Battle of [illegible] Forks, he opened negotiations [illegible] Grant and on the morning of [illegible] 9th under the building [illegible] of an Appomattox orchard [illegible] termined the terms of peace [illegible] were formally written down [illegible] Wilmer-McLean house in the [illegible] noon.

Lee had dressed for his [illegible] the occasion with great care [illegible] on the contrary jacked his [illegible] dress and appeared in the [illegible] and dusty jack boots of the [illegible] campaign. Strangely enough Gen[illegible] al Lee had no pencil to write [illegible] A pocket ink stand and pen [illegible] lent by an officer of the general [illegible] and it was with these that the [illegible] toric document of surrender [illegible] written. Afterwards an effort [illegible] made to arrest and indict Lee [illegible] treason, but Grant, who had [illegible] nobility of character and be[illegible] had fulfilled to the letter [illegible] surrender obligations, [illegible] any such disgraceful [illegible] great event.

Southern Plantation Scene in D. W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation, which comes to the Wallace, April 6, 7 and 8th.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

D. W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation is decidedly the most remarkable spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the Wallace theatre next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foot hills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion pictures, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's The Clansman and The Leopard Spots, it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theatre at every performance.

TIMES, AMSTERDAM, N. Y.

April 13, 14 and 15.

e new theatric art invented by d W. Griffith in producing "The h of a Nation," coming to the terdam Theater for three days,
l 13, 14 and 15, with matinees
Friday and Saturday has enabled to surpass by far any spectacle.
n Hur" and "The Blue Bird" e supposed to be the high-water k of such proportions. They sink insignificance beside this epic
American history with its 5,000 es, 18,000 characters, 3,000 rid-and 200,000 details, the result ight months of tireless labor and expenditure of half a million lars.

The war plays of the stage such as henandoah," "Held by the enemy"
d "Barbara Freitchie" seems tame er seeing the splendors of "The rth of a Nation." In the Griffith ctacle the scenes of sheer beauty d strength are of Homeric grand-
r. The night riding of the Ku ux Klan looks like a company of nging spectres sweeping along moonlit roads. There is a pic-al punch in every scene.

This realistic picture of history the making is of untold value to th young and old. Besides the torical worth of this great specta-the constant emotional throb of romantic story thrills the hearts
all. It is the supreme achieve-of modern histrionism in its w guise untrammelled by the limtions of the theater.

The sale of seats will open at the eater box office on Monday, April th, and the prices will be 25c to
.00 for the evening performances.
ail orders will be received if acmpanied by check.

Bradford (Pa) Era 4/4

In "The Birth of a Nation," Bradford Theater Monday and Tuesday, April 13-14.

President Lincoln signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. A dramatic scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Laird opera house Wednesday and Thursday, April 13. Matinee Thursday at 2:15.

Dallasville (Pa) Herald 4/14

Joseph Henabery as Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," Opera House, Monday and Tuesday, April 10-11. Matinee Tuesday.

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectable, "The Birth of a Nation," was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small, but interesting detail of the president reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a spring day in Washington, April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation," showing the war president, is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious states. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tried to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appomattox surrender the leader of congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the south for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away," is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later comes the awful tradegdy in Ford's theatre, Washington, when southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the Assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great President, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization.

Dunkirk N.Y. Evening Star 4/4

"The Birth of a Nation," great deal of film comedy is -play, but David W. Griffith in Birth of a Nation," which comes e Academy of Music for three beginning Thursday, April 6th, es Friday and Saturday, proves uiet refined comedy is a big maker and pleases people bet-an the old style crude methods.
of the best laughs in "The Birth ation" is the lovesick sentry in spital scene gazing at Elsie nan. This particular bit is of ure fire" order, for never does lience miss the rapt devotion of atinel and the haughty expres-the young lady rebuking him million-miles-away look.

LeBlanc is the name of the actor who has made the und hit in the part. He is a New Creole by birth and played roles with Mme. Bernhardt going out to Los Angeles where iffith discovered him. The ing of the young soldier is fully accurate to the period of ome of the recent Civil War in the magazines and news-are almost doublets of this gure, showing what care has used in reproducing the r type.

Lillian Gish wears her cos-f Civil War and Reconstruces that are heirlooms in her Through Griffith's skill all rs in the production are appear as if to the manner d not awkwardly moving habiliments to which they are omed.—Advt.

OIL CITY BLIZZARD,

Bradford (Pa) Era 4/4

"MOVIES" AND THEATER.

OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Manager Pease has secured for his patrons a return engagement of this wonderful picture for Friday and Saturday of next week, April 14 and 15. It is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the two hours and 45 minutes' performance. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the states and the reconstruction of the Southland. Some faint idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor drama" cost half a million dollars.

SENTINEL, AMSTERDAM, N. Y.

"The Birth of a Nation."

An early attraction at the Amsterdam Theater will be D. W. Griffith's wonderful production "The Birth of a Nation," which begins its engagement on Thursday, April 13. This mighty spectacle has turned the theater records of America topsy-turvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not so much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression with an operatic accompaniment, in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothing like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished again until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

The sale of seats opens at the theater box office on Monday, April 10. Matinee prices 25c to $1.00; evening prices 25c to $2.00.

Hazelton (Pa) Plain Spy

"The Birth of a Nation."

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a two days' engagement next Wednesday evening at the Laird opera house. The first-class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people.

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny "armies" of the theatric boards. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five far-flung battle lines of many many miles, and Ku Klux "rides" right out in the open, which surpass in thrills any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a "short cast" drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process, the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of out-door nature, his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art-form of drama-spectacle with music.

New Orleans La. 4/4

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

THIS HISTORICAL PHOTOPLAY OF RECONSTRUCTION IN THE SOUTH IS NOW BEING SHOWN AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC

Orangeburg Paper

Film Play At Academy Great One

The initial presentation of D. W. Griffith's wonderful film play, "The Birth Of A Nation," was seen at the Academy of Music last evening by a crowded house. For about three hours the audience sat spellbound with the wonderful spectacular photoplay the scenes of which were so true to the days of reconstruction so well remembered by many who sat in the audience. The production was the most stupendous ever offered the theatregoing public of this city and the words of praise which were heard in connection with the play were loud and numerous. From a time prior to the civil war, on through the four years of that terrible struggle, and though the horrible days of reconstruction which followed, the picture true to the facts of history portrayed the leading events which went to make up the true historical facts of that time.

The picture was loudly applauded from time to time. In fact the applause was more vigorous at times than has ever been heard at the Academy at a production of any kind.

The orchestra of fifteen pieces plays music which synchronized with the picture.

The play is one which should be seen by all. It is a masterly production well worth the praise which has been given by the press and public throughout the nation.

Wichita Times
Wichita Falls Texas 4/4

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GIVES STRIKING CONTRA

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's most uncanny gift of contrast. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he studied perspective, composition, harmony or not, but anyhow his pictures to my mind have the quality as those of the great artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scene of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation." The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by contrasting two stages with rising ground near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the first stage, then comes the hollow and finally the more remote features of the background. The second or more remote distance is the ultimate distance fading into blackness, contrasting with the gaudy robes and uniforms of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer like the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Flowers.

In striking contrast is the treatment in "The Birth of a Nation" of the contrasting theme of misery of war. Wan children and figures are selected. That from of many lands and nations are suggestive of grime and squalor. Some of the lean emaciated are bare to the waist. Many women are strewed about the piled up victims of the war. Arms are raised in entreaty to heaven. Bodies, legs and arms are were shreds of human flesh inextricably used. Utter despair itself upon that picture and radiates from the other methods of making it a clever artist to nickname it "human salad." But that is what impresses the spectator with the mighty thought the emotional appeals in the wonderful bizarre effects.

typ
bea and piquancy.
are singul
ing conv
femina
Perh
the e she err

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

arsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says he'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acires a Husband.

W do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and do it till you are middle aged, ry and rear a family, releas- from your grasp and finding quiet, secluded country home? bad, you say, for some book- dual who isn't attractive any- hasn't a chance at the sweets But utterly preposterous for the gods have favored with and talents, vivacity and ell. Now I give you three s to who has laid out this am for herself. No, it's not professor of mathematics; ter on "The Parallelism Be- orphology and Characterol- even a suffragette; but a y young person by the name arsh, idol of 2,000,000 screen girl who figures so thrilling- Birth of a Nation," running e through the landscape and ff the cliff to escape her pur-

Busy For Love Affairs.

Little Mae Marsh, the blue golden haired, the adored, ed, the pursued. The girl id Griffith calls the Bern- e movies because she puts rical temperament into ten than lots of 'em do in ten The girl who has no "up mer, no airs, no egotism, no boots, no lip rouge. time old question of per- d the stage is still up for those of the opposing side not to see Miss Marsh if ent on keeping up their argument, for at the first after a minute's conver- one must recognize that om California is the rep- loving, lovable, earnest, e sister immortalized in s great civil war play. In ce, she is scarcely older even now, when she is ng distance of her twen-he same dignity that just g prinness and that same and vivacity, that same repression and expression that make the girl of the dorable and that go so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that have characterized any play on stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been, "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now the very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now give me sensible togs, lots of work and a typewriter to compose plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage, or, rather, it would have taken courage, had I been of a wavering disposition."

She is still frail looking and still slender, but graceful as a fawn and with some of that pretty creature's characteristics—the quick intelligence, quick movements, alertness, and when she is off guard, when she forgets she is being interviewed, when she is not constantly reminded by the whispers and stares of passersby that she is a heroine of the films, she is entirely natural. Apropos of that, she says it is on the screen that she is really her most natural self and that it is in conventional life she finds herself acting.

"I suppose," she says, "that sort of subconsciously I have the idea that I must show a difference in my manner, but I have done so much of the picture work and so thrown myself heart and soul into it that it is really difficult for me to separate myself from it."

"But"—with the little quizzical look that suggests laughter and tears and other things at the same time—"I suppose it's that way with every one who makes any sort of success out of what he undertakes, though my work is really nothing more than play to me, because I am so enthusiastic about it. I shall be perfectly content to be a moving picture actress all my days; that is"—hastily—"provided I can continue to live in California.

"I wrote Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working, I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty, and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

"I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully, only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake. I was at school at the Sacred Heart Convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried: 'Oh, don't! Don't, sister! I won't do it again.' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to get us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures, and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Appleple Mary in 'Home, Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and the Law,' or 'Toleerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother of the same age I am now, twenty, and it is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr. Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is the most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children."

The conversation shifted, [illegible] faith, finally to faith in prayer.

"When I have prayed for anything I have always gotten it," again Mae Marsh was seriousness itself—"provided I was good."

Florence (SC) 4/8

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the O'Dowd Theatre, Florence, for three nights beginning April 10th, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures the times that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached with levity. It is not a comedy, unless the word comedy be used as it was by Dante and Balac. It is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature in those days. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle, comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

A typical Southern home is shown where all is of good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A young Northern lad is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds there is pure comedy. A few months later they are destined to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each others arms.

Then there is shown the young daughter of the old Southern family: almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Later is seen her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps to her death from a high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy nevertheless.

Again there is a scene in "the negro quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for amusement of the Northern visitors. They dance the music, buck and wing, and other steps to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw."

When the Cameron's are besieged by a mob frenzied negro soldiers, in the cabin of two Union soldiers a time when tragedy looms over the scene like a dread spectre, the audience goes into convulsions of laughter when the faithful old negro mamy hits a negro soldier on the head with a billet of wood. And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shades of life in striking contrast to the more sombre scenes. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times, for tragedy follows comedy ever.—Adv.

Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," Opera House, Monday and Tuesday, April 10 and 11. Matinee Tuesday.

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Grand opera house Monday and Tuesday, April 10 and 11, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner," who led congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole [illegible] era is the task of Miss Lillian [illegible] Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden [illegible] blond type which makes for [illegible] graphic beauty. She is [illegible] graceful and her features [illegible] their piquancy in in [illegible] scenes. The eyes before the [illegible] are most expressive. The [illegible] veys sincerity as well as true [illegible] charm—at least so the New [illegible] thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (two being sisters) are [illegible] actresses of the studio where [illegible] Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the war and reconstruction epic. [illegible] Stoneman figures in [illegible] scenes from the early war [illegible] end of reconstruction and [illegible] riage to Ben, Lillian Gish had [illegible] an idle moment.

Bradford (Pa) Era — 4/5

A BIG BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," BRADFORD THEATRE, APRIL 8-9-10. MATINEE DAILY.

R 4/5

OIL CITY BLIZZARD,

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen on return engagement next Friday and Saturday, April 14 and 15.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil war and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly ideal quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. Its enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the state, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theater at every performance.

New Orleans (La) Times Picayune 4/5

Tulane Theater.

Teachers and students have been conspicuous in the audiences at the Tulane Theater since the opening of the record-breaking engagement of "The Birth of a Nation." The line of waiting patrons has been virtually unbroken since the first week, and while it has included playgoers of all ages and types, there has been an unusually large number who are not classed as regular theater patrons. Many students have come with textbooks under their arms. It is this strong appeal to all classes that has made "The Birth of a Nation" a wildfire success everywhere.

FORT WORTH RECORD. APRIL 5, 1917

Wizards of Silent Drama

MAE MARSH—
As Flora Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand Theatre, April 12, 13, and 14th.

...ed in "The Birth of a Na...
...tion."

...Marsh, who plays the role of ...meron in "The Birth of a ...which comes to the Academy ...for three nights, matinees ...y, April 6th, matinees Fri...Saturday, is known all over ...try as the girl with a thou...es. Her remarkable rise ...tion in the motion picture ...Maude Adams holds in the ...drama is due to the marvelous ...in which D. W. Griffith, the ...producer, has stalled her ge...and brought out every latent ...

Miss Marsh has only been in ...two years but she has already ...the top of the ladder. A few ...ago she came to the Griffith ...watch her older sister work. ...raw and undeveloped but ...keen eye saw great possibili...eath the surface of her anx...and mobile countenance. He...a half-grown girl for a work ...finishing and he adapted her ...has the most likable role in ...thousands of characters that ...the Griffith masterpiece. The ...oyous note of youth in the ...markable drama the film has ...dded.

...lenced actors always have a ...praise, sincere and emphatic, ...little lass who plays the young ...this appealing story. This ...a girl can express almost any ...the feminine mind can group ...played tombys and heroines, ...ptive girls and athletic girls. ...t frightens her when Griffith ...ting. Today her face is better ...than any actress in the world ...is the pet of movie fans in ...arter of the globe.—Adv.

...TH OF A NATION"

...Can be Used Only for the Performance For Which They ...Sold.

...ets for "Birth of a Nation" can ...d only for performance and ...old. Do not make a mistake ...umber on tickets now on sale.

...34—Thursday night.
...35—Friday matinee.
...36—Friday night.
...37—Saturday matinee.
...38—Saturday night.
...ormance at matinee starts at ...m.; night performance 8:15 p. ...atrons are requested to be in ...seats on time, so as to get ...and not disturb others.

...chita Falls
...Times
...4-

...AN'S MARCH TO SEE ...IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

...the most wonderful of the ...wonderful scenes pictured in ...Birth of a Nation" is that ...erman's march in the ...rning of the city of Atlanta ...if you can a view of a ...valley extending for miles ...y between the hills. ...this valley in struggling ...or lack of formation, is the ...of General Sherman. The ...extensive that the soldiers ...t little larger than ants. ...otograph is so clear that ...each man is perfectly ...

...and then a puff of smoke ...return fire ...ildings. Now and then ...in evident retaliation ...bullet from its ...f human ants ...wriggling its way ...towards its goal ...ta is reached. Whether ...of the city was ...y or whether the ...s of accidental arson ...f the time fall to ...was sacrificed to the ...conflagaration ...ctured in "The Birth of a ...at one can almost ...and hear the cries of the ...people as they flee ...

...r lives. Few ...to save household ...their haste ...and the hated Yankees ...s they rush ...hildren, an endless ...fear and ...

...nan's army has ...through the ...Another link ...chain that shall ...y to the stake. ...n made in the ...to end at ...with the surrender ...a wonderful ...Nothing like it ...on the screen ...ount of ...to stage such a ...

OIL CITY BLIZZARD,

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen on a return engagement next Friday and Saturday, April 14 and 15.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil war and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theater at every performance.

OIL CITY DERRICK

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theater—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil war and the horrors of reconstruction are made to live again and the nation reborn is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of 50 years ago. 1t

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of [illegible] birth, just as Miss Cooper is a [illegible] erner, her native State being Ohio. [illegible] a time in her early girlhood she [illegible] her sister Dorothy, also famous [illegible] moving picture world, lived in [illegible] souri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, [illegible] fame on the stage as a dancer and [illegible] came a member of the ballet in [illegible] Sarah Bernhardt's production [illegible] was introduced to D. W. Griffith [illegible] ducer of "The Birth of a Nation," [illegible] Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith [illegible] recognized her talent and [illegible] moted her in picture after picture [illegible] til he finally cast her in her present [illegible] of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

eat Scenic Production Will Appear at Wallace, April 6, 7 and 8th.

Many of the critics who have been rnest in their exactions of Ameri- dramatists announce their belief t D. W. Griffith has "put over" the at American play at last. Mr. ffith's wonderful spectacle drama, he Birth of a Nation," referred to unique offering at the Wallace ater, April 6, 7 and 8th, with mati- s Friday and Saturday.

For many years American drama- s wrote able plays of particular ene from "The Birth of a Nation" at the Wallace Theater, April 6, 7, 8.

es, cities or localities, ranging "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" from "Way Down East" to "The t Divide." But no one man ed to grasp the whole spirit and s of America until David Wark ith picked a suggestion for his e out of Dixon's "The Leopard's " and the "Clansman" and start- develop it.

remarkable thing about Mr. th's plan is that words (except eaders and titles) did not enter it. Perhaps words had cramped r than aided previous fictionists dramatists. At any rate, he re- d speech by music, and the old- oned stage action and scenery by ictorialized action of thousands ayers in the great Out-of-Doors. ef, he staged the great battles, gles and critical events of 1861-70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The results of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music and mechanical effects in to a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh,, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton, and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Mail orders will be received now if accompanied by money order and self-addressed stamped envelope.

The regular box office sale will start Monday, April 3rd.

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run U to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is st a reporter's notebook sketch of tual events, and there is a sorth end of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their ens who are piling up annual in ses of over $[illegible] in the [illegible] ne. The girls are Lillian Gish, Ma arsh and Miriam Cooper, who play e feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's [illegible] etch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his sole direction. Mae Marsh is that rare and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and lovely far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion pictures screen in America. She has been in the films now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,[illegible] a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the sullen blonde of Lillian Gish.

AMSTERDAM EVENING RECORDER 4/6

"The Birth of a Nation."

The next attraction at the Amsterdam theatre will be D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birthday of a Nation." The engagement begins on Thursday, April 13 and is for three nights and two matinees, Friday and Saturday.

This is the great production which is still making a record run of over 600 performances in New York city where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over two million people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the east. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of a half a million dollars.

The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme but a myriad of details illumine the narrative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an operatic score which carries recurrent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of forty travels with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has built his story. The conflict which this question caused is reproduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things which are a part of war.

The sale of seats opens at the theatre box office on Monday morning and the prices for the matinees are 25c to $1.00; evening prices 25c to $2.

SUMTER DAILY ITEM 4/6

"The Birth of a Nation."

Optical experts responsible for the perfect results of "The Birth of a Nation" projection at the Liberty Theatre, New York, have arrived in Sumter and started work at Academy of Music. The same scientific methods will be used in "The Birth of a Nation" engagement here. To the rear of the orchestra stalls, masons have laid a concrete base, above which steel workers have built a steel framework for the picture booth, thus assuring the picture machines' perfect rigidity and steadiness. The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focusing. They have likewise selected by means of eye-tests those locations in the house which will afford an optometrically perfect view of the film spectacle. Such seats are in the centre and rear of the ground floor and command $2 prices. Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted. Its complete success in New York shows the marvelous progress of picturized drama from the status of a toy to the eminence of an art. "The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Academy of Music for three nights beginning Thursday, April 6th. Matinees Friday and Saturday.—Advt.

Greenville (S.C.) Piedm. 4/6

Miriam Cooper as Margaret Cameron in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" coming to Laird opera house Wednesday and Thursday, April 12-13. Matinee Thursday at 2:15 p. m. ry Walthall as Leader of the Ku Klux Clansman in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy of Music, Three Nights, beginning Thursday, April th. Matinees Friday and Saturday.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

EYES THAT REGISTER ON THE SCREEN.—THE PICTURE SENSATION OF THE TIMES.

"Three little maids from school," eighteen, nineteen and twenty—are the heroines of "The Birth of a Nation" because their eyes register on that elusve strip of celluloid known as film, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper are the "Three Little Maids." It was David W. Griffith who discovered this talented trio. He first gave them a searching eye examination as carefully as an optician might do. After he had assured himself that their eyes would register he took up for him the easy task of teaching them to act. That part was more easy, for after all he did not want them to act but to be natural.

The important thing is that they got heir big chance because their eyes registered. Why it is that some people's eyes "take" better than others cannot be explained. It s an elusive thing that the cinema camera requires of its objects. Poets might rhapsodize over the most beautiful eyes in the world and yet those very eyes might not register on the screen Many a prominent stage star has been a failure in pictures for this very reason. The camera is merciless. It has no respect for histrionic reputations. It has been said that for an actress to acquire the technique to play Juliet she must be so old that it is difficult for her to look the part. To be Juliet on the screen one must have youth. The camera will not stand for shams.

That is why Griffith makes his own stars. In three principal feminine roles in "The Birth of a Nation" he had to have youth. That is why he took Mae March and Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper. They had youth and beauty and soul. Griffith did the rest, and so today the "Three Little Maids" are drawing salaries that sound fabulous—more than $100,000 in the aggregate.

This picture appears at the O'Dowd Theatre for three nights, beginning Monday, April 10th., with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

Indianapolis News 2 Tribune 4/6

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," to be at the Wichita Theatre April 10, 11 and 12, was coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the war President, is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his Cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

After the Appomattox surrender the is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeosuly uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black, who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appotomax surrender the leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the South for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away!" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great President, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization.

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

DARLINGTON THEATRE

3 Nights, beginning Thursday, April 13

Matinees Friday and Saturday

Seats now selling at Witcover's Store Phone

PERU DAILY CHRONICLE

Peru, Indiana, April 6, 1916.

The Birth Of A Nation.

Great Moving Drama Starting at the Wallace Tonight and Running Three Nights.

A play within a play is a bit of dramatic construction which has often been utilized by dramatists since the play became an institution. Perhaps the earliest and most prominent utilization of this constructive detail as far as the English speaking stage is concerned is the player scene in Hamlet which Shakespeare uses as an effective part of the earlier development of his tragic plot.

Nothing of this sort has ever been revealed upon so pretentious a plan as is shown in David W. Griffith's motion picture drama The Birth of a Nation, which comes to the Wallace theatre for three days starting tonight. Griffith's scene is the reproduction in historic and dramatic detail of Ford's theatre, Washington, D. C., on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth before the eyes of a gala audience gathered on that occasion to celebrate the close of the Civil War.

This scene is one of the tense dramatic moments in a story that is astonishing for its thrilling action. The drama is a complete story within itself and yet is a vital part of the entire story which is covered in the larger plan of the spectacle. From a technical viewpoint it is one of the most interesting achievements in the annals of the American stage.

In this research the fundamentals were furnished by Nicoloy and Hay's "Abraham Lincoln, a History." It will be recalled that the writers served as secretaries to President Lincoln and were in close touch with the stirring events of that period. A detail showing the thoroughness of the work is the picture of Booth's leap from the presidential box after he had fired the fatal shot. The distance covered in this leap was 12 feet. The actor playing Booth had to be carefully rehearsed in this scene and to get in the important detail of his spur catching in the flag that draped the box. This accounts for the fall which resulted in Booth fracturing his leg.

This entire scene of Ford's Theatre was the most difficult of all to take except the big battle scenes immediately preceding it. These being in the open the camera men were not hampered by demands of accuracy to the minute extent that they were in taking this important interior. As stated the night was a gala one to celebrate peace. Everybody of note was on hand and the women were dressed in the height of fashion. The men in the audience included famous generals and statesmen who had just written their names into history. The play was "Our American Cousin" with Laura Keene playing her farewell engagement in Washington. * * When it came time to take the pictures many in the audience remarked upon the wonderfully realistic effect. They said the actress simulated Mrs. Lincoln's dress and appearance so wonderfully that she seemed to be living again over the scenes of that night.

Joseph Henabery, who portrayed President Lincoln was selected from 20 different players who were coached and prepared for the part before he was voted the one. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited even to the small, but interesting, detail of the president reach back for his cloak just a few minutes before Booth attacked him.

The entire scene was laid out upon a carefully arranged ground plan down to a copy of the decorations of the house. This explains the clean cut manner in which it is all reproduced. The scene also fixes the time accurately and contradicts the general impression that the fatal shot was [illegible] stage. As near as [illegible] allies by any [illegible] such an inhuman method of war- [illegible] d continue to assert its right to [illegible] ation, and added that Germany [illegible] many never could be starved into submission.

The chancellor declared that Germany has amply shown her power, and that the allies were deceiving themselves when they believe that Germany is weakening.

THE PERRY JOURNAL.

addin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this night have seemed a fairy story. At present it is reporter's notebook sketch of events, and there is a sordid of money in it.

k of three girls still in their who are piling up annual in- of over $100,000 in the aggre- The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae and Miriam Cooper, who play minine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

Amsterdam Th.
Pictured - 4/7

That Register on the Screen.

"Three little maids from school," sixteen, nineteen and twenty are the heroines of "The Birth of a Nation" which will commence an engagement at the Amsterdam Theatre, April 13-14-15th, because their eyes register on that elusive strip of celluloid known as a film. Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper are the "Three Little Maids." It was Davis W. Griffith who discovered this talented trio. He first gave them a searching eye examination as carefully as an optician might do. After he had assured himself that their eyes would register he took upon for him, easy task of teaching them to act. That part was easy for after all he did not want them to act but to be natural.

The important thing is that they got hteir big chance because their eyes registered. Why it is that some people's eyes "take" better than others cannot be explained. It is an lusive thing that the cinema camera requires of its subjects. Poets might rhapsodize over the beautiful eyes in the world and yet those very eyes might not register on the screen. Many a prominent stage star has been a failure in pictures for this very reason. The camera is merciless. It has no respect for histrionic reputations. It has been said that for an actress to acquire the technique to play Juliet she must be so old that it is difficult for her to look the part. To be Juliet on the screen one must have youth. The camera will not stand for sham.

That is why Griffith makes his own stars. In the three principal feminine roles in "The Birth of a Nation," he had to have youth. That is why he took Mae Marsh and Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper. They had youth and beauty and soul. Griffith did the rest. And so today the "Three Little Maids" are drawing salaries that sound fabulous—more than $100,000 in the aggregate. Matinee Friday and Saturday at 2:15, prices 25c to $1.00. Nights at 25c to $2.00. Seat sale opens on Monday at 9 a. m.

The mother's appeal to Lincoln, a tense moment in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Laird opera house Wednesday and Thursday, April 12-13. Matinee Thursday at 2:15 p. m.

PEORIA STAR, FRIDAY, APRIL 7

MAJESTIC.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The Majestic theatre was again filled to the doors yesterday afternoon and evening with audiences eager to see and applaud the wonders of D. W. Griffith's wondrous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" and the return engagement of the play promises to be quite as brilliantly successful as the original performances.

The tremendous war scenes in the first act lose none of their impressiveness with a second seeing of their glories. The scene showing Sherman's march to the sea, with its thousands of men pouring down through the valley between the peaceful green hills, is one that once seen can never be forgotton. Somehow it seems more overwhelming today than when the writer first glimpsed its splendid, solemn beauty.

The same is true of he second part with its tragic drama of the reconstruction period. Not only do the climaxes gain in emotional appeal at a second view, but many minor portions overlooked at first, stand out vividly against the background of the narrative.

Pictorial Review 4/7

Seats

March to the Sea, an Episode in "The Birth of a Nation," Opera House, Monday and Tuesday, April 10-11. Matinee Tuesday.

no one would have a few years ago is of D. W. Griffith's tion," as a regular a playing to absoa $2 scale. "The is indeed more ly 100 persons are echanical effects the nureeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil war history and of Ku Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Griffith, clan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

IT is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the delirium of liberty so new and [illegible] that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it [illegible] upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the [illegible] of to-day. An exhibition of [illegible] might not have been [illegible] forty years ago. But [illegible] change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which [illegible] has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every [illegible] must experience a certain [illegible] ification that just at the time [illegible] ghastly horrors of carnage [illegible] brought so closely home to us. It is one thing to read about the [illegible] the killing and the corpses. It is another thing to have them [illegible] pressed before the eye, [illegible] demoniac fury that [illegible] close range. A well written [illegible] tion of a battlefield allows the [illegible] and the occasion to be [illegible] features of magnificence, [illegible] ism of the contestants and [illegible] the victors. On Griffith's [illegible] see the real thing. There [illegible] nificence, no glory, but [illegible] ity and stark butchery [illegible] with the sense of man's [illegible] man. It makes war [illegible] devilish. It covers an [illegible] son to all who have been [illegible] by those who have decl[illegible] naked hideousness of war [illegible] drapery.

There are also scenes of [illegible] dignity and beauty done [illegible] artist's hand—the signing [illegible] ident of the proclamation [illegible] teers which marked the end of [illegible] regime, the surrender of Lee to [illegible] and the assassination of the [illegible] in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Lincoln is held was manifested [illegible] way the great audience received [illegible] scene of a heartbroken southern [illegible] er pleading with him for her [illegible] tenced to death as a guerilla [illegible] eye was dim with tears in the [illegible] gling hush that fell on the [illegible] What might not our country have [illegible] saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart [illegible] one man who compassed within himself the resources of the [illegible] experience, breadth and sympathy [illegible] Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has [illegible] qualified approval.

April 9 1916

THE HUNTINGTON HERALD

Huntington (Ind.) Press

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

A Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

Scene from D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Huntington for three days starting Monday evening, April 3.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is a reporter's notebook sketch of events, and there is a sordid of money in it.

k of three girls still in their who are piling up annual in- of over $100,000 in the aggre- The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae and Miriam Cooper, who play minine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Huntington commencing an engagement of three days on Monday, April 3, with a matinee Tuesday and Wednesday.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 27,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

Mail orders will be received now if accompanied by money order and self addressed stamped envelope.

The presentation in this city will be exact in every way as shown at the Majestic theatre, Fort Wayne, including a symphony orchestra of twenty and all incidental scenic effects.

The regular box office sale will open at the theatre at 9 o'clock Saturday, April 1.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

There has been appearing in this city, at the Tulane Theater, for over a week a moving picture production —"The Birth of a Nation"—which has attracted attention throughout the country, and which has been the subject of long and animated discussion and criticism in the press. It seems somewhat strange that this picture should have been shown first in the North, whereas its scenes are laid almost exclusively in the South and tell of the events that left indelible marks on this section and so greatly influenced and directed its developments ever since. It is probably best that the North should first see the Southern side of the Civil war and of reconstruction, in the most striking manner in which it can be presented. The written word can tell much; the picture is often even more impressive and appealing to many; but nothing can tell of the past better than moving pictures, which enable the looker-on to see events just as they occurred. They will always be accepted as one of the best teachers of history.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells the story of the Civil war—the heroic struggle the South made, and the sufferings it endured—and tells of its recovery from the ruin and desolation that the war left behind, when bitterness sought to destroy its civilization. It was, perhaps, best, in the results accomplished, that these pictures should have been shown first in the North, as they produced a profound effect in that section and corrected many false ideas that prevailed there. There was much opposition at first to this production, on sectional and other grounds, and various efforts made to prevent the production or to require the cutting out of many scenes; but it was soon made evident to all that the pictures were valuable, interesting and instructive and they were generally shown throughout the country.

They have now come to New Orleans, the capital of the South, and are showing at the Tulane. They have been seen by thousands already, and will probably be seen by thousands more, as they will remain as long as the public is interested in them. The scenes they depict—dating back forty or fifty years—have not been witnessed by many persons. No history of that time has been written—certainly none for Louisiana—and of those incidents that occurred away from the South, no one can, of course, know anything. Yet these incidents are a part of American history, which we all want to know—the destruction of the old regime, the building up of a nation on new lines. While there is the vein of a love story running through the scenes, they are mainly historical, telling the conditions in the South during the decade following the secession of South Carolina. President Lincoln and his cabinet, the assassination of Lincoln, the surrender at Appomattox, the first session of the Reconstruction Legislature of South Carolina, carry stories we should all see and fully understand. The story of the South, its defeat and revival, could not be better presented than in this series of pictures, and in no better way can the lessons of history be taught or public interest better aroused in its study.

New Orleans Times-Picayune 4/9

Tulane Theater.

Children from the McDonogh Schools Nos. 15 and 31, numbering upwards of 300, witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Wednesday matinee. In addition to the public school students, there was a group of tots from Kingsley House and when the small enthusiasts joined forces, they set up a mighty din. It was one of the noisiest audiences that has witnessed the Griffith masterpiece during its record-breaking engagement at the Tulane. The demand for seats shows no slackening, as the spectacle nears the end of its fourth week, and the management of both the theater and the film are in a quandary as to how long the engagement should be continued. When it was announced a week ago that this week would be the last it was thought that four weeks would give New Orleans its fill of "The Birth of a Nation" but it has become evident that there are still many thousands who either have not seen the spectacle or who wish to see it again.

4/2

EVENING RECORD, GREENVILLE, PA

Ku Klux Klan.

The Ku Klux Klan which forms such an interesting part of D. W. Griffith's great production "The Birth of a Nation" was organized as a secret and social band in the state of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The third word Klan was added by the members who were in a large percentage descended from the Scotch who settled in old Virginia. In subsequent years when the Klans went forth to put down the desperadoes who swarmed down from the north to grab everything in sight in the south the riders adopted the emblem of the fiery cross which the Scotch Highlanders had long used as a call to battle in the early days of wars in their native land. "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the opera house Wednesday and Thursday, April 12 and 13, with a matinee Thursday at 2:15 p m.

Florence (SC) Times 4/7

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the O'Dowd Theatre, Florence, for three nights commencing Monday, April 10th., with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Comoner," who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office Hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the [redacted] actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation" does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the civil war and reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS LARGE CROWD AT WALLACE THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" which was shown on the screen at the Wallace Theatre Thursday night was beautiful. The theatre was packed from one end to the other by persons who have been waiting for months to see what is termed the most wonderful photo-play production ever produced.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be at the Wallace Friday and also Saturday and the attendance Friday night is expected to reach the capacity of the house. Many persons from out of town attended Thursday night's show.

(True Vigil Florence Sty)

MAJESTIC.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The Birth of a Nation, D. W. Griffith's historical drama opened a four day return engagement at the Majestic theatre yesterday afternoon. A large crowd patronized the first day's pictures of the civil war time. With the Birth of a Nation is the huge, thirty piece orchestra, the largest that has ever been sent out with any picture.

The issue, depicted in the drama, whether a state or the union should be supreme, is the nucelus around which the play is built. The south held that they were a Republic of Republics, each state being free and soverign. The north, under the leadership of the Great Emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, held that the union was indestructible, and its soverignty supreme.

Henry Walthall, as Colonel Ben Cameron of the southern army, takes the leading part and opposite him is Elsie Stoneman, which role is taken by Lillian Gish. In the secondary roles are, Hon. Austin Stoneman, played by Ralph Lewis and Dr. Cameron, played by Spottiswoode Aiken. The Stoneman family of the north and the Cameron family of the south are close friends, until the great civil war takes place in 1861.

Ben Cameron, with his two brothers enlist in the southern cause while Phil Stoneman, played by Elmer Clifton, with his brother enlist in that of the north. Ben and Phil are the only members of the family to remain after the war. Col. Cameron, is injured in the war and Phil Stoneman, who recognizes his old friend of the north, saves him from death and removes him to the northern hospital where he is cared for by Elsie, his sister. A love springs up between the pair, that is culminated in the final reckoning.

Then follows the death of President Lincoln, at the Ford theatre. Austin Stoneman, a great leader in the senate, comes into power, following the death and seeks to place the negro on equal footing with the whites of the south.

Negroes are given vote and are elected to power, headed by Silas Lynch, a mulatto as lieutenant governor. Then comes the persecution of the whites, which causes the death of "Little Colonel" Cameron's sister.

A feeling of animosity is aroused, at which Col. Cameron is at the head. Through his leadership, the Ku Klux Klan is brought about, which attempts to down the negro in the south. Their forces are increased to 400,000, and by repeated attacks they are victorious, only after taking the life of Silas Lynch, who is at the head of the negroes.

Much applause was given as reward to the great scenic productions of the most prominent battles during the war, and the works of the Ku Klux Klan. The play will continue four days, ending Sunday night.

...n Cooper as "Margaret Cameron," in The Birth of a Nation Sumter, ... Nights, Beginning Thursday, April 6th. Matinees Friday ... Saturday.

SENECA KICKER, "THE CRANBERRY PAPER,"

Coming Next W...

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Old City Opera House April 14 and 15, Matinee and Evening at 2:15 and 8:30.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict, 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansman. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

THE EPIC OF SOUTH'S REGENERATION AND THE RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF CIVILIZATION.

A Graphic Picture of the Darkest Day in the South's History and the Heroic Assertion of Anglo-Saxon Love for Law, Order and the Safety of Home and Family—It is a Triumph of Moving Picture Making, But its Real Greatness is its Fidelity to the Verities of History.

The Birth of a Nation, the greatest historic moving picture drama ever produced, was presented in the Opera House last night to an audience that filled it almost to its seating capacity. Every reserved seat was sold, but, strange to relate, there were a number of vacant seats in the general admission section. The fact that these seats were not taken must have been due to some misunderstanding, for there are hundreds of people who wanted to witness the performance last night but did not make the attempt to gain admission, the report having gone abroad that the house was sold out. The reserved seats for the matinee this afternoon and for tonight are practically sold out at this writing, only a few scattered seats remaining unsold, but the general admission for both performances today is unsold. Reserved seats for matinee and evening tomorrow can still be obtained, and the usual section for general admission remains unsold. As a matter of fact, the general admission seats give as good view of the picture as any in the house and those who have been unable to obtain reserved seats should take advantage of the general admission to see this great picture.

The Birth of a Nation is not a romantic drama, nor a historical novel picturized, but the history of the most momentous period of the South, reproduced with all the vividness of reality and an accuracy of detail that brings back to the men and women of the older generation, who lived through those trying and desperate days, the heart throbs and the heartaches of the bloody years of war and the darker and more hopeless years of reconstruction.

The years that have passed so swiftly in the rebuilding of the South on the ruins of a proud and opulent industrial system that had been the labor of the hearts, hands and brains of a proud and cultured people from colonial days to the great war, have to a great measure healed the wounds and calloused the scars left by the weapons of honorable enemies on the field of battle, and by the talons of the horde of harpies that over-ran this section after Appomattox. But the tale of those days is history and the wrongs the South endured, the oppressions its people suffered and the outrages inflicted upon them by those who were temporarily in power and who used that power with a vindictiveness and a malicious cruelty unexampled in the history of the English speaking people, can never be forgotten, though it may be the Christian and patriotic duty of Southerners to forgive the oppressors of the South. The Birth of a Nation is so true to history that it is an epic of the regeneration of a down-trodden people and the re-establishment of a racial civilization, when all but pride of race and the unbreakable courage of the Anglo-Saxon had been lost—even when hope of better days in the future had all but been abandoned. To the North and its people the Birth of a Nation may be a revelation, or some of the historically ignorant may even regard it as an exaggerated romance, but to the South it is a wonderfully impressive and deeply touching recital of a story that is the proudest heritage of the race. The Birth of a Nation shows how a people and a country lifted themselves from darkness into light by their own exertions and by their fearless and desperate disregard of every personal danger in the defense of their women, their homes and their civilization.

The older people know the story from sad personal experience, those of middle age, have faint childhood recollections of the dark days that tried men's souls, and have heard from the lips of their parents what reconstruction and its terrors meant. But the children of today know nothing and have heard little of the details of that darkest page in the history of their State—our people have turned their faces toward the light and since Wade Hampton's day and the strenuous times of 1876 and 1878 have tried to forget and forgive the many wrongs they suffered and have not impressed upon their children the fact that their fathers and grandfathers paid a great price for the peace and safety that this State now enjoys. Therefore it is well that such a delineation of the story, as is presented in Griffith's great film should be seen by all the younger generation of the South. The picture will refresh the memories and recall old dangers braved, perilous adventures undertaken and worthy achievements to the minds of the Confederate veterans and the survivors of the Ku Klux Klan and they will be inspired to recite the tale to their grand children. The picture rightly interpreted will be an inspiration and those who neglect the opportunity of seeing it will regret it.

Parade of Ku-Klux in Photo-Play "Birth of a Nation."

Wichita (Falls Tex.) Times 4/7

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving picture came the Aladdin lamps took a fairy story. As present it is less a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a good deal of magic in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are adding up annual incomes of over $100,000 a year. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his ideas carried out triumphantly by girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive charm which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out to striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the most type of ideal on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a little schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

Those two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in film land, which means they earn these salaries for fifty two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the bewitching shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

MAE MARSH IS "FLORA" IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Wichita Theatre beginning Monday is a prodigy of filmdom. In fact it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts who declare her to be the best find of the last thirty months in this wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spear holding with the merry, merry was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind big sister to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for slavey parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility, could queen it in a palace or play a biddy in a kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero, had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention offhand a really great character actress in the photographic field, the chances are ten to one that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan.

Columbia (Penna) Herald 4/7

184

Scene from 'The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand Thursday, Friday and Saturday

"Birth Of a Nation."

One of the most effective mu... scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Grand Theatre, April 13, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln' time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patent Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm --at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters), are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation" does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil War and Reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of the reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

Kittanning (Pa) Times 4/8

Scene in ":The Birth of a Nation"—Wick Opera House three nights beginning Monday, April 17. Matinee Tuesday and Wednesday

Franklin (Pa) News 4/8

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SUNDAY

Owing to the large demand of Peru and Miami county people who have not witnessed Henry W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been appearing at the Wallace Theatre for the past three days, Messrs. Scott and Loomis have prevailed on the management to extend their engagement one day, consequently this great production may be witnessed again Sunday evening.

Peru is particularly fortunate in getting this production for Sunday, for in Logansport, Marion, Muncie, Kokomo and other towns near this size the engagement has been limited to three days.

The company carries with them stage managers, carpenters, electricians, and a large orchestra, the company numbering about thirty people.

The company will go from here to Kokomo for a three days' engagement.

Greenville (Pa) Record 4/8

"The Birth of a Nation."

In his great, spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" D. W. Griffith utilized a run operatic score for the first time in its true relationship to the enlargement of his varied themes. It is the Wagnerian idea fitted to the screen drama and the synchronization was so perfectly adapted to this story that it becomes a very important part of the epical form of narrative. The score was arranged by Joseph Carl Breil who spent months with Mr. Griffith while he was making the picture and caught his thematic ideas in snatches of tune that Griffith would hum while he was working out his big dramatic ideas. It is perhaps the most unusual score ever devised but is a wonderful feature in the production. "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the opera house on Wednesday and Thursday, April 12 and 13, with a matinee on Thursday at 2:15 p. m.

Oil City (Pa) Blizzard 4/8

Birth of a Nation.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," making a return visit to the opera house April 14 and 15, has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance besides this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 200,000 details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theaters of the country.

4/8 Oil City (Pa)

VENANGO DAILY HERALD

"BIRTH OF A NATION'S" RETURN.

"The Birth of a Nation" will play a return engagement at the Oil City opera house Friday and Saturday, April 14 and 15. Packed houses greeted every performance of the play at its previous appearance here last fall and here and all over the country generally the play created a sensation. It established a new art in the realm of the theatre, the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score written especially for it. It is beyond question one of the most magnificent historical spectacles ever presented and Oil City is fortunate in securing its return engagement at this time.

Oil City Times 4/8

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the O'Dowd Theatre, Florence, for three nights commencing Monday, April 10th., matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most complimentary on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean Mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the Battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9th., under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Attempts in Congress was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

7/8 Oil City Derrick

THE OIL CITY DERRICK

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

A kind of artistic achievement up for the film but impossible for the "floor drama" is illustrated by the Ford theatre scene in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Opera house April 14 and 15.

The old-fashioned drama has been attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's theater in April, 1865, but also the auditorium of the theater, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a sort of panic to gaze at the great statesman, whose head has fallen back in the state box, and at the assassin, Booth who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the box draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical realism has never been achieved before. It is part of whot is meant by the so-called "new art" for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous art achievements of the film drama.

Motion Spectacle Only a Start

n Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One y We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural lection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

HILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me ere really is no occasion for that a picture should be prohich vies with the best offerthe dramatic stage. After all thing but the old first law of the survival of the fittest. The ler is purely a question of seand execution.

it was first announced that we d to present "The Birth of a in a regular Broadway Theich had never played a picture on before, the wiseacres of the world said it would not suc-You see, they knew nothing of . Most people had looked motion picture drama as a ten oposition. They measured evg by the standard of price. It t surprising that they overlookfundamental facts in the case re unprepared to pass judgment this undertaking. But in all here was nothing daring or venne in it. You see, we knew e had. That was an advantage the other fellow had never takconsideration.

ignificance of this is in the proof big picture being an undoubted s. There will be many two dolctures. The success will depend y upon how well they are done, verts back solely to a question it. It takes great care, time and ormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," Opera House Monday and Tuesday, April 10 and 11. Matinee Tuesday.

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand theatre beginning Monday, is a prodigy of Filmdon. In fact it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts who declare her to be the best "find" of the last thirty months in this wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spearholding with the "merry, merry" was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavery" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility, could queen it in a palace or play a "biddy" in a kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit—with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero—had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention off-hand a really great character actress in the photographic field, the chances are ten to one that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan.

Scene From D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

TODAY IS THE LAST CHANCE TO SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith in planning "The Birth of a Nation," featured the Ku Klux Klan as a band of heroes and not outlaws. The scenes are vivid, soul stirring and thrilling throughout.

That "The Birth of a Nation," which closes its final engagement of the season at Byers opera house tonight, gives the spectator $2 worth of entertainment is evident from the comment in the lobby of the theater as the crowds pass out.

The question naturally arises, how much entertainment should be given for $2? Take the average drama of the spoken word or the average musical comedy. Which of them stirs the spectator to such heights of frenzy or delight as does "The Birth of a Nation?" or which leaves recollections so powerful and so pleasant?

Or take the popular novel at $1.18. How many of these can give the reader a tenth of the number of thrills or a tenth of the pleasure he can draw from sitting through "The Birth of a Nation?" For the Griffith spectacle not only tells as interesting a story, but it tells it a thousand times more vividly, picturing a thousand delightful details that could not be told in words without making the lightest novel unbearably cumbersome. Taking the price of the popular novel as the standard, the price of admission to "The Birth of a Nation" could be scarcely less than $10 or $15.

Or, how does the delight drawn from "The Birth of a Nation" compare with that derived from a sirloin steak at $1.25, or a three-hour ride in an automobile at $3 an hour?

The matinee at 2:15 and the night show at 8:15 will mark the final engagement of the wonderful spectacle this season in Fort Worth.

Fort Worth Record

416

ent ible
Grand of a N ttractio lty at , Nation
n, for near in the music durin

Lillian Gish, who has principal role in "The Birth of a on," at the Amsterdam Theatre, April 13, 14, 15.

SENTINEL, AMSTERDAM, N. Y.

Why Women Go to the Theatre.

In the opinion of Lillian Gish, whose charm and sincerity of interpretation adds so much to the personal appeal of "The Birth of a Nation," which commences an engagement of three days at the Amsterdam Theatre, commencing on Thursday, April 13th.

Women are the main support of the theatre. In other words, if femininity withdrew all interest in playgoing, play production would cease to be a profitable business.

"It is the women," says Miss Gish, "who keep tabs on theatrical doings, on whose who, and what's what. Men don't—at least most men."

"In the olden days it was possible to satiate for romance or adventure, but modern individuals, most them, obey the dictates of civilization and satisfy the wild blood in heir veins by changing their personalities in an orchestra seat. And after all, how gratifying it must be to would-be heroines or heroes to so easily and comfortably riot at will in the illusive and of make believe."

The sale of seats will open at the theatre box office tomorrow morning and the prices for the matinees will be 25c to $1.00, the evening prices 25c to $2.00.

Baltimore (Md) 4/9

THE SUN

ADDEUS STEVENS' PART IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

there ever such a man as tin Stoneman in American a question asked by nearly "The Birth of a Nation." It alled that Stoneman is pic- he leader of the House of tives in Washington and the figure in political life after nation of President Lincoln. open secret that Thomas thor of "The Clansman," "The Birth of a Nation" is cled the character of Stone- Thaddeus Stevens, who was most powerful parliamentary American history. There is f the fact that Stevens came when Lincoln was killed. born in Vermont, but later Lancaster, Pa. He was a' remist and a radical of radi- leader of the House of Rep- he was the prime factor e Reconstruction bills which much misery in the South. sident Johnson decided to Reconstruction ideas of Ab- n. Stevens turned against afterward managed the im- trial of the President. His ard the South was exceed- and naturally he was looked section as its worst enemy. the Union League of Ameri- as first founded in Ohio by Stevens hoped to bring cation of the property of This league did everything to prevent the second elec- oln. Nicolay and Hay, in aphy of Lincoln, say that his friends made no con- their joy at the death of t. This made Stevens prac- tator of the nation. anted to confiscate the prop- Southern whites and then negro 40 acres and a mule. a streng advocate of mis- This was undoubtedly due ence of his mulatto house- Smith thrown in "The Nation" as Lydia Brown. ecunder in his book of remi- cades an article on the Ku- aken from a popular maga- contains the following:

beyond any doubt, was the ful parliamentary leader in A fanatic, a misanthrope, y physical deformity, a born endowed with the audacity he became in a moment unscrupulous master of a n. Mr. Stevens determined South from the map, con- roperty of its citizens, give groes, deprive the whites of end their leaders into beg- enfranchise the negro and aster of every state from the Rio Grande. eeded in enfranchising the nfranchising enough whites a majority. He organized in oath-bound societies, men Leagues,' and promised nation. He promised bay- force the intermarriage of blacks.'

Secoil, a Northern man friend and admirer of Stevens, in his biography of him says: "During the last 30 years of his life its unwritten romance was the affectionate and tender devotion with which Stevens was attended by Lydia Smith, a mulatto, who in youth had great beauty of person. Her fidelity to his interests ended only with his death. He left her a large sum of money in his will, with part of which she purchased the old Stevens homestead in Lancaster, Pa., a two-story brick house, much finer than the Thad Stevens home in Capitol Hill."

When Stevens introduced his reconstruction bills he included his plan of confiscation and miscegenation. Those sections were eliminated by the narrow margin of only five votes. This was his only failure.

Stevens was never married. In "The Birth of a Nation" he is represented for dramatic purposes as being the father of a boy and girl. This is the only divergence in the picture from the facts of his career except also that he never personally went South.

His hatred of the South knew no bounds. It dominated the closing years of his life and his influence retarded for a generation the bringing together of the North and South in bonds of friendship. No such baneful influence was ever known in American history.

Rizpa

ROBERT LEWIS AS STONEMAN

In "The Birth of a Nation."

New Orleans (La)
Times-Picayune
Apr 9

"The Birth of a Nation" Here Another Week

MAE MARSH, WHO PLAYS THE PART OF FLORA CAMERON IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," BEGINNING ITS FIFTH WEEK AT THE TULANE TONIGHT.

That "Aunt" ... personality that ... Birth of a Nation ... club foot and his ... whites, is a ... makeup of a certain ... coln's time, has been ... the hundreds of tenders ... history who have ... spectacle during his ... the Tulane Theater ... ously recognizable by ... organizer of the Union ...

ya, and instigator of the ... that was turned loose ... South at the close of the ...

To better suit the ... story, "The Clansman," ... gave "Stoneman" a ... ter, while, as a matter of ... was a bachelor. Phil and ... man, the children, contribu... ness to the story that ... their parent, to say the ... out them there would be ... ten the poriraiture of Stev... ter.

The story of Stevens' ... dusky servant, Lydia Smith ... Brown," as she is ... fith spectacle, is true ... vill, a Northern man ... and admirer of Stevens ... phy of him says: "During ... thirty years of his life his ... mance was the affectionate ... devotion with which Stevens ... tended by Lydia Smith, a ... in youth had great beauty ... Her fidelity to his interests ... with his death. His will ... sum of money in his ... which she purc... ... homestead in Lancaster ... story brick house ... Thad Stevens home on ...

Lydia always spoke ... Stevens' death as "the ... living there with her children ... Lancaster began that ...

Scoville calls it which ... thirty years.

Scovill again says: "Stevens ... never married, but his housekeeper ... at Lancaster (and here Lydia ... honors) was the endeavor ... bright spirits around. He was ... averse to a game of pool ... neighbors complained of the ... lingering long over the wine ... was red at Thad's house."

When Stevens grew to ... his party he made his home ... Hill, and here also Lydia ... After Lincoln's death this street ... on the hill became the White ... as the ... now in power ... Andrew Johnson because he ... the Lincoln policy of reconstruction ... not Thad's carpetbag idea of ... tion. The mulatto woman ... Stevens and Stevens death ... gress.

The character of "Stoneman" ... Birth of a Nation" is played by ... Lewis, a prominent actor, who ... guished himself on the speaking ... in Shakespearian and tragic roles.

D.W. GRIFFITH

W. Griffith's epoch-making e, "The Birth of a Nation," g its record-breaking runs in rk, Chicago, Boston, San Fran- d Los Angeles, will be seen Palace theatre Monday, Tues- Wednesday, April 17, 18 and work, partly from the nature new art, partly from the oppo- aroused, has excited keener y than any other offering of rent season, and the extraor- demand for seats indicates e playhouse will not prove large enough to accommodate ger throngs.

Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical rising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger régime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact fac-similes of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay, now sounding the loud diapason of war ,again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the Clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henberry, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigman as the mulatto lieutenant-colonel of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements.

Wichita Daily Times 1/9

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

IT is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the considera- that it represents the negro, not is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL TELL GRAPHIC STORY OF CIVIL WAR AND DAYS OF RECONSTRUCTION—FIVE PERFORMANCES HERE

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" begins its engagement at the Wichita Theatre tomorrow night. There will be two performances daily, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these planes and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurence. Holding the great effects there is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent as under by the dreams of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. One of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere the chorus of brotherly love in a allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

Memphis Press

2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

e Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

HILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me really is no occasion for se that a picture should be pro- which vies with the best offer- f the dramatic stage. After all nothing but the old first law of — the survival of the fittest. The nder is purely a question of se- n and execution.

en it was first announced that we ed to present "The Birth of a n" in a regular Broadway Thea- hich had never played a picture tion before, the wiseacres of the r world said it would not suc- You see, they knew nothing of s. Most people had looked a motion picture drama as a ten proposition. They measured ev- ng by the standard of price. It t surprising that they overlook- fundamental facts in the case ere unprepared to pass judgment this undertaking. But in all there was nothing daring or ven- me in it. You see, we knew we had. That was an advantage the other fellow had never tak- consideration.

significance of this is in the proof big picture being an undoubted s. There will be many two dol- tures. The success will depend y upon how well they are done, verts back solely to a question it. It takes great care, time and rmous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's trysting we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

Florence (S.C.) Times 4/10

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the O'Dowd Theatre, Florence, beginning Monday night, April 10th., is a prodigy of Filmdom. In fact it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts who declare her to be the best "lnd" of the last thirty months in this wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spear-holding with the "merry, merry" was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger, and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal felicity, could queen it in a palace or play a "biddy" in a kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit—with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero—had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention offhand a really great character actress in the photographic field, the chances are ten to one, that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan!

AMSTERDAM EVENING RECORDER 4/10

"The Birth of a Nation."

The Ku-Klux Klan which forms such an interesting part of D. W. Griffith's great production "The Birth of a Nation" was organized as a secret and social band in the state of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The third word Klan was added by the members who were in a large percentage descended from the Scotch who settled in old Virginia. In subsequent years when the Klans went forth to put down the desperadoes who swarmed down from the north to grab everything in sight in the south the riders adopted the emblem of the fiery cross which the Scotch highlanders had long used as a call to battle in the early days of wars in their native land. "The Birth of a Nation," returns to the Amsterdam theatre Thursday, the 13, for the balance of the week. The sale of seats opened at the theatre box office this morning and the prices are 25c to $1.00 for the matinees and 25c to $2.00 for evening performances.

Col. Record 4/10

"The Birth of a Nation"

David Wark Griffith who started the world with his wonderful combination of film and operatic drama called "The Birth of a Nation" is a native of Kentucky. He began his public career as an extra actor in a Louisville stock company. He also studied Grand opera and developed a splendid baritone voice. He became interested in pictures as a scenario writer, but the technical side of the work fascinated him. In less than three yars from his first entrance into a motion picture studio he was the promising figure of American directors. His numerous inventions and his wonderful judgment soon placed him at the forefront of the ranks. He is recognized as the greatest director of motion picture productions in the world today. He has gained this eminence in seven years and commands the largest salary ever paid a director of any amusement enterprise in this country. "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Opera House on Wednesday and Thursday, April 12 and 13, with a matinee Thursday, at 2:15 o'clock p. m.

Decatur (Ala.) 4/10

DECATURS DAILY

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Masonic theatre April 17, 18 and 19, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the states and the reconstruction of the southland. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a brigadier general of the Confederate army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama after sonality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old-fashioned stage.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Spielberger gave a supper Sunday evening at the Lyons hotel in honor of Miss Edna Hefter, of Kankakee, Ill., whose engagement is announced to Mr. Harry Spielberger, of Sheffield, Ala. Plates were laid for fifteen.

Kittanning Pa Times 4/18

The Ball the Night Before Leaving for the Front. A Spectacle in "The Birth of a Nation" at The Wick next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday

Washington Pa Daily 4/18

[illegible] of the great [illegible] in D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] Theatre, April 17-18-19.

THE OIL CITY DERRICK
[illegible]

[illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] greater feature in the last [illegible] have been taken in it. During the [illegible] the 12 or more years this attraction has been on tour. The contribution to made with Ben Hur because it is generally acknowledged to theatrical business as the high water mark of contemporaneous drama in America.

Kittanning Pa Times 4/18

GREATEST PICTURE EVER SHOWN

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Wick three nights beginning next Monday, April 17, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a sugestion for his these out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the case are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Ardmore Pa Daily
Ardmore, Monday, April 1[illegible]

The Palace.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Palace, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the south from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds, Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature, rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and fine form towering over his companion. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal, meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend, and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox court house is closed.

OIL CITY BLIZZARD
"The Birth of a Nation."

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented at the opera house for a return engagement on Friday and Saturday. The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to the motion picture in Amercia. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." A complete metropolitan production is to be on view here. It comprises a company of 50 expert technicians, a complete symphony orchestra, and two baggage cars of effects.

Weekly
4/10

GAINESVILLE, TEXAS

ONDERFUL PICTURE TO BE SHOWN HERE

David W. Griffith's epoch-making tacle, "The Birth of a Nation," fol- ing its record-breaking runs in New k, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco Los Angeles, will be seen in one of original productions at the opera se next Thursday, Friday and Sat- ay, April 13, 14, 15. This work, tly from the nature of the new art, rtly from the opposition aroused, has ited keener curiosity than any other ering of the current season, and the traordinary advance sales in other ies indicates that the local opera se will not prove nearly large ough to accomodate the eager throngs "The Birth of a Nation" tells by film d music the story of a nation re-born rough the storm and stress of inter- ine strife. Instead of the four to scenes of the conventional play, its chnique permits of filming literally usands of scenes and covering a wide nge of history and characters. Slav- y, the price cause of the war; Lin- n's call for troops to subdue the uthern states; the ball on the eve of ll Run, and the fire triumph of Con- derate arms; the devastation wrought Sherman's march and the awful or- al of the siege off Petersburg; Lee's render to Grant at Appomatox; the assination of the federal president; harsh Radical policy to the stricken uth; the uprising of the Ku Klux an, and the overthrow of the carpet- gger regime—these great factors and ents pass in review before the thrill- spectator.

The love interest of the play is based the friendships between the Camer- s of South Caroline and the Stone- ans of Pennsylvania, two families in- lved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, e gallant clansman of the Dixon ories, appears again in the role of mantic hero; the piquant Northern rl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. riffith took most of the scenes in the eat out-of-doors, where Nature paint- the backgrounds and army men rected the battle campaigns. The not- ble indoor scenes, like Ford's theater the night of the Lincoln tragedy, e peace at Appomattox, and the uth Carolina legislature of 1870, are act fac-similes of the originals. Al- gether, it is the first time in art-pro- uction that history in the large has een presented in living pictures. To this, many times the amount of the me, energy and expense usually de- ted to amusement enterprises had to used. Eighteen thousand people and 000 horses appear in the picture, which st approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is e music that interprets them. It con- sts of an elaborate symphonic score ranged after Griffith's suggestions of e musical motifs for the leading char- ters. Now grave, now gay; now unding the loud diapason of war, gain sweetly harmonizing love's sighs d rhapsodies; anon bringing back the d plantation melodies, or the crash of t and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux lan call that fell so gratefully on the r of Southern whites sorely oppres d by the "servants in the Master's ll"—it fits the changing scenes of the ory like a flowing, beautiful garment. e marriage of this music to the film st of all entitled the producer to his ll-earned laurel of having created a to speak, that had not even been nceived before.

Among the distinguished principals e Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished abama actor whose family is histor- lly connected with the story, in the le of the Clansman; Lillian Gish as sie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam oper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph wis as Congressman Stoneman; Jos- h Henaberry, Howard Gaye and Don- d Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant re-

STATE—Losses from disease year 21 per cent: ten-year av per cent: losses from exp year 39 per cent: ten-year av year 1.2: ten-year average 1.

SHEEP.

FAYETTEVILLE OBSERVER

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the LaFayette Theatre, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A lorlorn leader of what is no longer a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand, and the great Generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

At the LaFayette Theatre Fayetteville, for three nights, beginning Monday, April 17, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. Seats on sale at theatre box office at 9 a. m. Wednesday, April 12. —Advt.

Kittanning (Pa) Times 4/10

The Ball the Night Before Leaving for the Front. A Spectacle in "The Birth of a Nation" at The Wick next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday

New Castle (Pa) Herald 4/10

Mae Marsh, one of the great actresses in D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." Masonic Theatre, April 17-18-19.

THE OIL CITY DERRICK

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on its second year of prosperity with the current month's booking. In the short space of twelve months this new form of entertainment has set a record which will likely stand for years to come. Within this limited lapse of time Griffith's mighty creation has been seen by more people in various parts of America than any other attraction ever presented on the stage. Its combined receipts in one year excel the box office takings of any theatdical attraction ever booked in this country. A concise comparison illustrating this unprecedented success is shown in the statements which reveal that "The Birth of a Nation" has played to greater receipts in its first year than have been taken in by "Ben Hur" during the 12 or more years this attraction has been on tour. The comparison is made with "Ben Hur" because it is generally recognized in theatrical business as the high water mark of contemporaneous drama in America.

Kittanning (Pa) Times 4/10

GREATEST PICTURE EVER SHOWN

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Wick three nights beginning next Monday, April 17, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a sugestion for his these out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes it epatomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the case are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Ardmore (Okla) Ardmoreite

Ardmore, Monday, April 9, 1917

The Palace.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Palace, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the south from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds, Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn looker of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature, rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and fine form towering over his companion. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the dignified southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal, meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend, and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox court house is closed.

OIL CITY BLIZZARD

"The Birth of a Nation."

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented at the opera house for a return engagement on Friday and Saturday. The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil war on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to the motion picture in Amercia. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a romance of the Blue and the Gray suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." A complete metropolitan production is to be on view here. It comprises a company of 50 expert technicians, a complete symphony orchestra, and two baggage cars of effects.

Daily
4/10

GALVESTON, TEXAS

ONDERFUL PICTURE TO BE SHOWN HERE

avid W. Griffith's epoch-making tacle, "The Birth of a Nation," foling its record-breaking runs in New rk, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco d Los Angeles, will be seen in one of original productions at the opera use next Thursday, Friday and Sat-ay, April 13, 14, 15. This work, rtly from the nature of the new art, rtly from the opposition aroused, has ited keener curiosity than any other ering of the current season, and the traordinary advance sales in other ies indicates that the local opera use will not prove nearly large ough to accomodate the eager throngs
"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film d music the story of a nation re-born rough the storm and stress of inter-ine strife. Instead of the four to scenes of the conventional play, its hnique permits of filming literally usands of scenes and covering a wide nge of history and characters. Slavy, the price cause of the war; Linn's call for troops to subdue the uthern states; the ball on the eve of ll Run; and the fire triumph of Con-derate arms; the devastation wrought Sherman's march and the awful oral of the siege off Petersburg; Lee's rrender to Grant at Appomatox; the assination of the federal president; harsh Radical policy to the stricken uth; the uprising of the Ku Klux an, and the overthrow of the carpetgger regime—these great factors and ents pass in review before the thrill-spectator.

The love interest of the play is based the friendships between the Camers of South Caroline and the Stone-ans of Pennsylvania, two families inlved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, e gallant clansman of the Dixon ories, appears again in the role of mantic hero; the piquant Northern l Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. riffith took most of the scenes in the eat out-of-doors, where Nature paint-the backgrounds and army men rected the battle campaigns. The not-ble indoor scenes, like Ford's theater the night of the Lincoln tragedy, e peace at Appomattox, and the uth Carolina legislature of 1870, are act fac-similes of the originals. Al-gether, it is the first time in art-pro-ction that history in the large has een presented in living pictures. To this, many times the amount of the me, energy and expense usually deoted to amusement enterprises had to used. Eighteen thousand people and 000 horses appear in the picture, which st approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is e music that interprets them. It con-sts of an elaborate symphonic score ranged after Griffith's suggestions of e musical motifs for the leading charters. Now grave, now gay; now unding the loud diapason of war, gain sweetly harmonizing love's sighs d rhapsodies; anon bringing back the d plantation melodies, or the crash of ot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux lan call that fell so gratefully on the r of Southern whites sorely oppres d by the "servants in the Master's all"—it fits the changing scenes of the ory like a flowing, beautiful garment.
e marriage of this music to the film st of all entitled the producer to his ell-earned laurel of having created a to speak, that had not even been nceived before.

Among the distinguished principals e Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished abama actor whose family is historally connected with the story, in the le of the Clansman; Lillian Gish as sie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam oper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph wis as Congressman Stoneman; Josh Henaberry, Howard Gaye and Don-d Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant re-ectively; George Seigmann as the ulatto lieutenant-colonel of South arolina; Walter Long, as the renegade gro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes oth; Mary Alden as the octoroon usekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and rnest Campbell as the good negroes, else and Jake; Elmer Clifton and obert Harron as the young soldiers; ottiswoode Aitken and Josephine rowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and any others.

The production to be seen here is entical in all respects with those of Y[illegible] Chicago. Two baggage of equipment and a company of are carried on tour. The includes a large symphony or-of expert musicians. Others in are a stage manager, a com-
, two picture-machine opera-with optical experts to the theater projection and sit-the latest scientific focal re-
No advance will be charg-

FAYETTEVILLE OBSERVER

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the LaFayette Theatre, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A lorlorn leader of what is no longer a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand, and the great Generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

At the LaFayette Theatre Fayetteville, for three nights, beginning Monday, April 17, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. Seats on sale at theatre box office at 9 a. m. Wednesday, April 12. —Advt.

Kittanning (Pa.) Simpson's Leader 4/11

Jacksonville (Ill.) Courier 4/11

TH OF A NATION" IS GREATEST PICTURE

Thousand See It Monday Night in al Performance—Extra Run Anunced for Wednesday Morning.

second and third generations in nville are seeing this week the of war as their fathers and athers experienced them in the Civil conflict of '60-65, and with equal vividness. They are seeso, the terrors of the carpetbag and the desperate drives of the ux clans, which the veterans in ho returned home in sixty-five did itness.

e than a thousand people saw "The of a Nation" in its initial pernce at the Grand opera house Monvening. They invariably pronounced greatest thing of its kind they had witnessed. Many of them exd a desire to see it a second time eclared they would welcome a reengagement. Seats are practically sted for the later runs of the three engagement here.

picture, three hours long, graphirepresenting the peaceful southern efore the war, the worst struggles he most blighting ravages of the in the south, the unscrupulous inations of the carpetbaggers misy the blind Republican radicalism e north and the brutal development e negros under false political doc instilled by the white politica s, is to be seen. No verbal descripan convey any adequate idea of its ness, its spectacular settings nor its rical worth.

ny who attended the Monday eve performance called the orchestral paniment the best of the program. out it, the picture would be flat. tonal effects of southern plantation f the roar of battle and the wierd call of the Ku-Klux clans thrill one e marrow.

ing to a demand for a morning perance and to accommodate the chil of some of the state institutions, ger Johnson announced Tuesday he would give an extra performance esday morning at 9 o'clock. Adon will be $1 for adults and 50 cents children, no seats reserved.

The assassination of President Lincoln, a big scene in The Birth of a Nation. Wick Opera House, three nights beginning Monday, April 17.

4/11

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Masonic theatre, commencing an engagement of three days on April 17, 18 and 19.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York, where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict, 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000.

Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women, while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

Newhalem Ala. Advertiser Daily.

Ardmore (Okla.) Ardmoreite 4/11

Palace.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the civil war and reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Palace, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen must be shown, in an historic ride of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by re-making such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old north state. The race of the northern clansmen to rescue of their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons of his work.

4/11 Ill.

JACKSONVILLE DAILY JOURNAL

WONDERFUL FILM PRODUCTION STAGED AT GRAND FOR FIRST TIME

"Birth of Nation" as a Great Picture Fully Equalled Expectations of Great Audience Which Gathered Last Night.

A larger audience never assembled at the Grand opera house than that which witnessed the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" Monday night. The picture had been heralded as the greatest film production of the times and everyone present last night expressed the view that their expectations were fully met.

David W. Griffith, producer and proprietor of "The Birth of a Nation," certainly has succeeded with a stupendous undertaking. To prepare for such a production required a vast amount of dramatic genius, unlimited capital and great business ability. Mr. Griffith seems to have had all three. An orchestra of more than twenty pieces is carried by the company, and the musical program is of such a character that it seems an inseparable part of the picture program and adds very materially to the interest and success of the whole.

People have the general idea that all that is needed to transport a picture attraction is a medium sized express box. That "The Birth of a Nation," with the company, scenery and accessories, requires two cars indicates the relative proportion between "The Birth of a Nation" and the average moving picture.

When Manager Johnson succeeded after a great deal of difficulty in booking "The Birth of a Nation" for five performances there were a great many people who doubted if there would be audience large enough to jutify the expenditure. But succeeding events have proved the good judgment of the manager, and practically all seats for the five entertainments were sold before Monday night. "The Birth of a Nation" is founded upon Rev. Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," and has much in it historically correct. The dramatist has, of course, taken certain liberties and made embellishments so that the finished product does not follow exactly the lines of the novel, any more than the novel reflects in every detail the exact conditions of the days following the War of the Rebellion.

To describe "The Birth of a Nation" in a few paragraphs is impossible. Such a story must be a summary of events which occupied years and must reflect the details of a narrative in which thousands of people have their part.

Matinee and night performances are to occur today and tomorrow and Manager Johnson last night announced a special performance for Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock.

199 Times (Sc) Times

APRIL 11, 1916

BIRTH OF A NATION DELIGHTS AUDIENCE

PACKED HOUSE GREETS FIRST PRESENTATION OF SPECTACLE.

"The Birth Of A Nation," the wonderfully sensational film spectacle, constructed by that master of movies, David W. Griffith, was given its first presentation in Florence at O'Dowd's last night to a capacity house. The audience was enthusiastic, and laughed and wept alternately as the story unfolded, and went away after three hours of intense entertainment feeling thoroughly satisfied that a miracle of modern build had been revealed to it. Without superlatives and adjectives words fail to do justice to this astounding entertainment. The music of the symphony orchestra timed to the picture with exactness added tremendously to the enjoyment of the audience. There will be four more performances of the spectacle today and tomorrow and there is no doubt that the house will be crowded each time. The matinees start at 2:45 and the evening performances at 8:15

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it—but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier more and more rapid.

The National Board of Censorship has approved "The Birth of a Nation" and when assault was made upon it, convened again and reaffirmed their approval. The popular endorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which Mr. David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the Reconstruction Period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of '60 to '70. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the class room.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience of certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the domoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark blutchery. It sicneus with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indellible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the President of the Proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre.

Lillian Gish who plays Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Laird opera house Wednesday and Thursday, April 12-13. Matinee on Thursday at 2:15 p. m.

"Sherman's March to the Sea," in the "Birth of a Nation," opens April 1 and 15.

4/11 Titusville Herald

NEW VIEW OF AMERICAN HISTORY SHOWN BY FILM

"Birth of a Nation" Gives Clearer Idea of Civil War Period.

It may have cost half a million dollars to film the great picture "The Birth of a Nation." There may be 12,000 feet of film in the picture and there may be 5,000 people in the cast and 2,500 horses used. But these do not impress one as he sees this greatest of all pictures. Last evening a great audience sat in the Grand theatre and found that all the figures quoted above were of little account. They felt that before their eyes was passing an epoch of American history misunderstood by the north, untaught in our schools and touched upon only briefly by the most truthful of historians.

The picture begins with scenes before the Civil war and follows the leading characters through the dark days of the terrible struggle. Battlefields, hospitals, marching soldiers and sorrowing homes are shown, the full horror of war being painted with an agency far more truthful than the painter's brush.

The death of Lincoln and the despair of the south at this loss of its best friend closed the first half of the program of as wonderful pictures as ever were seen here.

Then came the bitter, awful reconstruction days, when the carpetbagger and the negro were in the ascendancy in the south. Here the film follows quite closely the story of Thomas Dixon's book, "The Clansman." The reason for the formation of the Ku Klux Klan was shown, together with the gathering of the horsemen who storm down into southern towns which are being dominated by the blacks.

The dramatic thread of the story is never broken from the first to the last and the interest of the audience is never lost. The picture will go down as a classic in picturedom, as being the greatest undertaking of its kind.

Among the famous characters who appear on the canvas during the picture are Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Sherman, Longstreet, Thaddeus Stevens and others. The scenes in the old Ford theatre and the old Steadman home at Appomattox were historically correct and the picture, as a contribution to history, is fully as great as a work of art.

Oil City (Pa) Blizzard 4/11

"The Birth of a Nation."

The offering of Manager Pease at the opera house Friday and Saturday, at 2:15 and 8:30 each day, will be a return engagement of that wonderful picture, "The Birth of a Nation."

The story of this picture, which has created such a furore, is taken from the novel, "The Clansman," written by Thomas Dixon. It covers that epoch of American history from 1860 to 1872. The most important part of the work deals with the siege of Petersburg, Va., and the work of the "Ku Klux Klan," which finally put an end to negro domination and carpet-bag rule. It took eight months to complete the 12,000 feet of film, in which 5,000 scenes are portrayed and which cost half a million dollars. It is a wonderful picture, showing the assassination of Lincoln and many stirring events. Its value to history is undoubted, for it deals with a period of our history which is not understood and which is passed over very lightly by every history usually seen in the public schools.

One of the special features is the orchestra which adds in a large measure to the effectiveness of the picture.

Oil City Daily Herald 4/11

VENANGO DAILY HERALD

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

The magnitude of D. W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" which returns to Oil City opera house Friday and Saturday, is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older theatre. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" is infinitesimal. For Griffith, in staging "The Birth of a Nation", used Nature for his background, 150 years of American history as his subject, 18,000 people as his actors, and no less than 3,000 mounts of cavalry in the celebrated "rides" of the Ku Klux Klan.

TIMES

ICTURE VIEWED Y LARGE CROWD

IRTH OF A NATION" IS PRE-ENTED AT WICHITA THEATER MONDAY NIGT.

HEERS AND TEARS

ectators Run Gamut of Emotions as Stirring Scenes of South's Or- deal Are Presented.

The images of the fathers of the uthland stalked at the Wichita eatre Monday night; by the agency a narrow strip of celluloid they ced the bitter ordeal of unsuccess- secession and the bitterer ordeal reconstruction; history was vis- lized before the eyes of a great rong, giving thrills that no printed ge or spoken word could ever give. ich in brief, was "The Birth of a ation" described as the greatest mov- picture ever completed and con- ded to be that by the Wichitans ho were literally swept from their et by it.

Never before, probably, has the ory of the struggle between the ates been brought home so surely d so directly to the younger gen- ation. There were those among spectators who needed no pic- ed reproduction of the scenes of at day to tell them the story; they re the handful of Confederate erans who both cheered and wept the stirring scenes, they were far m being alone in either the cheer- or the weeping. To the others o were not part of the picture it s a realistic, gripping, throbbing esentation of the stories they had d and heard.

The production is based upon omas Dixon's "The Clansman" that ry being made the vehicle for a torical picture of the secession and onstruction days. One saw Presi- t Lincoln signing the call for the 00 volunteers which the North lly believed would be enough; the volunteer legions gather for struggle and ride away amid tears cheers; saw the conflict at Peters- g, typical of so many gallant bat- of the war; saw the Confederacy and the ragged, tired soldiers re- to wrecked, battered homes; saw coln struck down by the assassin's d; saw the carpet baggers and r negro hirelings begin that reign terror that featured the days of onstruction; saw a negro legisla- in South Carolina's halls of e; saw the little girl fall victim he product of such a system; saw Clan, born of stern necessity, n and ride forth to restore su- macy to the Caucasian race.

he picture gripped the crowd at start, but the spectators sat com- ently until there was a scene wing celeberation of the victory Bull Run, then a cheer swept over house; a few minutes later were n the boys in gray marching y to the front and as "Dixie" was ed forth by the orchestra it was ned out in the cheers; but the rs were loudest and most frenz- of all when the Clan swept forth its mission, and thosew ho did cheer with their mouths gripped arms of their seats and cheered their hearts. There were scenes made it hard to sit still—it was asy to forget that after all, it only a strip of celluloid and so to think that one's own fore- ers were there on the stage in and blood instead of phantom. ering shadows on a canvas n.

storical accuracy is declared to feature of the picture and this is amply borne out, so that it a lesson in history as well as uthern ideals, that was present- No one after seeing "The Birth Nation" can fail to understand tremendous popularity that it chieved; before seeing it, one have doubted that a mere mov- icture could have been worthy that was said of it, but after it, its value could not be ques d.

re was an orchestra that add ch to the production, and much effectiveness would certainly been lost without the music pulsated through it. The show promptly at 8:30 and after half picture had been shown there brief intermission; spectators at their watches and were ed to find that it was ten . So gripping had been the t that time had been forgot- The production requires three to present, but it is three or never to be forgotten ex- ces.

imes the spectators cheered as had never cheered before; at they wept and at times they d cursed silently. It was no picture for most of them, but if a magic carpet had trans- them backwards half a century the years and set them down they might see the stirring events unfolded before their "The Birth of a Nation" is than a moving picture.

pacity house witnessed the pro- and there is assurance of apacity houses for the remaind- he five performances schedul- the second of which is being his afternoon. It is a notable ion, one fully worthy of the ity and suppose it has every- one which [illegible] re- [illegible]

THE MORNING SENTINEL, AMSTERDAM, N. Y.

"The Birth of a Nation" Here for 3 Days, Commencing Tomorrow.

No other industry in the same given time ever drew as rapidly in America as the business enterprises that are commonly classified as motion picture industries. In capital invested and financial returns from those inventions the moving picture is now the fifth greatest combination in America.

The thing began as a five cent enterprise. In ten years' time it has steadily grown until today great institutions all over the land are devoted to the manufacture of moving pictures. Millions are invested in some of the finest theaters in the world. Hundreds of thousands find employment in the different branches of the work. Even high finance has taken notice of the once lowly "movie" and films are now a common stock for dealings on the great exchanges of the country. The one man who has done more than all others to dignify the new form of art is David Wark Griffith, whose tireless energy and art are responsible for the first $2 moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation. It is estimated that before this great production has exhausted, its earning capacity it will be seen by ten million people in America. Later on it will exceed these figures in the other countries of the world. It is conservatively estimated the big attraction will ultimately earn over eight million dollars. Not a bad income on an original investment of $500,000. This prospect stamps "The Birth of a Nation" the greatest piece of theatrical property the current century has brought forth if not the greatest winner of all ages.

"The Birth of a Nation," will be seen at the Amsterdam Theater for three days, commencing tomorrow evening, matinees will be given daily starting Friday afternoon. Seats are now selling at the theater box office for the entire engagement.

AT AMSTERDAM THEATRE THIS THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY.

Noted film star Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation."

PAGE FOUR, Amsterdam Evening Recorder 4/12

EVENING RECORDER And Daily Democrat.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Amsterdam theatre tomorrow for the balance of the week, is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vast and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest forore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil war and the horrors of reconstruction are made to live again and the nation reborn is apothesized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen in this city for a three days' engagement commencing Thursday evening of this week, with matinees Friday and Saturday. Seats are now selling at the theatre box office for the entire engagement.

THE OIL CITY DERRICK.

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Opera House Friday and Saturday, a thrilling association with the issues of today. The great crisis of 1861-70 as pictured in the play, have their lesson for the Americans of today. The North and the South in intercecine struggle, the strategy of the Petersburg campaign and of Sherman's march to the sea; Lee's surrender to Grant, and the aftermath of war in the reconstruction period—all these form a serial of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interest out of the terrible conflict a new nation, united in spiritual, as well as geographical, ties was born. The rise of American patriotism never burned brighter than it does today, and the play which shows the evolution from the past to the present will be gladly welcomed at its local presentation here.

OIL CITY [illegible]

"Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the opera house, Friday and Saturday, matinee and evening, Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil war and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the theater at every performance.

FAYETTEVILLE OBSERVER

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Lafayette Theatre, Fayetteville, for three nights, beginning Monday, April 17, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, has enabled him to surpass for any stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Frietchie" seem tame after seeing the splendors of "The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Homeric grandeur. The night riding of the Ku Klux Klan looks like a company of avenging spectres sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

This realistic picture of history in the making is of untold value to both old and young. Besides the historical worth of this great spectacle the constant emotional throb of the romantic story thrills the hearts of all. It is the supreme achievement of modern historianism in its new guise untrammelled by the limitations of the theatre. —Adv.

4/12

Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the opera house, Friday and Saturday, matinee and evening, Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil war and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the theater at every performance.

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

y REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

t is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say some-g about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying ething about it. When one has n crowded upon, pressed down and over it is against nature not to ke some kind of an outcry.

hat is the way one feels when com-out of the Liberty Theater. The g is vast. It is overwhelming. thing like it has ever before been upon the stage.

he tension of the performance is a stagie feature of it, but it is that ich one feels most poignantly after ee straight hours. It begins in an y way, but commences soon to find muscle and goes on to the end, nding upon one's senses with blows t come heavier and heavier, more more rapid.

t is not apparent what are the unds of the objections urged against or what is the animus of those who scheming to have the exhibition hibited.

he natonal board of censorship has proved it and reaffirmed its ap-val. The popular indorsement ich the play has since received by thousands who are seeing it daily l require more than small prejudices moral eccentricities to disturb. In meantime efforts to suppress it are s far successful in nothing so much in giving it wider and more remu-ative publicity.

he intimate familiarity which Da-W. Griffith has shown with the nts of the reconstruction period g with the detailed scholarly dy which he has made of the wider ritory of events which the play cov-renders the production one of sur-sing educational value to those who re either young children still or even born in the stirring years of 1860 to 0. A boy can learn more true his-y and get more of the atmosphere the period by sitting down for three rs before the film which Mr. Grif-has produced with such artistic ll than by weeks and months of dy in the classroom.

his drama is a telling illustration of possibilities of motion pictures as instrument of instruction in his-y.

he criticism that it exhibits the ne-in an unfortunate light and that s calculated to engender racial ani-sity is fully met by the considera-n that it represents the negro, not he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

FINEST MOTION PICTURE COMING

One of the Famous D. W. Griffith Successes to be Seen Here Soon at Local Theatre.

D. W. Griffith and His Photographer at Work

D. W. Griffith's great photoplay success, "The Avenging Conscience," which will be seen here soon, has been enthusiastically praised by newspapers all over the country. The following is what the Philadelphia North American thinks of the production:—

It is difficult to spare superlatives in writing of "The Avenging Conscience," certainly the finest, if not the greatest, motion picture ever made, which had its local premiere at the Chestnut Street Opera House yesterday afternoon. It is the handiwork of D. W. Griffith, who "The Birth of a Nation," is running New York.

"The Avenging Conscience" has neither the vast economic effects nor the prodigal employment of supernumeraries of the other film, but in its way it is a more perfect accomplishment. For pure theatrical stimulus and dramatic tensity, coupled with a feeling for the poetic and grotesque, it has never been equaled.

For the germ of the story, which occupies 6000 feet of celluloid, Mr. Griffith, essentially an American producer, has gone to an American author, Edgar Allan Poe. He has taken that wierd literary cameo, "The Tell-Tale Heart," and has developed from it a harrowing yet human and sympathetic narrative of idyllic love, murder, remorse and the tragic culmination of these things.

The tale concerns an uncle whose orphaned nephew is his only joy. When the latter neglects his studies for a girl with whom he is infatuated, the older man denounces her, incurring the hatred of his charge. The youth strangles him. Nothing apparently stands in the way of his union with "Annabel Lee," nothing except that terrible pursuer, conscience.

The phantom of the dead arises between him and his sweetheart, and finally a confession is wrung from him by a detective, to escape from whom he flees to a barricaded house stocked with firearms. A fight at long range between hunted and hunters ensues, the murderer hanging himself when ammunition gives out. "Annabel" throws herself from a cliff to death.

This bare recital gives some idea of the strong drama of the production, but the eye alone can bear witness to the compelling beauty of its presentation. In the supernatural portions, visions of the Christ and of the "red hordes of hell" lend mystic and eerie elements to the scenes. The whole fabric of the film is steeped in fleshly and spiritual glamour, which is of the very essence of poetry. Superlative acting is done by Henry Walthall, as the murderer; Spottiswoode Aitken, as the uncle, and Blanche Sweet as Annabel.

THE DAILY ARDMOREITE

ESCAPE OF BOOTH AFTER ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN, "BIRTH OF A NATION."

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film, but impossible for the "indoor drama" is illustrated by the Ford's Theatre scene in "The Birth of a Nation," which is shown at the Palace Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's Theatre in April 1865, but also the auditorium of the theatre, the audience of the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keen is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman whose head has fallen back in the stage box and at the assassin Booth who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the box draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical realism has never been achieved before. It is part of what is meant by the so-called "new art" for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous art achievements of the film drama.

THE DECATURS DAILY

Mae Marsh, one of the great actresses in D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." Masonic Theatre, April 17-18-19.

Amsterdam (N.Y.) Sentinel 4/13

The surrender of General Lee to General Grant as pictured in "The Birth of a Nation", at the Amsterdam Theatre, April 13, 14, 15.

"The Birth of a Nation" Opens at the Amsterdam Theater Tonight.

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with evening's performance ipens an engagement of three days at the Amsterdam Theater, commencing tonight, with matinees Friday and Saturday.

The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theater live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner, Elsie Stineman, and that of the Unionist, Captain Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken south are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part-singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old wartime tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments," of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Spottiswoode and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch.

Matinees will be given daily throughout the engagement, starting tomorrow afternoon at 2:15 sharp. Seats are now selling at the theater box office for the entire engagement. Matinee prices 25c to $1 and evening prices 25c to $1 with a very few at $1.50 and $2.00.

Amsterdam Evening Recorded

APRIL 13, 1916.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Quite the most wonderful of the many remarkable scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" which will commence an engagement of three days at the Amsterdam theatre, starting this evening, is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently between the hills. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation of a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swaths through the heart of the South. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox court house with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

Seats are now selling at the theatre box office for the entire engagement. Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday.

Daily Herald April 17

Wild rides of the Ku Klux Klansmen, scene in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," LaFayette Theatre, Fayetteville, three nights, beginning Monday April 17, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

Fayetteville Weekly Democrat 4/13

DAVID W. GRIFFITH, Producer of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Masonic Theatre April 17, 18 and 19.

GAINESVILLE, TEXAS,

'BIRTH OF A NATION' COMPANY ARRIVES

The company producing the "Birth of a Nation," arrived in the city this morning at 9:30 bringing with them a solid car-load of scenery and mechanical effects and their own sixteen-piece orchestra. This is the most wonderful production ever presented to the American public and the citizens of Gainesville and surrounding towns are arranging to witness the spectacle in large numbers.

The advance sale for tonight indicates capacity business. A special matinee will be given Friday and Saturday for the benefit of out-of-town people who cannot attend the night performances. Special prices for matinee. Have your seats reserved at once for Friday and Saturday night.

OIL CITY DERRICK,

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

In each of the large cities where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" which will be seen at the Opera House Friday and Saturday was produced last summer, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box offices. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theatre these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared. "Oh, there won't be any advance sale," said the box office attendant wearily when asked about an engagement. It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—not words—to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop, Boston's Tremont street, looked like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of "The Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the curb or even to the next street. The same phenomenon has been repeated in all the other cities which the play has visited the present season. It means of course that the high-class theatre is not moribund. Only the touch of David W. Griffith's master wizardry has been required to infuse it with life. It

New Decatur (Ala) Daily 4/13

Scene from D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at Masonic Theatre April 17, 18 and 19.

Marsh, one of the great actresses in D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." Masonic Theatre, April 17-18-19.

S ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A ION," WHICH COMES TO THE ONIC THEATRE APRIL 17-18-19

00 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,- hor ; approximate cost of pro- ion $500,000.

les built up and then destroyed re.

e biggest battle of the civil war acted.

rd's theatre, Washington, repro- d to the smallest detail for the oln tragedy.

series of wild Ku Klux rides that nandeered a county for a day and $10,000.

omen's dresses used 25,000 yards Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards oth.

ght photography of battle scenes, nted and perfected at cost of $5,- onderful artillery duels in which shells—cost $80 apiece—were . Miles of trenches, thousands ghters, "was as it actually is." musical score of 40 pieces, hronized to the several thou- distinct and individual scenes. welve thousand feet of film in the lic picture represent 140,000 of al photography.

aking altogether the most stu- dous dramatic and spectacular en- rise that the brain of man has visioned and realized.

ecord run of over 800 consecutive formances in New York City. Al- holds the record for long runs in ton, Chicago, St. Louis, Philadel- , Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and Francisco.

Fayetteville (N.C.) Observer 4/13

Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, big scene in "THE BIRTH OF A TION," LaFayette Theatre, Fayetteville, three nights, beginning Monday. l 17, matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

Ardmore (Okla) 4/3

ARDMOREITE

MAE MARSH
In "The Birth of a Nation."

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Palace next week, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama, is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing, and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all of the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the young sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her face is better known than any actress in the world, and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

Oil City (Pa) Derrick 4/13

Battle of Petersburg. A Big scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Opera House, Friday and Saturday, April 14 and 15. Matinee 2:15 daily.

"Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" with the original metropolitan production company comes to the opera house Friday and Saturday. This is the mighty spectacle that employs motion picture, mechanical effects and music in a vast and thrilling presentation of Civil war and reconstruction days. It was doubly the sensation of New York, Chicago and Boston last spring and summer, first, because of its absolute artistic novelty and, second, because unsuccessful efforts were made to stop the production on the part of those who opposed it as a picturization of "The Clansman."

Wilkes (Pa) Times 4/13

Scene In The "Birth of a Nation"
At The Lyceum Theatre 3 Nights beginning Thursday April 20th

410

Kittanning (Pa.) Times 4/14

Scene From "The Birth Of a Nation"

At the Wick Monday At the Wick Tuesday At the Wick Wednesday

Kittanning (Pa.) Times 4/14

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Optical experts responsible for the perfect results of "The Birth of a Nation" projection at the Liberty Theatre, New York, arrived in Kittanning this morning and started work at the Wick opera house. The same scientific methods will be used in "The Birth of a Nation" engagement here. To the rear of the main floor, masons have laid a concrete base, above which steel workers have built a steel framework for the picture booth, thus assuring the picture machines' perfect rigidity and steadiness. The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focusing. They have likewise selected by means of eye-tests those locations in the house which will afford an optometrically perfect view of the film spectacle. Such seats are in the centre and rear of the ground floor and command $2 prices. Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted. Its complete success in New York shows the marvelous progress of picturized drama from the status of a toy to the eminence of an art. adv

MASONIC THEATRE, [illegible]
COMMENCING [illegible]

In each of the large cities [illegible] W. Griffith's "The Birth of a [illegible] which will soon be seen [illegible] sonic theatre, was produced [illegible] mer, there were long lines [illegible] waiting to buy seats at the [illegible] ces. Absolute capacity was [illegible] for many months. During [illegible] times that had fallen upon [illegible] tre, these lines or "queues" [illegible] pective buyers had practically [illegible] peared. "Oh, there wasn't [illegible] vance sale," said the box [illegible] tendant wearily when asked [illegible] an engagement. It took a [illegible] duction of pictures and [illegible] words—to bring back the [illegible] sent queues. New York's [illegible] Chicago's Loop, Boston's [illegible] Street, looked like old times [illegible] with the box office forces [illegible] the lines of "The Birth of a [illegible] admirers stretching to the [illegible] even to the next street. The [illegible] phenomenon has been repeated [illegible] the other cities which the [illegible] visited the present season. It [illegible] of course that the high-class [illegible] is not moribund.

Kittanning (Pa.) Times 4/14

THE DAILY ARDMOREITE

Ardmore (Okla.) 4/14

Lee and Grant at Appomattox

"The Birth of a Nation"

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Palace Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox court house, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Wilson he would have the support of the south in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the south had been beaten in a fair struggle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9, under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard, were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough, General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

4/14

"Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is that of making history live, he has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the north and the south.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story. The picture is the attraction today and Saturday at the opera house.

4/14

OPERA HOUSE—TONIGHT.

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is that of making history live, he has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the north and the south.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story. According to experts who have viewed the work, Griffith has not only surpassed in many ways the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-fashioned history or historical novel. A very eminent public man has nicknamed it "history by lightning."

Oil City Blizzard 4/14

VENANGO DAILY HERALD

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," at its reappearance here Friday and Saturday of this week will be accompanied by a complete symphonic orchestra, as it was at the time of its first appearance last fall. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes, adding to and vivifying the effect of the play.

...is Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

...illian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

...he Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

Elizabeth City (N.C.) Advance 4/14/16

...UCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in ... of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type which makes for photographic charm. She is singularly graceful, her features never lose their beauty. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting always sincerity as well as true ...e charm.

...ps the most poetical scene of the drama is the one in which Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

NY Evening Post Apl. 15

THE BOOK LOVERS.

["The Librarian" in the Boston Evening Transcript.]

I. The Shakspearean Exhibition.

(Scene: The room devoted to an exhibition about Shakspeare, in the ——— Library. Time: Yesterday afternoon, 4.30 o'clock.)

He—(age 24)
She—(age 21)

She (as they enter)—Oh! I love Shakspeare! I think his plays are so much better than the ones they have nowadays, don't you?

He (he wears spectacles and is fairly serious)—Of course they are. I—

She—Why is it, I wonder?

He—Well, they don't give any encouragement to a serious dramatist, nowadays.

She—They don't? Isn't that horrid of them? But I'm sure "The Birth of a Nation" was crowded for weeks and weeks. Mamma couldn't get tickets for ever so long.

He—I don't mean plays like "The Birth of a Nation." I mean serious, literary drama. Now, just for example—of course, I do not mean to compare it with Shakspeare, you understand, but there was that play of mine—

She—Oh, you never told me what happened to that. It had such a funny name—something about teeth.

He—"The Children's Teeth Are Set on Edge." It is a quotation from the Bible.

She—It sounds somehow like Shakspeare.

He—It was not meant to. It is a modern play—a study of the influence of heredity.

She—What was the hero like?

He—There was no hero. The principal protagonist—

She—What?

He—The principal protagonist. He realizes that he is losing his mind. He is strangely attracted to a girl who is also losing her mind. She has an uncle who is a raving maniac—

She—It sounds awfully jolly!

He—There was nothing jolly about it. I do not attempt to write comedy. It bores me . . . But here are the books. Look—these are the quartos.

She—Are they really?

He—It is very impressive, I think, to realize that these were actually printed in Shakspeare's lifetime.

She—Oh, awfully!

He—Of course the folios did not appear until after his death. That is rather sad, I think.

She—Oh, awfully. Did he really write all those—himself?

He—Yes, he did, unless the Baconians are right.

She—I do love Shakspeare. Don't you like to see his plays? Last winter I saw one of them. Let me see, what was it? Oh, I remember—"If I Were King." It was splendid.

He—See, this is the First Folio.

She—Oh, yes. Who's that ugly looking man?

He—That is Shakspeare himself.

She—What—that? Why, it is awful. You don't suppose he looked anything like that, do you?

He—He must have looked like it—or, rather, it must look like him. Here is a poem, by his friend, Ben Jonson, testifying that it is a good portrait.

She—Well, I should think his friends might have kept quiet about it—out of charity. It is terrible. I can never think of Shakspeare in the same way again. Have you seen Phyllis Neilson-Terry?

He—No.

She—I think she's awfully sweet. Oh! and I saw another Shakspeare play last winter—"The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife."

He—No; I don't think that was by Shakspeare.

She—Well, it was just like his style. Middle-agey, and all that. And there was another awfully funny one. Somebody and a Lion. That was like Shakspeare, too. People in the ancient Greek clothes, and all that. Oh, here's a picture of Forbes-Robertson!

He—But we haven't looked at the Folios yet.

She—Just a minute. I want to look at this picture of Forbes-Robertson. Oh, and here's Gertrude Elliott—I think she's awfully sweet, too, don't you? Why, this exhibition isn't so bad, after all. I wish I hadn't seen that horrid old sour picture of Shakspeare, though. . . . See, here's one of Forbes-Robertson in "Anthony and Cleopatra." I saw that, too. Oh, I love Shakspeare. He uses such good English—don't you think he does?

He—This is "Cæsar and Cleopatra." It's by Bernard Shaw.

She—Why, I saw one of those old books—what do you call 'em? And it had "Cæsar and Cleopatra" by Shakspeare. And here's Maude Adams as Juliet. But, I liked "If I Were King" best, I think. That's really the best one of Shakspeare's plays, don't you think so?

AMSTERDAM, N. Y. Sentinel 4/15

AMUSEMENTS

"The Birth of a Nation" Closes Its Engagement This Evening.

The incident of the young Confederate's release by President Lincoln's order, which gets a round of enthusiasm handclapping when presented in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Amsterdam Theater, was verified as an actual historical event by one of the spectators. G. L. Nordecal, of 174 West Eighty-Sixth street, New York, is the man to whom it happened. During the New York run of the play he visited D. W. Griffith's offices and told this remarkable story:

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive blockade—running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama Islands. I had served in the Confederate army but had been honorably discharged on account of sickness. My father then wanted me to go as his agent to Nassau. The only channel of intercourse was closed, however, when the Federals captured Fort Fisher, so father suggested that I should try to slip through the Northern lines and thence take steamer from New York.

"In civilian dress I managed to elude the Union pickets in Virginia, crossed the Potomac, took stage for Washington, but in the latter place I was arrested and thrown in prison as a Confederate enemy. It was feared that I would be court-martialed and executed or at best held prisoner until the close of the war. My fiancee's father, Alderman Samuel Lewis of New York, later acting mayor, came to Washington and worked in my behalf. Notwithstanding Secretary Stanton's opposition, he succeeded in convincing President Lincoln that I was not a spy. 'I will release the young man,' said President Lincoln, 'on one condition, that he take oath not to return to the southern states during the war.'

"I gladly took this oath and was released. Before leaving for the North for my marriage and residence in Alderman Lewis' family, I desired to thank President Lincoln. On being presented to Mr. Lincoln, I remember he shook me by the hand and said: 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.' I have never forgotten the great president's generosity and kind heartedness to a foe, and when I saw the picture that early experience was vividly unearthed."

Matinee this afternoon at 2:15; evening performance at 7:15.

New Decatur Ala 4/15

THE DECATURS DAILY

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Masonic theatre, commencing an engagement of three days on April 17, 18 and 19.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York, where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in telling the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000.

Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women, while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The "two-dollar movie," "The Birth of a Nation," will return to the Overholser April 27, 28, 29 and 30. This famous picture packed the Overholser for many engagements when it was here last fall.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the LaFayette Theatre, commencing an engagement of three nights on Monday, April 17. Matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, April 18 and 19.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York, where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in telling the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama. —Adv.

Decatur Ala (no) Review 4/15

NY 4/15

AMSTERDAM EVENING RECORDER

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will close its engagement at the Amsterdam theatre, this evening. "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the most widely discussed topics in the country. It established an absolutely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with music. It also created a tremendous sensation because of its vivid and more forceful treatment of the same theme as Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The consequences of the Civil war in southern reconstruction are fully dealt with, and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed the stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures, accompanying music and effects tell the coherent, logical and moving story. Seats are now selling at the theatre box office, performance starts at 8:15 sharp.

OIL CITY DERRICK

That Wonderful Picture.

The attendance at both the productions of "The Birth of a Nation" at the opera house Friday afternoon and evening was large and the matinee this afternoon brought out another very large audience. The gigantic spectacle of D. W. Griffith, referred to as the eighth wonder of the world, cost over $500,000 to produce and those who have not had the pleasure of witnessing the picture should take advantage of the opportunity this evening, the final production in Oil City. The wild ride of the Ku Klux Klans in which more than 3,000 horses are used is alone worth more than the price of admission. The music by the augmented orchestra is excellent and many of the scenes, from a historical point of view are very instructive.

The picture has enjoyed extended runs in the majority of the large cities of the country and the company which is in this city has been playing a number of return dates to capacity houses.

WATCH STAGEHANDS WORK.

Matinee Audience Sees Extra Force Hurry Mechanism for "The Birth of a Nation."

The matinee audience at the Opera house Friday afternoon for the production of D. W. Griffith's photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," saw everything connected with the staging of the elaborate production from the moment the company of 30 men entered the show house. The production was late in arriving in Oil City and when the hour for the curtain came it had only reached the house. Rather than disappoint patrons, many of whom had reserved their seats days in advance, the staging was hurriedly conducted while the audience watched with interest the work of the stage hands and directors. In the meantime the harpist of the orchestra played and when the curtain was finally raised at 3:20 o'clock the audience was in good humor and eager for the play.

The night presentation found the house crowded almost to capacity. Large advance sales for both afternoon and evening today indicate that previous records established in this city last November will be equalled, if not excelled.

In every way the production of yesterday lived up to the wonderful press notices that had gone before. Oil City people who saw "The Birth of a Nation" on its previous appearance here said that it was superior to the first appearance in the orchestration of its wonderful musical score, if such were possible.

The two performances of today will establish a record for a run of any theatrical production in this city. On the earlier visit of "The Birth of a Nation" five presentations were given. With today this will be increased to nine, and it is estimated that the picture will have shown to over 7,500 persons in this city.

TIMES-PICAYUNE 4/15

Tulane Theater.

Seats for the sixth week of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tulane Theater, will be placed on sale this morning and the usual Saturday morning rush is looked for. Although the Griffith spectacle has been presented 67 times before almost as many capacity audiences its popularity shows no signs of waning. It is being held another week for the especial convenience of Easter shoppers from outside the city, who will have no opportunity to see it in their home playhouses. At the conclusion of its New Orleans engagement the company, consisting of fifty musicians, electricians and mechanics, will head toward New York, playing return engagements in several important cities of the Upper South. Griffith repeatedly has stated that his masterpiece will never be shown except in the first class theaters of large cities, because the required electrical and stage facilities are not to be found elsewhere. Realization that the spectacle is beyond the reach of the moving picture exhibitors already has brought thousands to the Tulane from the small towns of Southern Mississippi and Louisiana and an unusually large number of visitors is expected next week.

Greenville (Miss) Democrat 4/15

BIRTH OF A NATION

Noted Griffith Picture Has Set a New Record.

D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" has started in on its second year of prosperity with the current month's booking. In the short space of twelve months this new form of entertainment has set a record which will likely stand for years to come. Within this limited lapse of time Griffith's mighty creation has been seen by more people in various parts of America than any other attraction ever presented on our stage. Its combined receipts in one year exceed the box office takings of any theatrical attraction ever booked in this country. A concise comparison illustrating this unprecedented success is shown in the statements which reveal that "The Birth of a Nation" has played to greater receipts in its first year than have been taken in by "Ben Hur" during the twelve or more years this attraction has been on tour.

Washington Herald 4/15

216

TS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

ch Comes to the Grand Theatre, Monday and Tuesday, April 24th and 25th.

00 scenes—18,000 characters—3,- horses. Approximate cost of pro on $500,000.

ties built up and then destroyed re.

e biggest battle of the Civil War acted.

rd's Theater, Washington, repro- to the smallest detail for the oln tragedy.

eries of Wild "Ku Klux" rides commandeered a county for a day ost $10,000.

men's dresses used 25,000 yards Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of t photography of battle scenes, ted and perfected at cost of $5,- derful artillery duels in which hells costing $30 a piece were Miles of trenches, thousands ters—"war as it actually is."

usical score of 40 pieces, syn- sed to the several thousand dis- nd individual scenes.

ive thousand feet of film in the picture representing 140,000 actual photograph.

317 Enid Morning News Apr 16/16 Okla

Assassination of Lincoln, "The Birth of a Nation," at the American Theatre.

Southern Ball on the eve of Bull Run, "The Birth of a Nation," at the American Theatre.

Oklahoman Oklahoman 4/16 Okla City

218

"The Birth of a Nation" Coming to the Overholser Theater, April 27, 28, 29, 30

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

Modesty Note.

Further tidings from William Burlock, the American press representative of the London production of "The Birth of a Nation," lend color to the report that his formal introduction to Queen Mary of England at the recent women war sufferers benefit was most eventful. Afterward in describing his emotions to a friend Mr. Burlock said: "When I was led up to the Queen I was almost as nervous as I was the day I met Valeska Suratt."

Telegraph
April 1916

...din's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

...r Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

...EFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is a reporter's notebook sketch of events, and there is a sordid of money in it.

...nk of three girls still in their who are piling up annual in... of over $100,000 in the aggre...

The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae ...h and Miriam Cooper, who play ...emanine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

THE DAILY ARDMOREITE
Ardmore, Sunday, April 16, 1916.

Birth of a Nation Visitors are invited to visit our New Store

Madden's

Evening Star 4/17

At the Wick Monday — At the Wick Tuesday — At the Wick Wednesday

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of [illegible] clean symbol of Venus, [illegible] mance, the dove. Not [illegible] point in their courtship [illegible] other, they lavish their [illegible] ternately on the nesting [illegible] scene in which Miss Gish displays exquisite charm is the one in which [illegible] with such grace [illegible] that the audi- [illegible] ures a delight- [illegible] contrasted in [illegible] with the beau- [illegible] Miss Miriam Cooper, Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

A special showing of "The Birth of a Nation" was given in Drury Lane Theatre, London, last Friday afternoon for the benefit of the Women War Workers' Fund. The entertainment was under royal patronage and Queen Mary, and Princess Victoria, with other members of the royal family, were present. The receipts exceeded $15,000 and Queen Mary sent D. W. Griffith, the American producer, her thanks and congratulations through his London manager.

D. W. Griffith's great photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was given in London Friday for the benefit of the Women War Workers' Fund before a most distinguished audience. Queen Mary occupied the royal box, with Queen Alexandra, Princesses Victoria and Mary, and Princes Henry and George. The receipts exceeded $15,000. Mr. Griffith's London manager was congratulated by Queen Mary.

New Orleans (La.) Picayune Daily 4/17

Scene from D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle "The Birth of a Nation."

OKLAHOMA CITY (Okla.) TIMES 4/17

"The Birth of a Nation."

Though he is still in his middle 30s and his rise to fortune and fame has been phenomenally rapid, D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Overholser for half a week starting Thursday night, April 27, is not of mushroom growth. Like most successful men, he has had his hard knocks and has won only through perseverance, coupled with merit.

A native of a small Kentucky town, Griffith early took it into his head to be either an actor or a dramatist. He went to Louisville, which to his imagination appeared the biggest city in the world, and there, after several discouraging attempts to "break into the profession," secured a job from the director of a stock company temporarily installed in Macauley's theater. His achievements were not so brilliant as to give him prominence, and he drifted to New York. He attached himself there as a utility actor to a motion picture studio at $5 a day the days he worked.

While attempting to act, Griffith was also attempting to write plays, and soon his studio began accepting small scenarios from him. Then, one day, a director was ill and Griffith was permitted to direct a piece of little consequence. But his one-reel production proved him to posses such an extraordinary talent in this line that he was immediately given other opportunities, and it was not long before he became recognized as a director with a future.

As production succeeded production, his fame spread wide and wider in the motion picture world and among movie "fans" until finally came the terrific climax, "The Birth of a Nation," which made Griffith's name the biggest in the entire amusement world of today.

Hartford Courant 4/17

COMING TO THE GRAND

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago, "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented at the Grand Theatre Monday and Tuesday April 34 and 35. The first half of the D. W. Griffith epic unrolls scenes and incidents of the Civil War on a scale of magnificent diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South including the carpet bagger negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

A complete metropolitan production is to be on view here it requires a company of 50 actors and actresses, a complete symphony orchestra, and two baggage cars of effects.

Hartford Courant 4/17

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the LaFayette Theatre exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tortured by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the programme. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and with this frame work they make these wonderful characters live again.

They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are rapidly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across bloodstained plains. The human tide weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded.

Oklahoma [illegible] 4/17

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The night battle scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Overholser for a week, were actually taken at night. The burning of Atlanta and the escape of the refugees transpired under the stars. Griffith conducted many experiments before he succeeded in arriving at methods that gave satisfactory results. He got his pictures finally, by the use of great illuminators, which he placed and of especially constructed illuminating bombs. The photography was one of the best features of the production.

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST is impossible to witness the film rama "The Birth of a Nation," ow being shown at the Liberty heater, and not want to say some- about it.

ry one who has seen it is saying thing about it. When one has crowded upon, pressed down and ver it is against nature not to some kind of an outcry.

t is the way one feels when com- t of the Liberty Theater. The is vast. It is overwhelming. ng like it has ever before been pon the stage.

tension of the performance is single feature of it, but it is that one feels most poignantly after straight hours. It begins in an way, but commences soon to find uscle and goes on to the end, ling upon one's senses with blows come heavier and heavier, more ore rapid.

is not apparent what are the ds of the objections urged against what is the animus of those who cheming to have the exhibition bited.

natonal board of censorship has wed it and reaffirmed its ap- l. The popular indorsement the play has since received by housands who are seeing it daily equire more than small prejudices oral eccentricities to disturb. In eantime efforts to suppress it are far successful in nothing so much giving it wider and more remu- ive publicity.

intimate familiarity which Da- W. Griffith has shown with the s of the reconstruction period with the detailed scholarly which he has made of the wider ory of events which the play cov- enders the production one of sur- g educational value to those who either young children still or even rn in the stirring years of 1860 to

A boy can learn more true his- and get more of the atmosphere e period by sitting down for three before the film which Mr. Grif- has produced with such artistic than by weeks and months of in the classroom.

is drama is a telling illustration of possibilities of motion pictures as nstrument of instruction in his-

e criticism that it exhibits the ne- in an unfortunate light and that calculated to engender racial ani- ity is fully met by the considera- that it represents the negro, not e is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had th chains broken from him and when h was rioting in the deliciousness of i liberty so new and untried that h had not yet learned to understand i and was as ignorant as a baby of th way to use it. It is in this respect ex actly true to history, and if it reflect upon the negro as he was then it i a compliment to the black man of to day. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

Lillian Gish, in "The Birth of a Natio n" at Masonic theatre April 17, 18, 19.

Miriam Cooper in "The Birth of a Na tion at Masonic Theatre Apr. 17-18-19.

Striking Scene in Famous Photo-play

Meeting of Generals Grant and Lee At Appomattox Court House, In "Birth of a Nation."

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" at the American theatre, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the south from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photo-play.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant having finished reading and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrasting manner, equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

"The Birth of a Nation"

Art is long, says the poet, and outlasts throne on emperor. Occassionally, however, old are ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the sceptre and remakes the world. This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Lyceum Theatre, Wilson, next Thursday night April 20th. Three nights with matinees Friday and Saturday, April 21, 22.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater throll.

Call 4/18

ELWOOD, IND.,

GREAT PICTURE WAS CHEERED

Audience Went Wild as Climax After Climax Was Reached.

EXCEEDED ALL EXPECTATIONS

Wonderful, Wonderful.

No other word can be found that would successfully convey to the mind of those who have not yet seen it, the magnitude, the attention to detail, the historical significance and the hundreds of thrilling scenes shown in the masive production, "The Birth of a Nation" which opened a three day's engagement at the grand last night

Seeing this picture is some what similar to a man's first visit to Niagara Falls. Like Nature's great spectacle, there is scarcely a person who has not hard of "The Birth of a Nation" and extravagant ideas have ben formed as to what it will be like. Some go perhaps fearing that they have expected too much and that they will be disappointed, but as the picture is thrown on the screen and the thread of the story approaches the firs climax, the cal to arms as it was heard in both the North and the Southland following Lincoln's declaration that the states must remain a union, the audience finds itself under tes spell of the producer's graphic skill.

As the men and boys in the southern town answer the bugle's call, leaving th ball room and the bonfire lighted in the celebration of the South's claim of independence, the orchestra, which until this time has been little more than audible, breaks out in a sudden burst of martial music that starts the blod to runing quicker and every person in the audience slips to the edge of their feeling themselves almost a that southern scene of half go. A few persons in of the house start a

(See page 8)

a ca backach through my loins. I notice
tions were highly treated by dotcors a kidney medicines. Witho lief until I began using Doa ney Pills. One box helped me much that I used two more. Af that I was entirely curdl of this trouble." (Statement given July 3, 1906.)

CURED TO STAY CURED

On January 31, 1916, Mr. Pugh said: "I have never had any trouble with my kidneys since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Pugh has twice publicly recommended. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

BELIEVE SIGN.

That Bore Notice It Is No Money.

safe is not lock in any

Rd 4/18

ELWOOD DAILY RECORD

PEER OF ALL SCREEN SHOWS

IS "BITRH OF A NATION" SAY ELWOOD PEOPLE.

Opening Performance Monday Night Greeted by Great Display of Enthusiasm.

Folks, the one best bet for today is "The Birth of a Nation." If you haven't seen this wonderful screen story, don't let the present opportunity of seeing it here at home pass you. If it costs you a dollar or a couple of dollars for that matter don't worry. You'll say that it's the biggest entertainment spectacle you ever gazed on. The mechanical perfection with which the performance moves will delight you: the music, by an orchestra of twenty musicians, will thrill you to the marrow, and the wonderful action which marks the big scenes of the play will fairly raise you from your seat, if there is still red blood in your veins.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been hotly criticised in some quarters on the ground that it seeks to uphold slavery as an institution, and would leave the impression that during the days of the civil war the south was right and the north was wrong. This criticism is groundless. But the play is the most marvelous and effective preachment against negro supremacy and racial equality which has ever been penned. And it is told in such a way that there is no mistaking the theme. Moreover it is a wonderful plea for peace—a scathing arrangment of war, because it deals not so much with the pomp and pageantry of military strife, but with the desolation which attends it and follows in its wake. But over and above it all is the triumphant birth of a new and reunited nation. It is worth something to every patriotic citizen to see and realize the agonies thru which both the north and the south had to pass that the heritage of a reunited country, free from the running sore of human slavery, might be established. Thru the story runs two of as pretty love stories as were ever told making a thread of heart emotion which adds immensely to the interest.

The first part deals with the civil war. It opens before war is declared. The ties which bound friends at the north and at the south together are rudely shattered as the darkening clouds of civil strife come lower and lower each day. The north is seen standing solidly for national unity, as opposed to the south's contentions for state sovereignty. The scenes which deal with some of the great battles of the war are thrilling in the extreme, thousands of men, horses and cannon being used in them. They lead down to the surender of Lee at Appomatox, when the southerners, defeated, go back to reclaim their desolated country.

Then follows the assassination of Lincoln, portraved as the best friend which the south had at the north, in a scene which is remarkable for the detail with which it is reproduced.

The second part deals with the rex Thomas Huston, rod mill worker, born 1891, and Hazel Hines, born 1896, both of Anderson.

Marriage Licenses.

George C. Gladbach, machinist, born 1893, and Lena A. Gaiter, born

SMITH SWEARS TOO MUCH

According to Wife's Complaint, In Suit for a Divorce.

Rosa Smith, the mother of three children whose ages range from 10 years to 4 years, has brought suit for divorce from John L. Smith, whom she married eighteen years ago. The mother asks for the custody of the children. The wife alleges cruel treatment as ground for divorce. Mrs. Smith charges that her husband's drinking caused her great distress of mind and worry.

Oil City Ha/ Berg and

Birth of a Nation.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," making a return visit to the opera house April 14 and 15, has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance besides this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 20,000, details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theaters of the country.

Wilson Ne/ Times 4/18

"The Birth of a Nation"

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in stating "The Birth of a Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now, are the little groups of actors, the pinchback scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of fifty years ago. At the Lyceum Theatre, Wilson, for three nights beginning Thursday, April 20th, with matinees Friday and Saturday.

Rochester Calif

"Birth of a Nation" is Revelation of Possibilities of Silent Drama

"The Birth of a Nation" is a revelation of the possibilities of the silent drama. This is the verdict of those who saw the great D. W. Griffith production for the first time last night at the Masonic theatre, the confirmed opinion of those who saw it for the second time or for the third time. That it stands out with a startling aloofness from all other photoplays ever presented locally is due in part to the matchless art of Griffith, the director; in part to the consummate skill of the author, who in this epic of the mute stage has given to the younger generation of today a new horror of the reconstruction period, and a broader glimpse into the realities of the Sixties.

Although race antipathy is there—all the way through the last act—it is carefully concealed by the producer and author. Predominant everywhere is the birth of a new nation, a nation founded on liberty and cemented by union. The chasm that once separated North and South is so carefully bridged that the photoplay arouses alike the intense patriotism of the two sections; there is a universal condemnation of the deliberate purpose to foist black rule upon a white people.

The story is largely that of "The Clansman"—only more realistic. In the play the audience learns only by the spoken word that Flora Cameron has jumped from a cliff to save her honor from the renegade negro who pursued her; in the photoplay the girl is seen to leap to her death, and her bleeding body is shown crushed on the rocks below as she dies in the arms of her brother. The physical limitations of the legitimate stage are overcome, and thousands of men and horses are used in the reproduction with minute detail of famous battle scenes, of race riots, of the dashes of the Ku Klux Klan.

The play is in two acts. The first shows the South of slave days. It depicts the break between North and South, shows the boys from Dixie marching off to war; shows the hard fought field, the gallant charge of the "Little Colonel;" the death of Lincoln, and many other scenes equally as thrilling. The second act is devoted to reconstruction, to the time when Thad Stevens, leader of the radicals, attempted to place the black heel on the white neck. It ends with two pair of lovers locked in each others arms. The double love story that runs throughout the play is scarcely needed. So big are the stakes played for, so paramount is the welfare of the nation, that the audience is painfully reminded that nature is "so careful of the species, so careless of the individual."

What "The Birth of a Nation" would be without the twenty-piece orchestra which is its "better half" is hard to conjecture. This orchestra is a wonderful aggregation of musicians, the orchestration as perfect as the play itself. The stately dances of Ante-Bellum days are executed on the stage in perfect time to the music below, a bugler sounds reveille or taps with a realism that is almost uncanny; the bursting of shells, the galloping of armies, the popping of bullets, the roll of the drum, the shrill treble of the fife—these are only some of the sounds that are reproduced with a remarkable fidelity.

Elsie, his daughter—Lillian Gish.
Phil, his elder son—Elmer Clifton.
Tod, the founger son—Robert Harron.
Jeff, the blacksimth—Wallace Reed.
Lydia Brown, Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper—Mary Alden.
Silas Lynch, mulatto lieutenant governor—Geo. Seigmann
Gus, a renegade negro—Walter Long.
Abraham Lincoln—Joseph Henabery.
John Wilkes Booth—Raoul Walsh.
Gen. U. S. Grant—Donald Crisp.
Gen. Robt. E. Lee—Howard Gaye.
Nelse, an old-fashioned negro—William DeVaull.
Jake, a black man faithful unto death—William Freeman.
Stoneman's servant—Thomas Wilson.
Cabinet members, generals, military aides and attaches, secretaries, senators, representatives, visitors, soldiers, abolitionists, Ku Klux Klansmen, plantation crowds and mobs.
Orchestra under direction of Orville Mayhood.

Was "Hurried Up."

Oklahoma City (Okla.) Times 4/18

"The Birth of a Nation."

Critics of art and music find as much in "The Birth of a Nation," which plays a return engagement at the Overholser theater the last half of next week, to excite their sensibilities as do critics of the drama. The dramatic appeal, indeed, is reduced to a mathematical demonstration by the Griffith spectacle. No one who sees the frenzies of excitement that pass through the audience wave after wave can question for a moment the power of the production from the dramatic standpoint.

From the standpoint of the art of the landscape painter, Griffith must be credited with achievements new in the world of the motion picture. It cannot be the camera alone that gives to the creation of Sherman's march to the sea an atmosphere, as the art critics term it, that differentiates the work of a painter from the work of a photographer. It is a power of selection and grouping that seems instinctive with Griffith and that no other producer possesses. Sherman's march is a work of genius as surely as are the vast military canvasses of David.

The musical critic finds in the score of "The Birth of a Nation" the same qualities that make the Wagnerian operas so remarkable. His ear is delighted with the constantly recurring themes and motives so truly interpretive of the actions and passions of the personages involved.

And yet, with all the marvelous correctness and technical perfection, the art and the music are as simple and direct and stirring as are the dramatic qualities. Like all works of true genius, "The Birth of a Nation" is universally comprehensible. The "Iliad" of Homer is as easy to read as "Gulliver's Travels" and, vice versa Gulliver is as sure a stroke of genius as Achilles.

Ardmore (Okla.) Ardmoreite 4/18

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GREAT SPECTACLE

PACKED HOUSE SAW FIRST PERFORMANCE AT THE PALACE LAST NIGHT. MOST AMAZING SPECTACLE EVER PRODUCED.

The Palace theatre was packed last night to witness the initial performance of "The Birth of a Nation," and from the time the first flash of light was thrown upon the screen, and the magnificent orchestra took up the incidental music until the last scene was portrayed, the audience was held spellbound, and never was a more appreciative one assembled in this city. To attempt to describe "The Birth of a Nation," is beyond the ken of ordinary individuals, indescribable would come as near to fitting the subject as any one word in the vocabulary. It deals with a subject that is familiar to thousands who are still living and who were participants in the stirring events portrayed, and is equally familiar to casual students of American history. Yet the stupendous scale upone which it is produced, is astounding.

Those who miss seeing this magnificent spectacle while in this city, will miss something the like of which may never be shown here again. Every person should see it, it is instructive and inspiring, filled with a sprinkling of smiles and oceans of tears, but in the end makes one glad that he or she is an American citizen. The nation owes a debt of gratitude to D. W. Griffith for his stupendous conception.

Call 4/18

ELWOOD, IND.,

GREAT PICTURE WAS CHEERED

Audience Went Wild as Climax After Climax Was Reached.

EXCEEDED ALL EXPECTATIONS

Wonderful, Wonderful.

No other word can be found that would successfully convey to the mind of those who have not yet seen it, the magnitude, the attention to detail, the historical significance and the hundreds of thrilling scenes shown in the masive production, "The Birth of a Nation" which opened a three day's engagement at the grand last night

Seeing this picture is some what similar to a man's first visit to Niagara Falls. Like Nature's great spectacle, there is scarcely a person who has not hard of "The Birth of a Nation" and extravagant ideas have ben formed as to what it will be like. Some go perhaps fearing that they have expected too much and that they will be disappointed, but as the picture is thrown on the screen and the thread of the story approaches the firs climax, the cal to arms as it was heard in both the North and the Southland following Lincoln's declaration that the states must remain a union, the audience finds itself under tes spell of the producer's graphic skill.

As the men and boys in the southern town answer the bugle's call, leaving th ball room and the bonfire lighted in the celebration of the South's claim of independence, the orchestra, which until this time has been little more than audible, breaks out in a sudden burst of martial music that starts the blod to runing quicker and every person in the audience slips to the edge of their seats, feeling themselves almost a part of that southern scene of half a century ago. A few persons in lifferent parts of the house start a

(Continued on page 8)

ELWOOD DAILY RECORD

PEER OF ALL SCREEN SHOWS

IS "BITRH OF A NATION" SAY ELWOOD PEOPLE.

Opening Performance Monday Night Greeted by Great Display of Enthusiasm.

Folks, the one best bet for today is "The Birth of a Nation." If you haven't seen this wonderful screen story, don't let the present opportunity of seeing it here at home pass you. If it costs you a dollar or a couple of dollars for that matter, don't worry. You'll say that it's the biggest entertainment spectacle you ever gazed on. The mechanical perfection with which the performance moves will delight you; the music, by an orchestra of twenty musicians, will thrill you to the marrow, and the wonderful action which marks the big scenes of the play will fairly raise you from your seat, if there is still red blood in your veins.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been hotly criticised in some quarters on the ground that it seeks to uphold slavery as an institution, and would leave the impression that during the days of the civil war the south was right and the north was wrong. This criticism is groundless. But the play is the most marvelous and effective preachment against negro supremacy and racial equality which has ever been penned. And it is told in such a way that there is no mistaking the theme. Moreover it is a wonderful plea for peace—a scathing arrangnment of war, because it deals not so much with the pomp and pageantry of military strife, but with the desolation which attends it and follows in its wake. But over and above it all is the triumphant birth of a new and reunited nation. It is worth something to every patriotic citizen to see and realize the agonies thru which both the north and the south had to pass that the heritage of a reunited country, free from the running sore of human slavery, might be established. Thru the story runs two of as pretty love stories as were ever told making a thread of heart emotion which adds immensely to the interest.

The first part deals with the civil war. It opens before war is declared. The ties which bound friends at the north and at the south together are rudely shattered as the darkening clouds of civil strife come lower and lower each day. The north is seen standing solidly for national unity, as opposed to the south's contentions for state sovereignty. The scenes w[illegible] deal with some of the great [illegible] of the war are thrilling [illegible] treme, thousands of [illegible] cannon being used [illegible] lead down to th[illegible] Appomatox.

[illegible] fested, go[illegible]

Birth of a Nation.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," making a return visit to the opera house April 14 and 15, has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Bluebird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance besides this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 20,000 details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theaters of the country.

Wilson Ms
Times 4/18

"The Birth of a Nation"

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in stating "The Birth of a Nation," is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now, are the little groups of actors, the pinchback scenery and th petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of Reconstruction are made to live again and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Mr. Grifith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures [illegible] sic and effects tell vivid[illegible] unty ja[illegible] is being ma[illegible] g tale of fifty years [illegible] is said [illegible] has so[illegible] ts beginning have financial back[illegible] h matinees will come to the res[illegible] that Judge Pence will [illegible] fix the amount of bond o[illegible] accused brother may sec[illegible] lease from jail. In view o[illegible] that Stanley is under grand [illegible] dictment for second degree [illegible] it is not expected the court wou[illegible] the bond at less than $10,000 and amount required might be still gre[illegible] er. Thre is not much probabilit[illegible] that a $10,000 bond would be forthcoming even if the court should consent to accept that figure, so chances are that Stanley will [illegible] remain in jail until his [illegible] posed of. It may be [illegible] for the Summitv[illegible] have the case [illegible] in May, [illegible] will a[illegible] er action [illegible] pers. The [illegible] practically [illegible] er been report[illegible] the local heal[illegible] sonally inspect[illegible] past ten days. [illegible] are continuing [illegible] noon, visiting [illegible] the city and [illegible] ic nature may [illegible] s over.

[illegible] reens.

[illegible] ed as Back [illegible] and to[illegible] work of [illegible] at has [illegible] ous-

Co., Will go to the Appelate Court

Judge Pence yesterday refused the McBeth-Evans Glass company a new trial in the damage suit brought by Earl Brunson of this city and the case will go to the appellate court. The circut court jury gave Bunson, who is a glass worker, a verdict for $5,000 damages for injuries sustained to his eyesight because of alleged working conditions n the factory Particles of poison from a mixing room floating in the air, are asserted to have caused caused cataracts to grow on Brunson's eyes.

Smoking on Jess.

[illegible] FOR HERSELF

Asserts Husbands Talk and Accusations Broke Up the Home.

Charging that the treatment she received at the hands of her husband during the 18 yeas of their married life was such that she was finally forced to leave him, since which time she has been working and supporting both herself and children, Mrs. Rosa Smith yesterday filed through her attorney, O. A. Armfield, suit for divorce from John L. Smith. The separation occurred last May and since then the couple have lived apart.

In her complaint Mrs. Smith serts that the husband's cur[illegible] her presence caused her th[illegible] distress and she also as[illegible] constantly made fal[illegible] against her. In ad[illegible] she asks [illegible] years to 4 years [illegible] ent suit for divorce from [illegible] the married [illegible] Rosa Smith, the mother of three children whose ages range from 10 years to 4 years [illegible] ent suit for divorce from [illegible] the married [illegible] against her. In ad[illegible] she asks [illegible] years to 4 years [illegible] ent suit for divorce from [illegible] the married [illegible]

SMITH SWEARS TOO MUCH

According to Wife's Complaint, In Suit for a Divorce.

Eppard. The bonds bear 4½ per cent interest payable semi-annually.

Muscogee (Okla)

DAILY, TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1918.

"Birth of a Nation" is Revelation of Possibilities of Silent Drama

"The Birth of a Nation" is a revelation of the possibilities of the silent drama. This is the verdict of those who saw the great D. W. Griffith production for the first time last night at the Masonic theatre, the confirmed opinion of those who saw it for the second time or for the third time. That it stands out with a startling aloofness from all other photoplays ever presented locally is due in part to the matchless art of Griffith, the director; in part to the consummate skill of the author, who in this epic of the mute stage has given to the younger generation of today a new horror of the reconstruction period, and a broader glimpse into the realities of the Sixties.

Although race antipathy is there—all the way through the last act—it is carefully concealed by the producer and author. Predominant everywhere is the birth of a new nation ,a nation founded on liberty and cemented by union. The chasm that once separated North and South is so carefully bridged that the photoplay arouses alike the intense patriotism of the two sections; there is a universal condemnation of the deliberate purpose to foist black rule upon a white people.

The story is largely that of "The Clansman"—only more realistic. In the play the audience learns only by the spoken word that Flora Cameron has jumped from a cliff to save her honor from the renegade negro who pursued her; in the photoplay the girl is seen to leap to her death, and her bleeding body is shown crushed on the rocks below as she dies in the arms of her brother. The physical limitations of the legitimate stage are overcome, and thousands of men and horses are used in the reproduction with minute detail of famous battle scenes, of race riots, of the dashes of the Ku Klux Klan.

The play is in two acts. The first shows the South of slave days. It depicts the break between North and South, shows the boys from Dixie marching off to war; shows the hard fought field, the gallant charge of the "Little Colonel;" the death of Lincoln, and many other scenes equally as thrilling. The second act is devoted to reconstruction, to the time when Thad Stevens, leader of the radicals, attempted to place the black heel on the white neck. It ends with two pair of lovers locked in each others arms. The double love story that runs throughout the play is scarcely needed. So big are the stakes played for, so paramount is the welfare of the nation, that the audience is painfully reminded that nature is "so careful of the species, so careless of the individual."

What "The Birth of a Nation" would be without the twenty-piece orchestra which is its "better half" is hard to conjecture. This orchestra is a wonderful aggregation of musicians, the orchestration as perfect as the play itself. The stately dances of Ante-Bellum days are executed on the stage in perfect time to the music below, a bugler sounds reveille or taps with a realism that is almost uncanny; the bursting of shells, the galloping of armies, the popping of bullets, the roll of the drum, the shrill treble of the fife—these are only some of the sounds that are reproduced with a remarkable fidelity.

Elsie, his daughter—Lillian Gish.
Phil, his elder son—Elmer Clifton.
Tod, the founger son—Robert Harron.
Jeff, the blacksimth—Wallace Reed.
Lydia Brown, Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper—Mary Alden.
Silas Lynch, mulatto lieutenant governor—Geo. Seigmann
Gus, a renegade negro—Walter Long.
Abraham Lincoln—Joseph Henabery.
John Wilkes Booth—Raoul Walsh.
Gen. U. S. Grant—Donald Crisp.
Gen. Robt. E. Lee—Howard Gaye.
Nelse, an old-fashioned negro—William DeVaull.
Jake, a black man faithful unto death—William Freeman.
Stoneman's servant—Thomas Wilson.
Cabinet members, generals, military aides and attaches, secretaries, senators, representatives, visitors, soldiers, abolitionists, Ku Klux Klansmen, plantation crowds and mobs.
Orchestra under direction of Orville Mayhood.

Oklahoma City (Okla.) Times 4/18

"The Birth of a Nation."

Critics of art and music find as much in "The Birth of a Nation," which plays a return engagement at the Overholser theater the last half of next week, to excite their sensibilities as do critics of the drama. The dramatic appeal, indeed, is reduced to a mathematical demonstration by the Griffith spectacle. No one who sees the frenzies of excitement that pass through the audience wave after wave can question for a moment the power of the production from the dramatic standpoint.

From the standpoint of the art of the landscape painter, Griffith must be credited with achievements new in the world of the motion picture. It cannot be the camera alone that gives to the creation of Sherman's march to the sea an atmosphere, as the art critics term it, that differentiates the work of a painter from the work of a photographer. It is a power of selection and grouping that seems instinctive with Griffith and that no other producer possesses. Sherman's march is a work of genius as surely as are the vast military canvasses of David.

The musical critic finds in the score of "The Birth of a Nation" the same qualities that make the Wagnerian operas so remarkable. His ear is delighted with the constantly recurring themes and motives so truly interpretive of the actions and passions of the personages involved.

And yet, with all the marvelous correctness and technical perfection, the art and the music are as simple and direct and stirring as are the dramatic qualities. Like all works of true genius, "The Birth of a Nation" is universally comprehensible. The "Iliad" of Homer is as easy to read as "Gulliver's Travels" and, vice versa Gulliver is as sure a stroke of genius as Achilles.

Was "Hurried Up."

Ardmore (Okla) Ardmoreite 4/18

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GREAT SPECTACLE

PACKED HOUSE SAW FIRST PERFORMANCE AT THE PALACE LAST NIGHT. MOST AMAZING SPECTACLE EVER PRODUCED.

The Palace theatre was packed last night to witness the initial performance of "The Birth of a Nation," and from the time the first flash of light was thrown upon the screen, and the magnificent orchestra took up the incidental music until the last scene was portrayed, the audience was held spellbound, and never was a more appreciative one assembled in this city. To attempt to describe "The Birth of a Nation," is beyond the ken of ordinary individuals, indescribable would come as near to fitting the subject as any one word in the vocabulary. It deals with a subject that is familiar to thousands who are still living and who were participants in the stirring events portrayed, and is equally familiar to casual students of American history. Yet the stupendous scale upon which it is produced, is astounding.

Those who miss seeing this magnificent spectacle while in this city, will miss something the like of which may never be shown here again. Every person should see it, it is instructive and inspiring, filled with a sprinkling of smiles and oceans of tears, but in the end makes one glad that he or she is an American citizen. The nation owes a debt of gratitude to D. W. Griffith for his stupendous conception.

4/8 Irving Wilson (Inc)

22

SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION'

3 Nights Beginning Thursday April 20th

Matinee Friday and Saturday

The Assassanation of Abraham Lincoln.

D. W. Griffith, the Man who made "The Birth of a Nation." :

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

Big Battle Scene.

Battle of Petersburg.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

Oklahoma City News 4/19

OKLAHOMA NEWS

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

In the task of producing "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Overholser next week, D. W. Griffith received valuable assistance from the United States army, officers and men co-operating with him to the fullest extent. Every piece of artillery used in the battle scenes, for instance, was loaned by the ordinance department of the army, and had seen actual service in the Civil war. Army engineers assisted in surveying, laying out and reconstructing to the smallest detail the battlefield of Petersburg.

New Orleans La Times-Picayune 4/19

GRIFFITH SPECTACLE HERE FOR EASTER

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Close in New Orleans April 29.

"The Birth of a Nation" will remain at the Tulane Theater through Easter week, closing its phenomenal engagement Saturday night, April 29, with its ninety-seventh consecutive performance. On that rate the Griffith film spectacle will have been shown seven weeks to consistently good business and a total estimated attendance of 150,000.

The spectacle was booked originally for one week, with Manager T. C. Campbell holding an option on a second week, to be exercised if the patronage warranted. Almost from the first performance on Sunday night, March 12, it cast its spell over the city and repeated extensions were necessary to meet the demand for seats.

The engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" will end Saturday night, April 29, and the Tulane will be closed for the season on that date. Th advance sale of seats for Easter week will be opened Saturday morning.

Oklahoma City Oklahoman (Okla) 4/19

"The Birth of a Nation."

The power of the theater as an educator of public sentiment and taste is being illustrated to the point of demonstration by "The Birth of a Nation," which plays a return engagement at the Overholser theater the last half of next week.

It is no exaggeration to say, as has been frequently asserted by men and women in the public eye, "The Birth of a Nation" has been the most powerful of all factors to give the north a true realization of what the sotuh passed through during the dark days of the war between the states and the darker days of reconstruction, and to bring the sections still more closely together in the bond of a fraternal union that neither would now, under any circumstances, wish broken.

Reciprocally, the south is understanding the character of Abraham Lincoln better, as portrayed by Griffith. A Texas professor of history, on the former visit of the spectacle, declared that a new and strange light had broken in upon him, sweeping away prejudices against the great statesman that had been the natural result of an early education.

"Let me write the songs of a nation," said a man wise in human nature, "and I care not who leads the armies." So tonight Griffith say of the plays of a nation. The French have long recognized the value of the stage as the corrector of taste. "The Birth of a Nation" is going a long way toward forming a serious valuation of the theater into the American mind.

Mail 4/1

HAGERSTOWN, MD

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The magnitude of David W. Griffith's feat in starting "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the New Academy on Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27 with daily matinees is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the pretty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used nature. For subjects he has covered over 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses weep over the dusty roads.

Oklahoma City Times 4/19

Noted Actor as "The Clansman" In Play, "The Birth of a Nation"

HENRY B. WALTHALL.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, and the northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout "The Birth of a Nation," which will play a return engagement the latter part of next week at the Overholser theater.

Never in the most terrific scenes of the spectacle, is the romance, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," quite forgotten. In the battle of Petersburg, for example, the "little colonel" leads a thrilling charge against the command of his old school friend, Captain Stoneman. One of the brothers of Margaret Cameron falls a victim to war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. Elsie Stoneman and her brother, Phil, are present in Ford's theater the night of the assassination of Lincoln. It is to save the honor of his sweetheart, Elsie Stoneman, that the "little colonel" leads the Ku Klux Klansmen in the most sensational ride ever staged.

The spectacle is in two parts. The first half exhibits the salient events of the civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy in Ford's theater, live before the eyes of the spectator as vividly as did the actual events in the era depited.

In the second half is shown the second uprising of the south, this time against the carpetbag regime. Horrors worse than those of war are enacted, and there springs up the "invisible empire" with its vast hordes of torgoes men. The Aryan race is restored to its rights after a secret and terrible combat. It is in this half of the spectacle that Griffith tells for the first time accurately and vividly the true story of the Ku Klux Klan.

New Orleans La Times-Picayune 4/19

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" Play Which "Birth of a Nation" Answered, is Also Showing in the Decaturs

No sooner had "The Birth of a Nation" come to the Decaturs than came "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the other side of the argument. The play is showing at the Lyceum theatre to negroes.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," the book written shortly before the civil war, tells of alleged cruelties to negroes by Southern slave owners. It was credited as being one of the biggest arguments in New England for abolition and because of its strongly partizan viewpoint the play is barred out of some southern states, notably Kentucky.

"The Birth of a Nation" is founded on Thomas Dixon's "Clansman," which is an answer fifty years later to Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

At any rate the two plays with their widely different appeals are showing to big crowds in the Decaturs.

Hagerstown (Md) Herald 4/19

"The Birth of a Nation."

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the New Academy, April 26 and 27, with daily matinees, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 15,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage, such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Frietchie" seem tame after seeing the splendors of "The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Homeric grandeur. The night riding of the Ku-Klux-Klan looks like a company of avenging spectres sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

This realistic picture of history in the making is of untold value to both old and young. Besides the historical worth of this great spectacle the constant emotional throb of the romantic story thrills the hearts of all. It is the supreme achievement of modern histrionism in its new guise untrammelled by the limitations of the theatre.

Newfield Citizen Decaturburg 4/19

"Birth of a Nation" Drawing Hundreds to the Decaturs

"The Birth of a Nation," the first moving picture to be shown in the Decaturs at $2 a seat, is drawing hundreds of visitors to the city from all parts of North Alabama. Newspapers from surrounding cities coming to the Decaturs contain the names of hundreds of their citizens who are coming to the metropolitan Decaturs this week.

The following party from Tuscumbia was in the Decaturs yesterday:

Edwin Matthews and Miss Mary Maude Turner; Claud Ricks and Miss Ethel Cammock; F. W. Scruggs, Mrs. C. V. Moria, Miss Mary Terrel, Miss Annie B. Scruggs, Miss Mary B. Walker, J. D. Mitchell and two daughters, Dr. Chas. R. Palmer, Frank DiRago, Miss Gladys Turner, Miss Elsie White, Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Hanes, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Williams.

The following party came from Sheffield:

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Shute, Mr. and Mrs. John Sharp, Misses Addie Hyde, Halleen Thompson, Messrs. Lutie Hennigan, Ralph Stanley and Lester White.

Almost a hundred people came over from Moulton alone. Others came from Huntsville, Athens and other points. It is estimated that the picture and the Christian Endeavor convention drew about 1,500 people to the Decaturs this week.

Wilson (NC) Times 4/19

23

SCENES IN
THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3 Nights Beginning Thursday April 20th
Matinee Friday and Saturday

The Assassanation of Abraham Lincoln.

Big Battle Scene.

Battle of Petersburg.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING NEXT WEEK

Famous Master Production to Show for Two Days at New Academy

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation" will return to Hagerstown, commencing an engagement of two nights on Wednesday, April 26th, with matinees on both Wednesday and Thursday.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the great attraction which was seen in New York where it broke every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 100,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force of the drama.

The Ride Allegory, an exciting spectacle in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the New Academy of Music Wednesday and Thursday, April 26th and 27th. With a matinee each day.

Hero

The Birth of a Nation Coming

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the New Academy for return engagement, Wednesday and Thursday, April 26-27th. "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the most widely discussed topics in the country. It establishes an absolutely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with music. It also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the same theme as Thomas Dixon's, "The Clansman." The consequences of the Civil War in Southern reconstruction are fully dealt with, and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith pioneer among directors, managed the stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures, accompanying music and effects tell the coherent, logical and moving story.

Washington (Ind) Apr 20 1916

MIRIAM COOPER, ONE OF THE [illegible] IN THE TREMENDOUS SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WHICH RETURNS TO THE NEW ACADEMY OF MUSIC, APRIL 26TH AND 27TH, WITH MATINEES EACH DAY.

~~The Independent~~
ELIZABETH CITY, N. C., THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1916.

He Spent Half a Million Making a Moving Picture

D. W. Griffith

D. W. Griffith was eight months making his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Astrana theatre next week. Griffith took his photographic and player forces to five different states to get the proper color. Some scenes were taken in Virginia and others in the Carolinas. The bulk of the picture was made in California. One big scene had to be taken in Mexico.

The Ku Klux Klan, which forms an interesting part of the great production, was organized as a secret and social band in the State of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The third "k" was added by the members who were in a large percentage descended from the Scotch who settled in old Virginia. In subsequent years when the Klans went forth to put down the desperadoes who swarmed down from the north to grab everything in sight in the south the riders adopted the emblem of the fiery cross, which the Scotch Highlanders had long used as a call to battle in the early days of wars in their native land.

Daily News Springfield Ill 4/20

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" A WONDERFUL PICTURE

David Wark Griffith who startled the world with his wonderful combination of film and operatic drama called "The Birth of a Nation" is a native of Kentucky. He began his public career as an extra actor in a Louisville stock company. He also studied Grand Opera and developed a splendid baritone voice. He became interested in pictures as a scenario writer, but the technical side of the work fascinated him. In less than three years from his first entrance into a motion picture studio he was the promising figure of American directors. His numerous inventions and his wonderful judgment soon placed him at the forefront of the ranks. He is recognized as the greatest director of motion picture productions in the world today. He has gained this eminence in seven years and commands the largest salary ever paid a director of any amusement enterprise in this country.

Herald Rapids Mich 4/20

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Coming to the New Academy Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27 for a Return Engagement.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the New Academy exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record-breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of fame appear upon

Apr 20

THE WASHINGTON HERALD.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" is nearing the end of its first week's engagement at the National. There will be two performances Easter Sunday when the attraction enters the second week of its Washington run.

Undoubtedly this mighty spectacle has turned the theater records of America topsytarvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Pittsburg, Baltimore, Los Angeles, and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached.

Ardmore (Okla) Daily Ardmoreite 4/20

Huntingdon (Pa) Semi-Weekly News 4/20

234

VETERANS SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

MANAGEMENT OF THE PALACE HAS AS GUESTS OLD SOLDIERS WHO WERE ACTORS IN SOME OF SCENES.

One of the most enjoyable features of the last performance of "The Birth of a Nation," last night was the attendance of a number of old Confederate veterans from the Soldiers' Home who were the guests of Manager Lowenstein and the manager of the road company.

The veterans occupied reserved seats along both sides of the house, and as the stirring scenes were unfolded to them the air resounded with applause that told plainer than words that they appreciated seeing once again the stirring events in which so many of them participated during the dark days of the reconstruction.

The thanks of the veterans is extended to the management of the theatre for its generosity, and the old soldiers will ever hold in remembrance the spirit which prompted this generous act. Errett Dinlap, a member of the board of trustees, was the first to suggest that the soldiers be given this privilege, and the management quickly grasped the opportunity of complying with the request.

Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" next Monday and Tuesday. By all odds the greatest production ever witnessed in Huntingdon. See the big advertisement on the first page of the Globe. The scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photo-play. General Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is correctly and carefully dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering above his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend, and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand, and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

Huntingdon (Pa) Globe 4/20

RIDE OF THE FAMOUS KU KLUX KLAN, IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S FAMOUS SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WHICH WILL BE AT THE GRAND THEATRE, APRIL 24-25.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Grand Theatre on April 24 and 25, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord" with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to meet their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all the cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

Newark 4/21

ALLEGORICAL PEACE GROUP—A BIG FEATURE IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S MIGHTY SPECTACLE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—GRAND THEATRE TWO NIGHTS COMMENCING MONDAY, APRIL 24TH—MATINEE TUESDAY.

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles Studio recently remarked on the film Director's almost uncanny gift in composition. "Griffith," he said "groups his figures like an artist in oils—water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION". The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment, in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION", of the contrasting theme of the misery of war, Wan, skeleton like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the lean emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stake like the piled up victims of a battlefield. Arms are raised in entreaty to Heaven. Bodies, legs and arms (as it were) shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other.

Newark 4/20

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Great Art Musical Spectacle at Hanover Opera House, April 28-29.

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, opens an engagement of two nights at the Hanover Opera House, Friday, April 28th, and Saturday, April 29, with a matinee Saturday.

The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender of Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama.

In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown.

Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting distorical details.

A special orchestra is carried and furnishes music continuously.

Huntingdon (Pa) News 4/21

DAILY MAIL, HAGERSTOWN, MD.

A MOTHER'S APPEAL TO A GREAT HEART (LINCOLN).

A tauching scene in D. W. Griffith's great Dramatic Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the New Academy of Music Wednesday and Thursday, April 26th and 27th, with a matinee each day.

Mail 4/21

HAGERSTOWN, MD.,

THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

D. W. Griffith's wonderful production "The Birth of a Nation," returns to Hagerstown for a return engagement on Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27, at the New Academy. This mighty spectacle has turned the theatre records of America topsy-turvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not so much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression with an operatic accompaniment in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothnig like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished again until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

Record Herald 4/21/16

HANOVER, PA.

D. W. Griffith's wonderful production, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Opera House on Friday evening, April 28, and Saturday, matinee and night, April 29th. This mighty spectacle has turned the theatre records of America topsy-turvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not so much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression with an operatic accompaniment in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothing like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished again until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES, FRIDAY, APRIL 21, 1916.

LEARNED TO CRY FOR MOTION PICTURE FILM

PORTRAYS SOUTHERN GIRL

Miriam Cooper Became Emotional Only When Her Feelings Were Hurt

Miriam Cooper, the ... who plays the role of ... in David W. Griffith's ... photodrama, "The Birth of a Nation," ... suddenly found that she could be an actress only when her feelings were hurt and ... the very Southern girl ... staging of the film ... impossible for Director Griffith to get ... emotion.

EVENING GLOBE, HAGERSTOWN, MD., FRIDAY, APR

Scene From "The Birth of

DANCING THE HOURS AWAY. THE NIGHT BEFORE THE BATTLE. IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S GIGANTIC SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," WHICH RETURNS TO THE NEW ACADEMY OF MUSIC WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY, APRIL 26TH AND 27TH, WITH A MATINEE EACH DAY.

Herald Hagerstown MD 4/21/16

CLEVER ACTRESS IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the New Academy, Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Mae Marsh the dainty heroine in D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the New Academy of Music, April 26 and 27, with a matinee each day.

APRIL 21, 1916.

GRIFFITH DEPLORES NEW STATE MOVIE CENSORSHIP

D. W. Griffith, the moving picture producer, issued a statement to-day declaring that neither he nor his representative, J. J. McCarthy, had favored the Cristman-Wheeler picture censorship bill passed in Albany. Mr. McCarthy had been quoted as favoring the measure.

"Mr. McCarthy, speaking both for himself and in the interest of my productions," said Mr. Griffith, "informed Mr. Wheeler not later than last Saturday night that we were unopposed to any form of censorship of motion pictures.

bill as it was passed by the ... re is as unfair to the producers ... managers of motion pictures ... the methods employed in ... it through the Senate and ... assembly. It is un-American ... restrictive in the charge placed upon ... manufacture of films and ... threatening upon the ... responsibility ... the time ...

LAFAYETTE JOURNAL,

RETURN ENGAGEMENT OF FILM MASTERPIECE

It was a happy thought that impelled the management of the Victoria theatre to book "The Birth of a Nation" for a return engagement for many were turned away from the box office upon the occasion of its last presentation. The writer was among those present last night, incidentally the third time he has witnessed this greatest of all motion picture spectacles, but there was no lessening in thrills and throbs. "The Birth of a Nation" is a wonderful photoplay; none can gainsay that. In its reproduction of particular historical incidents it is marvelous. But whether it depicts with truth conditions as they existed during reconstruction has given rise to much criticism. But regardless of outrageous circumstances as portrayed in this picture, which have been the source of abundant censure, the spectacle is sufficient within itself. It is a genuine masterpiece and will ever represent a crowning achievement in photoplay construction. "The Birth of a Nation" will be repeated today and tomorrow with performances afternoon and night.

Herald Hagerstown SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

At the New Academy Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27—Daily Matinees—Out-tops "Ben Hur" or "Blue Bird."

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation" has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance besides this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 ... 200,000 details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort 'a motion picture spectacle by "Capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theatres of the country.

Westry 20) Amus 4/21

236

MISS MIRIAM COOPER.

the fiery Southern girl ... staging of the film ... almost impossible for Director Griffith to get her to display any facial emotion. For several hours she scolded and coaxed and pleaded with the young woman in an effort to register the expression of fear and horror in her face that was simply imperative for the proper characterization of the part. Finally Griffith turned sharply and said: "Miss Cooper, I ... there is no use of your trying any more. You seem to be unable to register the right emotion and I don't believe that you will ever make a successful emotional picture actress."

Miss Cooper began crying bitterly. While she was crying Griffith gave a signal to the camera man. He began turning the crank on the machine, and Miss Cooper's tears were protographed on the film.

"Now you are making good," said Griffith.

That was Miss Cooper's real start in pictures, as previous to the production of "The Birth of a Nation" she had worked only as an extra in the studio. Now she has no trouble in registering any deep emotional feeling needed by a director in filming a picture.

SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

3 Nights Beginning Thursday April 20th
Matinee Friday and Saturday

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

ere Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

fith, the Man who made "The Birth of a Nation."

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making speciacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

Huntingdon (Pa) Herald 4/22

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AFTER SIGNING THE CALL FOR 75,000 VOLUNTEERS—A DRAMATIC SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," GRAND THEATRE, APRIL 25 AND 26.

Joseph Hembery, the actor who plays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small, but interesting, detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a a spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the war president is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignity of rebellious sta[illegible]. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

After the Appomattox surrender the Leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the south for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booths maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Hembery, the portrayer of the great president, has been widely commended for the sincerity, diginty, and pathos of his characterization.

Hoggerstown (Md) Mail 4/22

Generals Lee and Grant at Appomattox. A big scene in D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the New Academy o fMusic Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27 with a matinee every day.

Journal Commercial Commercial Bulletin

APRIL 22, 1916.

"Birth of a Nation" Back.

D. W. Griffith's great photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Standard Theatre Monday for a limited engagement. The length of its run at the Liberty Theatre proved it one of the greatest motion pictures ever made, and this will be its first appearance in the upper section of the city.

Daily Oklahoman City 4/22

"The Birth of a Nation."

Much of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the northern heroine. Mis Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring at this point in their courtship to kiss each other they lavish their affections alternately on the nestling bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten, with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the southern heroine. The little northern heroine is of northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a southerner. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister, Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish when a mere child won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instanty recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until finally he cast her in her present role of the northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

THE EVENING GLOBE 4/22

INSPECTING THE PLANTATION. ACHARMING SCENE IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S MIGHTY SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," COMING TO THE NEW ACADEMY OF MUSIC WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY, APRIL 26th AND 27th, WITH MATINEE DAILY.

My 4/22

EVENING SUN.

STANDARD—D. W. Griffith's successful moving picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will commence to-morrow night a limited engagement—the first in this section of the city—of twice daily performances.

My 4/22

EVENING WORLD,

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Standard Theatre, beginning to-morrow night. The pictures are to be show[illegible] daily.

Neighborhood Theatres.

At the Standard Theatre Easter Sunday evening D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will commence a limited engagement—the first in this section of the city—of twice daily performances. This pictorial play is not mere passing amusement, despite its dramatic story and appealing love interests. The production is an exact duplicate of the one that achieved a record run at the Liberty Theatre.

Margaret Illington, in "The Lie," will be the Easter week bill at the Bronx Opera House.

Ulster Ward 4/22

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL 4/22

At the Standard Sunday evening, D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," will begin a limited engagement—the first in this section of the city—of twice daily performances.

Mail 4/22
HAGERSTOWN, MD

April 21/16

THE WASHINGTON HERALD.

RECORD-HERALD. HANOVER, PA

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1916.

231

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the New Academy next Wednesday and Thursday, Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passion and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots", it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius.

This is a return engagement and seats are now selling for all performances. Matinee's daily.

"The Birth of a Nation" Shows Grant and Lee at Appomattox

Historic Scene of Lee's Surrender.

Among the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most praise for the faithfulness of their work, the one as Gen. Robert E. Lee and the other as Gen. U. S. Grant.

The picture shows Gen. Lee surrendering to Gen. Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most exact reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that waged by the Boers toward the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth was deluded into believing that by killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in such a struggle.

But Gen. Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the misery and want endured by his people. Therefore after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Gen. Grant and on the morning of April 9, under the budding apple tree of an Appomottox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down in the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for the occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress and appeared in his "fatigue" uniform, with jack boots dusty from the hard campaign. Strangely enough, Gen. Lee had nothing with which to write. A pocket inkstand and quill pen were loaned by an officer of the General Staff, and it was with these that the historic document was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all of the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to that memorable meeting at Appomattox.

This Li
Lillian Gish
She Play

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which he and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

ly;

t Hillis.

conceals from the man
ces of the last quarter
and then reveals old age
at a time. Having fuleer in which man does hat a day or an hour orth, we ought not to be at silence, rich drapery ment characterize what man's grave. One thing the soul is, and that asy to believe that the continue to be. This
g, with a divine hunger
, a being that sings, and invents, a being that and sails ships, and
nings through the sky;
t flings railways and
cities across a continent, s the very face of na-
being is here, wearing so wonderful that he ave come through the ng clouds of glory from is man's home; and poet thought that the
the soul sedatives, and e man forget the imper-
hence he came and the
as known, oft in his vis-
Is the splendor lost, and n of calm weather, when art, beholds afar off the aradise, with a golden upon the land, and make, and filmy, but in his ows that on those shores
ect and beloved souls of ere they hear the waves faith of futurity. The great of the nineteenth century is Memoriam, or Wordsworth's

tions of Immortality." Darwin old age, wrote an essay on the worthiness of man's instinct mortality. In his article he rai question whether it is safe t
the instinct of a being who c from a lower world through processes. Instinct teaches t to make a honey cell, and nev
a lie to the honey bee. Instinct the bird the way through the p air, and never deceived a wil
Does instinct play fair with and beavers and birds, but souls? Astronomers tell us th earth is growing cold, and that there will be no rose, no sky lover, no statesman upon this earth. Any denial, therefore, of faith of Wordsworth and Tenny
and of Paul and of Jesus means t
philosophy and instinct have co crashing down in ruins, carrying immeasureable woe with them.

Loss to Morals.

III. When the faith of immortal falls, the foundations of righteousn fall also. Ours is a moral univer
We are in a world where obedience nature brings power, and disobedien brings disaster. The path of law the path of glory. Master the law color and you are an artist; obey t law of speech and you are an orat obey the law of steam and you are inventor; but disobey the law a nature will crush you. Eart great ones, in every realm, are th that have found out the law of t realm and obeyed it. Virtue is a s that ripens the roses and lilies character and happiness; vice and are seeds that bring forth beastlin

Huntingdon (Pa) Inquirer 4/22

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AFTER SIGNING THE CALL FOR 75,000 VOLUNTEERS—A DRAMATIC SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," GRAND THEATRE, APRIL 25 AND 26.

Joseph Hemsbery, the actor who plays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfetted, even to the small, but interesting, detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a a spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the war president is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realised the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignity of rebellious sta . After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

After the Appomattox surrender the Leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the south for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booths maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Hemsbery, the portrayer of the great president, has been widely commended for the sincerity, diginty, and pathos of his characterization.

Hagerstown (Md) Mail 4/22

Generals Lee and Grant at Appomattox. A big scene in D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the New Academy o fMusic Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27 with a matinee every day.

Journal & Commercial Commercial Bulletin

APRIL 22, 1916.

"Birth of a Nation" Back.

D. W. Griffith's great photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Standard Theatre Monday for a limited engagement. The length of its run at the Liberty Theatre proved it one of the greatest motion pictures ever made, and this will be its first appearance in the upper section of the city.

Daily Oklahoman City 4/22

"The Birth of a Nation."

Much of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the northern heroine. Mis Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring at this point in their courtship to kiss each other they lavish their affections alternately on the nestling bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten, with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the southern heroine. The little northern heroine is, of northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a southerner. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister, Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish when a mere child won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instanty recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until finally he cast her in her present role of the northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

4/22 THE EVENING GLOBE

INSPECTING THE PLANTATION. A CHARMING SCENE IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S MIGHTY SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," COMING TO THE NEW ACADEMY OF MUSIC WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY, APRIL 26th AND 27th, WITH MATINEE DAILY.

my 4/22

EVENING SUN.

STANDARD—D. W. Griffith's successful moving picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will commence to-morrow night a limited engagement—the first in this section of the city—of twice daily performances.

my 4/22

EVENING WORLD,

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Standard Theatre, beginning to-morrow night. The pictures are to be shown ice daily.

Neighborhood Theatres.

At the Standard Theatre Easter Sunday evening D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will commence a limited engagement—the first in this section of the city—of twice daily performances. This pictorial play is not mere passing amusement, despite its dramatic story and appealing love interests. The production is an exact duplicate of the one that achieved a record run at the Liberty Theatre.

Margaret Illington, in "The Lie," will be the Easter week bill at the Bronx Opera House.

Ev. Herald 4/22

4/22

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL

At the Standard Sunday evening, D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," will begin a limited engagement—the first in this section of the city—of twice daily performances.

Mail 4/22

HAGERSTOWN, MD

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the New Academy next Wednesday and Thursday, Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passion and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots" it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius.

This is a return engagement and seats are now selling for all performances. Matinee's daily.

April 21/16

THE WASHINGTON HERALD.

"The Birth of a Nation" Shows Grant and Lee at Appomattox

Historic Scene of Lee's Surrender.

Among the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle, Howard Gaye and Donold Crisp have received the most praise for the faithfulness of their work, the one as Gen. Robert E. Lee and the other as Gen. U. S. Grant.

The picture shows Gen. Lee surrendering to Gen. Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most exact reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that waged by the Boers toward the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth was deluded into believing that by killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in such a struggle.

But Gen. Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the misery and want endured by his people. Therefore after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Gen. Grant and on the morning of April 9, under the budding apple tree of an Appomottox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down in the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for the occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress and appeared in his "fatigue" uniform, with jack boots dusty from the hard campaign. Strangely enough, Gen. Lee had nothing with which to write. A pocket inkstand and quill pen were loaned by an officer of the General Staff, and it was with these that the historic document was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all of the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to that memorable meeting at Appomattox.

This Li

Lillian Gish

She Play

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which he and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

RECORD-HERALD, HANOVER, PA

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1916.

ly;

t Hillis.

conceals from the man
ces of the last quarter
and then reveals old age
at a time. Having fuleer in which man does hat a day or an hour
orth, we ought not to be at silence, rich drapery
ment characterize what man's grave. One thing
the soul is, and that asy to believe that the continue to be. This
g, with a divine hunger
, a being that sings, and invents, a being that
and sails ships, and ings through the sky;
t flings railways and
cities across a continent, s the very face of na-
being is here, wearing so wonderful that he ave come through the g clouds of glory from
is man's home; and poet thought that the
the soul sedatives, and
e man forget the imper-
hence he came and the
as known, oft in his vis-ls the splendor lost, and n of calm weather, when art, beholds afar off the aradise, with a golden upon the land, and make, and filmy, but in his ows that on those shores
ect and beloved souls of ere they hear the waves

faith of futurity. The great
of the nineteenth century is Memoriam, or Wordsworth's
tions of Immortality." Darwin old age, wrote an essay on the worthiness of man's instinct mortality. In his article he rai question whether it is safe t
the instinct of a being who ca
from a lower world through processes. Instinct teaches t
to make a honey cell, and nev
a lie to the honey bee. Instinct
the bird the way through the p air, and never deceived a wil
Does instinct play fair with
and beavers and birds, but souls? Astronomers tell us th earth is growing cold, and that there will be no rose, no sky
lover, no statesman upon this earth. Any denial, therefore, of faith of Wordsworth and Tenny
and of Paul and of Jesus means t
philosophy and instinct have co crashing down in ruins, carrying immeasureable woe with them.

Loss to Morals.

III. When the faith of immortal
falls, the foundations of righteousn
fall also. Ours is a moral univer
We are in a world where obedience nature brings power, and disobedie brings disaster. The path of law
the path of glory. Master the law color and you are an artist; obey law of speech and you are an orat obey the law of steam and you are inventor; but disobey the law a nature will crush you. Eart great ones, in every realm, are th that have found out the law of realm and obeyed it. Virtue is a s that ripens the roses and lilies
character and happiness; vice and are seeds that bring forth beastlin

239

4/23

THE WORLD.

What the Movie Screens Provide in Easter Week.

"THE Birth of a Nation," which has been seen in many parts of the world since its first showing last season at the Liberty Theatre, will begin an engagement to-night at the Standard Theatre. After to-night there will be two exhibitions daily.

My Sun

APRIL 23, 1916.

REEL PLAYS.

The Standard Theatre happens to be situated in a part of the town in which "The Birth of a Nation" has never yet been seen. It seems incredible that there should be such a part of New York, but it appears that this most famous of all the films has never been seen here. So for the Easter week there will be two performances every day of D. F. Griffith's masterpiece.

4/23

NEW YORK PRESS.

Standard.

In the Standard Theatre to-night D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will commence a limited engagement, the first in that section of the city, of twice daily presentations. This pictorial play is history dramatized in pantomime and its battle scenes picture war perhaps as human conflict has never been pictured before on the stage. Leading screen players vitalize its principal characters and a large orchestra interprets the symphonic score which accompanies the showing.

Mae Marsh, "The Birth of a Nation" Standard

4/23

NEW YORK HERALD.

MISS LILLIAN GISH in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION", STANDARD THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" to-night will begin an engagement, the first in that section of the city, at the Standard Theatre. Miss Lillian Gish, Miss Mae Marsh, Henry Walthall and other favorites first introduced by Mr. Griffith appear in its exciting historical scenes.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES, SUNDAY, APRIL 23, 1916.

Miss Marsh's Rise to Fame Curious Romance of 'Movies'

Followed "Big Sister" to Studio and Caught Notice of Producer Griffith.

HARRON'S STORY SIMILAR

One of "Birth of Nation's" Stars Began Film Work as Messenger.

ROBERT HARRON.

Because she insisted on following her sister, Mae Marsh is one of the big stars of "The Birth of the Nation," and the sister is working somewhere else in pictures, wherever they need a star.

Mae Marsh represents one of the curious romances of the development of great picture players. Her sister was one of the leading women in the Biograph studio at the time that David Wark Griffith first conceived the ideas that have resulted in the production of the greater spectacle that is being shown at the National Theater in this city.

Miss Marsh, the older, was one of the best known of the stars. She still is, so far as that is concerned. She was beautiful, and she played with great abandon. Her little sister, Mae, wasn't beautiful, and was really angular, as the pictorial architecture. She was mad about acting, however, and insisted on accompanying her sister to the studio.

Sister didn't want to bother with her, and forbade her going. Mae waited until sister was well on her way, one day, and followed her. Arriving at the studio she made herself as inconspicuous as possible.

But she couldn't be inconspicuous. Red haired, freckle faced—even "skinny"—she was seen in the "yard" and attracted sister's attention. Sister exploded and started to send the girl home. That is how Mr. Griffith's attention was attracted to the uninvited guest. He saw her unconscious grace, the character that seemed to stick out of her features. And as he wanted just such a little girl for a special scene he asked her to work for him.

Saw Making of Great Actress.

Mae Marsh worked. And she worked to such good purpose that the big director saw in her the making of a great actress. He insisted on her coming to the studio every day. When he could he used her in his pictures. When she wasn't employed she was standing around absorbing Griffith ideas and watching Griffith methods.

She progressed in leaps and bounds with the result that she soon came to be looked upon as one of the big stars of the Griffith entourage. The director kept her with him in his several moves from the Biograph to the Imp and back to the Biograph. Then to the Mutual, to the Griffith, and now to the Triangle studios.

She is regarded by Griffith as one of the most accomplished players in his company. He depends on her for special work and she has developed a pictorial-dramatic sense that makes her a valuable aid in directing. She is one of the few motion picture actresses who can direct a picture, and she is one of the several that Griffith consults in the making of all his big productions.

In "The Birth of the Nation," Miss Marsh has a most important part. She plays it like the artist she has grown to be.

There is another player in "The Birth of a Nation" who has progressed along with Miss Marsh in almost the same way. This is Robert Harron. Harron curiously enough, has played opposite Miss Marsh in more pictures than any other actor—as he plays opposite her in "The Birth of a Nation."

Started as Messenger.

Harron first came to the Biograph studio as a messenger boy bringing a message to Griffith. The producer was putting on a play in which he needed a messenger boy at that time and there being none handy he used a real boy. The boy did so well that Griffith advised him to come to the studio regularly. Harron said he couldn't afford it as he was a messenger boy to make a living and not because he liked it. Griffith offered him a job as messenger in the studio at wages about what he was making carrying telegrams.

The messenger accepted the job and began work. His first appearance before the camera was to sweep up the floor of the stage so that it would be clean for a picture. He was used as a sort of general utility man in small parts. The parts grew bigger as Harron's work improved. Now he is one of the really big men in the picture world—although he has not yet reached the age of twenty-one years. His salary amounts to more than $100 per week.

Harron believes there is no man on earth like Griffith. He tells a story of the producer that is interesting in its reflection of the character of the Griffith way of doing things. During the Christmas holidays—the last Christmas holidays—Harron's brother was fatally hurt in an automobile accident in Los Angeles. Griffith advised the boy to bring the brother's body East to his old home.

And Griffith also advised Harron to bring his parents back to California with him, with all their household effects. He told Harron that he would give him two months' vacation with pay, and added:

"Of course, you'll send the bills for the transportation of your brother's body and yourself East, and the transportation of your family and your father's household effects to the company. We will pay the bills."

Harron couldn't be pried loose from the Griffith management.

Herald Washington D.C. 4/24/16

24

Hollywood

APRIL 24, 1916.

'BIRTH OF A NATION' DRAWS CROWD AGAIN

"The Red Widow" and "The Heart of Nora Flynn" at Other Movie Houses.

"The Birth of a Nation" is back in New York. D. W. Griffith's spectacular moving picture of the Civil War began a new engagement last night at the Standard Theatre, and so great was the lure of this movie that the house was crowded, a year after the original New York showing. Since its long run at the Liberty Theatre the picture has been shown in many parts of the world.

MAE MARSH
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—
NATIONAL

APRIL 23, 1916.
THE WASHINGTON TIMES:

National: "The Birth of A Nation." Spectacle Film.

WITH a matinee Sunday, will begin the second triumph week of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the National Theater. The scenes at that theater during the first week were a revelation to theatergoers. At every performance the audience gave vent to its enthusiasm not only with applause, but with cheers. The theater was filled to its utmost capacity at every performance. It is only fair to state for the benefit of those who wish to witness this great spectacle that owing to the long line of ticket buyers and the consequent crowded condition of the lobby before each performance, it is advisable to purchase seats in advance.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation" has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben-Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the most impressive productions ever made on the stage. They seem small in comparison with this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 people, and 100,000 details, the result of eight months of hard work and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being amply repaid for his monumental efforts in motion picture spectacle by the wonderful records it has rolled up in the principal theaters of the country.

Apr 23/16

my Globe 4/24

GLOBE AND COMMERCIAL

THE PICTURE PLAYS.

That D. W. Griffith's spectacular picture, "The Birth of a Nation," is as popular to-day as when it was first produced was attested by the crowd which filled the Standard Theatre last night when it began a week's engagement there.

My Sun

APRIL 24, 1916.

The Standard Theatre has temporarily abandoned the combination policy and is now given over to D. W. Griffith's film masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation."

4/24

NEW YORK PRESS

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown last night in the Standard Theatre. It will be given twice daily for a limited time.

Tribune

UPTOWN THEATRES.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photo-dramatic spectacle, will be continued at the Standard Theatre for another week.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, starts tomorrow on its second Washington week. For the past six days the National Theater has been filled twice daily to its utmost capacity, and the enthusiasm of the vast crowds has known no bounds. The historic features of this presentation have attracted wide attention and educators all over the world have been convinced that there is no more effective way to tell the story of a nation. In pictorial form are shown such stirring events in American history as Sherman's march to the sea, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, the surrender at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln and the saving of the South by the Ku Klux Klan.

It is a picture of American history which will make an indelible impression on both children and adults. Running through the historical scenes are two romantic love stories in which a colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North, and the officer of the North loves the sister of the colonel of the South. The proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern maid are shown in as thrilling and soul-gripping a story as was ever staged. Love turns to hate and then to love again as each girl watches the grim struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the land of her birth. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's world-famous stories, "The Clansman" and the "Leopard's Spots."

The cast includes such favorites as Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Spottiswoods Aiken, Ralph Lewis, Robert Harr[illegible] Mary Alden, Wallace Reid [illegible]

THE WASHINGTON POST:

National—"The [illegible] Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] second week of its engagement [illegible] National tomorrow afternoon. The theater has been filled twice daily since the opening of the attraction last Monday, and indications point to a remarkable run in Washington.

The romance of war, as well as its spectacular horror, is depicted in "The Birth of a Nation." Consciously or subconsciously, D. W. Griffith's mind ran in the same channels as Lord Byron's in working out his epic masterpiece. Even those to whose ears the name "Childe Harold" is only vaguely familiar, recall vividly the stirring lines in which the most red-blooded of English poets describes the ball before Waterloo—that night of revelry and gayety, which ended so tragically.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Griffith has made use of the same thrilling contrast between the joy of life and the hollow emptiness of death that stirs in Lord Byron's immortal poem. On the eve of the battle of Bull Run, just before the soldiers are to leave for the front, a great ball is held in the little Carolina town of Piedmont. It is one of those brilliant, old-fashioned functions where the aristocracy of birth and breeding were as aparent as at the ball of Brussels. Beauty and chivalry, laces and uniforms mingle to the soft strains of the waltz. The "shadow shapes" on the screen away to the stately music of the audible orchestra. The illusion is complete.

Then as at the Brussels ball, "A deep sound strikes like a rising knell." The bugle call to arms is heard. Tears spring to soft eyes that "looked love to eyes that spake again," for they well knew what was to come. There are hurried partings. "Chivalry" rides to the field of glory, perhaps to death, while beauty is left in the joy-deserted halls to weep alone. It is one of the most striking scenes in this wonderful spectacle.

Washington Post 4/23

Origin of the Ku Klux.

The Kuklux Klan, which plays a big part in the story of "The Birth of a Nation," was organized as a secret and social band in the State of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The third word klan was added by the members, a majority of whom were descended from the Scotch who settled in old Virginia. In subsequent years when the klans went forth to restore order in the South, the riders adopted the emblem of the fiery cross which the Scotch highlanders had long used as a call to battle in the early days of wars in their native land.

Star-Washington D.C. 4/24

National.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, commences tomorrow its second week at the National Theater. Audiences that have tested the capacity of the theater have been in evidence twice daily throughout the past week.

The present engagement will be the only one played in this city. Mr. Griffith has given notice that "The Birth of a Nation" will never be presented in any but the highest-class theaters, and at the prices usually charged for the best attractions.

Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding, battles fought over wide-stretching areas, the great President and the men who, after his death, thwarted his far-seeing plans; the victor of the north and the aftermath of reconstruction furnish, in the production, a succession of themes of the eventful days of 1861-65. America's greatest war has never been more comprehensively put on stage, film, panorama or canvas. The fascination of the romance, the excellent acting, the clear photographs, the emotional appeal of the music and the cunning art of the mechanical effects combine to make a remarkable offering.

Two performances will be given daily, at 2:15 and at 8:15 p.m.

It is claimed that "The Birth of a Nation" has played to greater receipts in its first year than were taken in for "Ben Hur" during the twelve or more years that attraction has been on tour. The comparison is made with "Ben Hur" because the record of the latter is generally recognized in theatrical business as the high-water mark of cotemporaneous drama in America.

HENRY WALTHALL
"BIRTH OF A NATION"

W.P.

Scene in "The Birth of a Nation"
Of The Ball before Bull Run
That Recalls Byron's - "Night Before Waterloo"
National

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

HOW do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and hold on to it till you are middle aged, then marry and rear a family, releasing fame from your grasp and finding joy in a quiet, secluded country home?

Not so bad, you say, for some bookish individual who isn't attractive anyhow and hasn't a chance at the sweets of life? But utterly preposterous for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that have characterized any play on stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when she has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an inder to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now give me sensible togs, lots of work and a typewriter to compose plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage, or, rather, it would have

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene—home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working, I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty, and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment and ing the advent of the $2 mo-ture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, the ability to project his ideals, the same time. Or can one efface from memory the [illegible] ner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific [illegible] illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation [illegible] fied. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. [illegible] poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and [illegible] memories that are to live, is a [illegible] power. The brain behind this art [illegible] never revealed. It lends itself to the concealment which is one of the [illegible] attributes of true art. The living [illegible] is subjective. There is no [illegible] the spoken drama. Each has its [illegible] and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be [illegible] but the ideas and the recollections [illegible] on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a [illegible] field in which to operate. On the [illegible] these so called "effects" are [illegible] at best. In the film play we show actual occurrence and are [illegible] ed by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into a scene. If our story traverses to a [illegible] tlefield we show an actual battle. If it means that 10,000 people [illegible] part of this conflict we [illegible] people, rehearse them in minute [illegible] and when we are ready we shoot that scene as realistically as if we were looking down from a [illegible] watching an engagement of [illegible] forces.

Let us look into the cost of this scene for a motion picture [illegible] you in the neighborhood of $1[illegible] But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are [illegible] salaries after this, and the only [illegible] pense is the comparatively slight [illegible] of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can [illegible] the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large [illegible] ber. It takes the same time and [illegible] to rehearse them that it does to have 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily with eight or ten performances a week and the salaries and costuming of [illegible] supernumeraries run up to $2,[illegible] week, so that at the end of two [illegible] sons these forces have cost [illegible] $150,000. Here you have twice the [illegible] lay for 400 people that it costs a [illegible] tion picture director to employ [illegible] If there is any significance [illegible] figures they point an [illegible] without need of further [illegible] In the same way we can go [illegible] get anything we want. If [illegible] shipwreck we show the [illegible] the restless waves. For a [illegible] we have but to pick [illegible] them act as two people in love [illegible]

of D. W. Griffith as Human Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

rly Work In "The Birth of a h Above His Fellows, Is Gen- Altogether a "Regular Guy."

D. W. GRIFFITH

HILE there has been a vast amount of nonsense written concerning the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a pic-

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of

and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating present startling effect. This is her Griffith innovation and the time in history that a score was eived and utilized under such cirstances.

iffith's memory is highly disciplin- He directed the great spectacle out a scrap of paper before him, after taking portions of it in odd all over the country he sat down e late nights in the studio in Calia and there worked out in dra- sequence the story as it is un- d on the screen.

statistician has figured out Grifcept in mind a million scenes, ac- incidents and details before he began the work of assembling it rrative form. Not a hitch or an uracy got by him. As an evidence is his secretary tells of a soldier came into view on the film as a r all decked out in a spick and uniform.

eat heavens! What were you ing off?" cried Griffith from the shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

them act as two people in love act under a given circumstance, the great audiences weave their romances and do the larger share the acting for that scene. Alongside lines we can have roses in the sunlight with a mountain in the background, drama the trees wave in the and blades of grass and dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. Remember, an observing director has the for his studios. The centuries been piling up these backgrounds ductions for him. He has but to artistic sense in the matter of tion.

The motion picture is no longer infant art. It is the newest and powerful form of dramatic expression and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the of the legitimate stage, but will upon a parity with the greatest ductions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, years ago it was the limit of ambiance to spend $500 on a motion ture production. At that time played to five cent audiences. Now spend $500,000 on a picture, and crowd the theaters everywhere at a seat. This is what is to be a superproduction from spending dec times that amount and still a seat for it?

motion picture the Broadway orth is not surbig strides of concentration g ideas on the be said that aw of natural in the case of that the man faculties has fast with the ; drama. He red trenches, he open. He f and had to run the cusure releases" but after all in the limitaof the pres- ictures. This be seen over t are laid out out the same ctiveness was d other fey were just ld only go so to find an outen he had finNation." He of work. His than that of e finances of ess. A great invested in han was ever of a great of ceaseless hous expense, who had seen ies, who had an epic, who it was staghind him the ing. eaters and so ny channels ass and then not an easy e limitations e wanted to field and go hich had nev- e motion pic-he record of hich had been der a bushel. Bethulia," as imagery and art had ever

of the seamy d vastly im- Armstrong's in heredity, virile thing ad combined

the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

ing the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a pic-

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of

and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating present startling effect. This is her Griffith innovation and the time in history that a score was eived and utilized under such cirstances.

iffith's memory is highly disciplin- He directed the great spectacle out a scrap of paper before him, after taking portions of it in odd all over the country he sat down e late nights in the studio in Calia and there worked out in dra- sequence the story as it is un- d on the screen.

statistician has figured out Grifcept in mind a million scenes, ac- incidents and details before he began the work of assembling it rrative form. Not a hitch or an uracy got by him. As an evidence is his secretary tells of a soldier came into view on the film as a r all decked out in a spick and uniform.

eat heavens! What were you ing off?" cried Griffith from the shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

them act as two people in love act under a given circumstance, the great audiences weave their romances and do the larger share the acting for that scene. Alongside lines we can have roses in the sunlight with a mountain in the background, drama the trees wave in the and blades of grass and dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. Remember, an observing director has the for his studios. The centuries been piling up these backgrounds ductions for him. He has but to artistic sense in the matter of tion.

The motion picture is no longer infant art. It is the newest and powerful form of dramatic expression and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the of the legitimate stage, but will upon a parity with the greatest ductions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, years ago it was the limit of ambiance to spend $500 on a motion ture production. At that time played to five cent audiences. Now spend $500,000 on a picture, and crowd the theaters everywhere at a seat. This is what is to be a superproduction from spending dec times that amount and still a seat for it?

motion picture the Broadway orth is not surbig strides of concentration g ideas on the be said that aw of natural in the case of that the man faculties has fast with the ; drama. He red trenches, he open. He f and had to run the cusure releases" but after all in the limitaof the pres- ictures. This be seen over t are laid out out the same ctiveness was d other fey were just ld only go so to find an outen he had finNation." He of work. His than that of e finances of ess. A great invested in han was ever of a great of ceaseless hous expense, who had seen ies, who had an epic, who it was staghind him the ing. eaters and so ny channels ass and then not an easy e limitations e wanted to field and go hich had nev- e motion pic-

he record of hich had been der a bushel. Bethulia," as imagery and art had ever

of the seamy d vastly im- Armstrong's in heredity, virile thing ad combined

the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

and the theme, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life program for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics; not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology;" not even a suffragette; but a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrilling-ly in "The Birth of a Nation," running her life through the landscape and dangling off the cliff to escape her pursuer!

Too Busy For Love Affairs.

Yes, sir, Little Mae Marsh, the blue eyed, the golden haired, the adored, the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "up stage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no fur topped boots, no lip rouge.

If that time old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument, for at the first glance and after a minute's conversation any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great civil war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now, when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dignity that just escapes being primness and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same alternating repression and expression of emotion that make the girl of the screen so adorable and that go so so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been, "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in or-

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jeering and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. She March looked as pensive as any picture madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my sight, my all on the rocks and my death among the [illegible]

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5—It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1916

the same time. Or can one [illegible] efface from memory the [illegible] ner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation [illegible] fed. The player and his mood become the great figure in each case. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic situation, the hour de [illegible] which arrests attention and [illegible] memories that are to live, is a [illegible] power. The brain behind this art [illegible] concealment which is one of the [illegible] never revealed. It lends itself to [illegible] attributes of true art. The living [illegible] is subjective. There is no [illegible] the spoken drama. Each has its [illegible] and, if artistically done, will live [illegible] but the loss and the [illegible] were preservation may be [illegible] on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a [illegible] field in which to operate. On [illegible] there so called "success" are [illegible] at best. In the film [illegible]

[illegible] Philadelphia .....

Batteries: Hughes, Knetzer; Tyler, Reulbach and Gowdy; Meyer, Rixey, Bender and Burns.

Only two games scheduled.

American League

At Chicago—	R.	H.	E.
St. Louis	6	10	1
Chicago	2	4	0

Batteries: Wielman and Severeid; Cicotte, Russell, Scott, Wolfgang and Schalk.

At Boston (M. G.)	R.	H.	E.
Washington	3	10	0
Boston	2	7	2

Batteries: Boehling and Henry; Foster and Cady, Agnew.

(Afternoon game) —	R.	H.	E.
Washington	0	3	0
Boston	2	6	0

Batteries: Gallia, Ayers and [illegible]; Leonard and Thomas.

At Ne York—	R.	H.	E.
Philadelphia	1	3	4
New York	2	4	0

Batteries: Cro[illegible], Meyer and Meyers, Murph[illegible] Markle and Nunamaker.

[illegible]etroit [illegible] Cleveland, postponed, account [illegible].

CARD OF THANKS.

Mrs. Grace Shaw Weller, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Weller, and Mr. Frank Weller wish to express their most sincere thanks to their many friends for the sympathy and kindness extended to them during the death of their beloved husband, son and nephew, Earl B. Weller.

THE MARKETS

WHEAT IS NERVOUS.

Chicago, April 19. — WHEAT.—Lower prices for wheat resulted to-

Butter	.20
Geese	.07
Ducks	.10
Old Roosters	.06
Hens	.13
Guineas	.25
Broilers	25

Highest Price for Grain.

Wheat	.95
Corn	.59
Oats	.45

For the stomach and bowel disorders of babies McGEE'S BABY ELIXIR is a remedy of genuine merit. It acts quickly, is pure, wholesome and pleasant to take. Price 25c and 50c per bottle. Sold by Corry Pharmacy.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to take this means of tendering our sincere appreciation and thanks to the many kind friends, who were so thoughtful of us during our sorrow and sadness; also, for the many beautiful floral offerings.

We especially wish to mention the Elks lodge, and the beautiful singing of Mr. Fred McClaine.

MRS. E. T. KINGSBURY.
GERTRUDE KINGSBURY.
MRS. KATE COX.

SPRING

Spring is looked upon by many as the most delightful season of the year, but this cannot be said of the rheumatic. The cold and damp weather brings on rheumatic pains which are anything but pleasant. They can be relieved, however, by applying Chamberlain's Liniment. For sale by McCord Drug Co.

PRINTING

We cater to the wants of the most particular people who use the most particular class of Job Printing.

REMEMBER

We are now running our Job Department in connection with The [illegible] Cansler for insurance B 4 you [illegible] fire. Enid National Bank, Bldg. [illegible] 6.

ADVOCATES CLEAN UP ON FARM TOO, THIS MAN

Manhattan, Kansas, April 19.— A spring clean-up on the farm is just as advantageous to the farmer as the "clean-up week" is to the city man, W. H. Grimes, assistant professor of farm management at the Kansas State Agricultural College, asserted today. This is the week Governor Capper has set aside for a clean-up campaign in Kansas and Professor Grimes was anxious to have the movement extend to the rural districts of the state.

"The rainy days which occur frequently in the spring afford a good opportunity for cleaning up around the premises both inside the building and out," Professor Grimes said today. "The manure heaps and rubbish which have probably accumulated around the barns and feed lots are offensive and unsightly and have no value there, but when removed and applied to the fields are a definite value and add materially to wagon	6.8

8-9, Pioneer T. & T. Co., Enid, phones at grounds	69.8
8-9, Franklin Pltg. Co., Oklahoma City, buttons, etc.	41.3
8-9, W. U. Tel. Co., Enid, messages	.70
8-9, F. P. Douse, Enid, signs	3.0
8-9, Champlin Hdw. Co., Enid, hand-axe	1.5
8-9, Gilbert Madison, Enid, errand boy	3.5
8-9, Lyman Kester, Enid, hauling melons to town	9.0
8-9, J. H. Jackson, Enid, hauling melons to town, etc	10.5
8-9, Waitman's Livery, Enid, rent of horse	.5
8-9, F. L. Fains, Enid, drayage on field	1.5
8-9, Luther Wilson, Enid, stencils and dray	1.50
8-9, Ed. Evans, Enid, unloading melons	1.50
8-9, Grant Johnson, Enid, unloading melons	1.00
8-9, Roy Craig, Enid, unloading melons	1.50
8-9, Alf. Blockwelter, Enid, unloading melons
8-9, J. Jackson, Enid, unloading melons	12.00
8-9, Funston Johnson, Enid, spreading straw, 3 days with team	4.0
8-9, J. Jackson, Enid, 8 hours, spreading straw, two men and team	12.0
8-9, Funston Johnson, Enid, hauling lumber	37.5
8-9, Val Johnson, Enid, sheriff and special work	6.0
8-9, Fred Ash, Enid, deputy sheriff, two days with horse	15.0
8-9, Earl Evans, Enid, deputy sheriff, five days with horse	15.0
8-9, John Lytle, Enid, deputy sheriff	17.0
8-9, Robt. Babb, Enid, deputy sheriff	10.5
8-9, Oscar Krockenberg, Enid, deputy sheriff	9.0
8-9, Alf. Blockwalter, Enid, deputy sheriff	15.0
8-9, Roy Corry, Enid, deputy sheriff	7.5
8-9, Art Duncan, Enid, deputy sheriff	5
8-9, W. H. Scarff, Enid, Exp. to Oklahoma City	5.
8-9, Geo. F. Southard, Enid, Exp. to Oklahoma City	2
8-9, News, Oklahoma City, advertising	33.
8-9, L. C. Cook, Oklahoma City, flagman-decorator	41
8-9, Ray H. Haun, Oklahoma City, adv. on Enid trip for Enid C. of C.

Personal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work In "The Birth of a Nation" Has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, Is Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

THERE is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices and has got the so called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up. On observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain, just as in the big crashes of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by a flash of field flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is work, and he seeks relaxation in dancing. There is a story going along Broadway that recently Griffith turned down an offer from the manager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the trottery. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the Boniface why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh, and he is clubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the silent drama. He looks upon it as the youngest sister of the fine arts, and he hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blending of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score to "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he correlated tone to every action and unconsciously hummed the several tunes and chords which now form a part of the wonderful score which Breil has synchronized so well to this stirring action. These notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Breil while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

The Sun Hanover Pa Apr 24/16

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

HOW do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and hold on to it till you are middle aged, then marry and rear a family, releasing fame from your grasp and finding joy in a quiet, secluded country home?

Not so bad, you say, for some bookish individual who isn't attractive anyhow and hasn't a chance at the sweets of life? But utterly preposterous for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life program for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics; not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology;" not even a suffragette; but a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly in "The Birth of a Nation," running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her pursuer!

Too Busy For Love Affairs.

Yes, sir. Little Mae Marsh, the blue eyed, the golden haired, the adored, the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "up stage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no fur trimmed boots, no lip rouge.

If that time old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument, for at the first glance and after a minute's conversation any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great civil war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now, when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dignity that just escapes being primness and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same alternating repression and expression of emotion that make the girl of the screen so adorable and that go so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that have characterized any play on stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now give me sensible togs, lots of work and a typewriter to compose plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage, or, rather, it would have taken courage, had I been of a wavering disposition."

She is still frail looking and still slender, but graceful as a fawn and with some of that pretty creature's characteristics—the quick intelligence, quick movements, alertness, and when she is off guard, when she forgets she is being interviewed, when she is not constantly reminded by the whispers and stares of passersby that she is a heroine of the films, she is entirely natural. Apropos of that, she says it is on the screen that she is really her most natural self and that it is in conventional life she finds herself acting.

"I suppose," she says, "that sort of subconsciously I have the idea that I must show a difference in my manner, but I have done so much of the picture work and so thrown myself heart and soul into it that it is really difficult for me to separate myself from it."

"But"—with the little quizzical look that suggests laughter and tears and other things at the same time—"I suppose it's that way with every one who makes any sort of success out of what he undertakes, though my work is really nothing more than play to me, because I am so enthusiastic about it. I shall be perfectly content to be a moving picture actress all my days; that is"—hastily—"provided I can continue to live in California.

"I wrote Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working, I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty, and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

"I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully, only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake. I was at school at the Sacred Heart Convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried: 'Oh, don't! Don't, sister! I won't do it again.' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to get us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures, and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Apleplo Mary in 'Home, Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and the Law,' or 'Tolerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother at the same age I am now, twenty. It is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr. Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is a most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children."

The conversation shifted to faith, finally to talk in prayer.

"When I have prayed for anything I have always gotten it"—again Mae Marsh was seriousness itself—"provided I was good."

Herald
Hagerstown Md 4/24

APPOMATTOX NOW SCENE OF RUIN

Grown up with underbrush and scrub pine is the spot that marks "the end of the war" when Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee, the opposing commanders, firmly clasped hands, and Grant said, "Let us have peace." There are few of the comrades still left who remember that bright, sunshiny day at Appomattox Court House, when the two generals, flanked by other generals of their commands, went into the Wilmer-McLean house and arranged the terms of surrender that meant the end of the war and the return of the citizen armies to their civilian occupations.

Out of the beaten track as it is, Appomatox has fallen into ruin. The famous apple tree is now preserved only in memory and in the quatrain cited so memorably by Roscoe Conkling in the Republican Convention of 1880. The quiet little county seat of Appomattox had slumbered in obscurity until April 8, 1865, when it took its place in history, to be forever remembered in connection with the names of the great leaders of the Civil War and the end of the Lost Cause.

Few of the old houses are remaining in the little village. Unlike other famous battlefields, there has been no attempt to preserve the spot that marked the most important event of the great American conflict.

Because of this condition the lifelike reproduction of the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant at Appomattox Court House in David W. Griffith's, "The Birth of a Nation," is particularly interesting and valuable. The place is hallowed ground in the story of America and it is unpleasant to learn that fire and flood, vandal hands and public indifference and want of care have brought desolation to the spot whose name so appeals to both North and South, there united in lasting peace.

"The Birth of a Nation" comes to the New Academy on Wednesday and Thursday, April 26 and 27 for a return engagement.

Apr 25/16

WASHINGTON D.C.
TUESDAY. APRIL 25, 1916

THE EVENING STAR,

New National.

"The Birth of a Nation," adapted from Thomas Dixon's novels, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," started its second week at the New National Theater last night, with a very large audience.

The incidents and the plot of the production lend themselves much better to pictures than they did to the spoken play, "The Clansman," which had a following several years ago, because the camera is not so limited scenically. There are moments in the entertainment where one wishes he might hear the actors speak. But there are other moments when one does not have to be told that the spoken word would mar the scene of the instant. The grandeur of the last fight before Petersburg and the assassination of Lincoln need nothing but the accompanying music. The wild ride of the couriers bearing the flaming cross, the resultant assembling of the Ku Klux Clans and their stirring dash to Piedmont is one of the most stirring incidents of what is doubtless the climax of photoplay production. Last night there were few people in the theater who did not ride every foot of the way across those South Carolina hills and along those mountain roads down into the valley and the little southern town.

In coming out of the theater last night everybody seemed bent upon the expression of favorable criticism. "The Birth of a Nation" is a production in a class by itself.

APRIL 25, 1916.

WASHINGTON HERALD.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

There are reasons why every one in the District of Columbia should see "The Birth of a Nation," the attraction now at the National, and from present indications every one in the District means to see it. The most prominent reason is the locale of some of its most powerful scenes; these scenes were enacted in reality right here at our very door steps and there is hardly a day when they are not brought at least subconsciously into our minds. But these scenes, as we experience them in life, are always objective; things quite apart from ourselves. But witnessing their presentation in "The Birth of a Nation," they become subjective, a part of ourselves, because in this epic they move, are animated. No books, no mere pictures can bring this subject with such telling force before the mind. Hence to become a part of one's national history one should witness this presentation. Though chuck full of Southern atmosphere the dominating scenes and the most prominent characters are a part of Washington, and should be a greater interest to the Washingtonian even than to the southerner. What tradition has done heretofore simple oral communicat of the Nation" presents

THE WASHINGTON POST:

Mail 4/25 Hagerstown Md

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the National. The success which this remarkable entertainment has enjoyed throughout the country is being repeated in this city. The big film attraction began the second week of its visit in Washington last Sunday afternoon, and as seats are now selling a week in advance, the engagement will extend over a period of three weeks at least, and from present indications it may run even longer.

The exhibition is more than a spectacle—it gets beyond "the mob" and mere groupings. It is the dramatic element, which permeates every scene, that makes it something more than a pageant. It is drama through and through. So much so that the man Griffith, who created it, might in truth be called the modern Shakespeare of a new dramaturgy. There is dramatic instinct behind the creation. Hence the story. And because of this dramatic influence the story never fails to dominate scenes which have never been presented within the limitations of the stage before. In "The Birth of a Nation" Griffith has told a simple love story well. He has set forth an elemental story, with a whole nation as his background. Thus its popularity. Shakespeare raised the simple to the sublime. In a measure, Griffith has done the same thing, and without words.

Oklahoma Okla 4/24

OVERHOLSER.

"Birth of a Nation."

The romance of war, as well as its spectacular horror, is depicted in "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Overholser theater Thursday night for the remainder of the week.

Consciously or sub-consciously, D. W. Griffith's mind ran in the same channels as Lord Byron's in working out his epic masterpiece. Even those to whose ears the name "Childe Harold" is only vaguely familiar, recall vividly the stirring lines in which the most red-blooded of all English poets describes the ball before Waterloo, that night of revelry which started so gayly and sweetly and ended so sadly and tragically.

In "The Birth of a Nation," Mr. Griffith has made use of the same thrilling contrast between the joy of life and the hollow emptiness of death that stirs in Lord Byron's immortal poem. On the eve of Bull Run, just before the soldiers are to leave for the front, a great ball [illegible] little Carolina town [illegible]

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

5,000 Scenes, 18,000 characters and 3,000 Horses. Approximate cost of production $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of Wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 a piece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces, synchonized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER

The most stupendous dramatic and spectacular enterprise that the brain of man has yet visioned and realized!

Coming to the New Academy on Wednesday and Thursday April 26 and 27 with Daily Matinees.

APRIL 25, 1916.

THE TIMES-HERALD, NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT ACADEMY OF MUSIC FOR 5 PERFORMANCES

The next attraction at the Academy of Music will be D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins on Tursday, April 27, and is for three night and two matinees, Friday and Saturday, April 28 and 29.

This is the great production which is still making a record run of over 600 performances in New York city, where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over two million people have seen the production since it was orignally brought out in the east. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit. Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of half a million dollars.

The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme, but a myriad of details illumine the narrative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an operatic scores which carries recurrent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of forty travels with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has built his story. The conflict which this question caused is reproduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things which are a part of war.

Seats went on sale at Fergusson's Music Store on Monday morning. Mail orders now taken and filled in the order of their receipt when accompanied by the cash and return stamped envelope.

HANOVER, PA.

RECORD HERALD MONDAY, APRIL 24, 1916.

HENRY G. WALTHALL, who plays "The Little Colonel" in D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," at Opera House, Friday and Saturday, April 28 and 29. Matinee Saturday.

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Opera House Friday, April 28th and 29th, with a matinee on Saturday.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

"The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae March, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

DAILY PRESS, NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1916.

Personal Side of D. W. Griffith as Human As His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Whose Masterly Work In "The Birth of a Nation" Has Placed Him So High Above His Fellows, Is Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

THERE is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices and has got the so called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up. On observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain, just as in the big crashes of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by a flash of field flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is work, and he seeks relaxation in dancing. There is a story going along Broadway that recently Griffith turned down an offer from the manager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the trottery. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the Boniface why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh, and he is clubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the silent drama. He looks upon it as the youngest sister of the fine arts, and he hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blending of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score to "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he correlated tone to every action and unconsciously hummed the several tunes and chords which now form a part of the wonderful score which Breil has synchronized so well to this stirring action. These notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Breil while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him, and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spick and span uniform.

"Great heavens! What were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half starved and half clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform, and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of natural selection has worked out in the case of the motion picture and that the man with the imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had finished "The Birth of a Nation." He knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries, who had evolved the great American epic, who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theaters and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the business, and he wanted to break from this narrow field and go before that great public which had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabel Lee" and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism, which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as superfine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing For Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afford. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

The Advance

ELIZABETH CITY, NORTH CAROLINA, FRIDAY APRIL 14, 1916

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

UCH of the tenderly poetic ap peal of "The Birth of a Na tion" is due to the subtle act ing of Miss Lillian Gish i art of Elsie Stoneman, the North eroine. Miss Gish is a little crea of the "golden aureole" blond which makes for photographic y. She is singularly graceful her features never lose thei ncy. Her eyes before the camera ingularly expressive, and her act onveys sincerity as well as tru ine charm.

haps the most poetical scene o ntire drama is the one in whic nd Henry Walthall, as her South ver, pour out their hearts to eac other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

BIRTH OF NATION OUT TOPS BEN HUR

Surpasses Any Previous Stage Spectacle in History of Moving Picture Play Productions Here or Elsewhere

'The Birth of a Nation' will be be shown at the Aikrama on April 24, 25 and 26. Seats went on sale at Selig's Thursday morning and the present demand indicates that the Alkrama will be filled for each showing of the famous photoplay.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing 'The Birth of a Nation' has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. 'Ben Hur' and 'The Blue Bird' were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance besides this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 200,000 details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by 'capacity' business at first class prices in the principal theatres of the country.

Herald
Lawrence Mass
April 25

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Bird's Eye View of Gigantic Spectacle to Be Played Here Wednesday and Thursday at the New Academy.

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theater, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont theater, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois theater, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon theater, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's theater, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dreses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"War as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular travelling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Ella City Times
4/25

"The Birth of a Nation."

The rapid strides of the motion picture industry in comparison with the stage where the spoken drama flourishes is astonishing when figures are studied. Take the case of "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Overholser theater Thursday night. The gross receipts of the fifteen companies now presenting the spectacle in the various large amusement centers of America are in the neighborhood of a million dollars every seven weeks.

It is conservatively estimated, on the showing of the past nine months, that "The Birth of a Nation" will net for its producers a round $10,000,000 before it is laid aside.

In 300 years, the most popular play ever written in the English language, "The Merchant of Venice," has drawn into the box-office only $35,000,000, from which the clear profits can scarcely exceed $15,000,000. Thus, in about three or four years, a motion picture spectacle will have netted two-thirds as much as the most popular of spoken plays has netted in 300 years.

Then, too, the stage of the spoken drama has flourished in America about 200 years without producing a single director who draws a salary of $100,000 annually. The motion picture industry in only about ten years has produced on such prodigy, D. W. Griffith, who staged "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Griffith is one of the very few men in any line of business in America who pays as

APRIL 25, 1916
THE DAILY OKLAHOMAN.

OVERHOLSER.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The white-hot fires of censorship through which "The Birth of a Nation," returning to the Overholser theater Thursday night for the remainder of the week has passed, have stirred the American mind to sharp debate of the rights and wrongs of censorship.

To most people the entire question of censorship seems a novelty that originated with the moving picture only a few months, or, at least, a few years ago. In reality the question is as old as the theater itself.

Solon, so Plutarch relates, went to the theater to seek the Greek Thespis act—the same Thespis who gave us our word thespian. As the play progressed, Solon, the lawmaker, became more and more angry. When it was finished he sought out Thespis and asked the tragedian if "he was not ashamed to tell so many lies before such a number of people." Thespis replied that "it was no harm to say or do so in a play." Solon angrily struck his staff against the ground and fairly shouted: "Ay, if we honor and commend such a play as this, we shall find it some day our concern."

Solon's disciples have been legion. The Roman theater was frequently censored, even by the infamous Nero. Shakespeare produced his masterpieces in spite of the handicaps of a sharp censorship that, among other things, restricted reference to Deity and forbade the appearance of women on the stage. In the days of Charles II a formal censorship was established in England, which was developed into the strangling incubus that is being so valiantly fought by Bernard Shaw and other energetic contemporary dramatists.

APRIL 25, 1916
WASHINGTON TIMES.

NATIONAL.

"The Birth of a Nation" opened its second week at the National yesterday with two capacity audiences which were worked up to a high pitch by the stirring scenes and episodes with which this wonderful film abounds.

"The Birth of a Nation" presents by action what tradition has handed down by the written or spoken word. Its appeal is all the wider and general because of the public's partial familiarity with the subject matter dealt with.

Although the most typically Southern production ever witnessed in Washington and of great interest to Southerners in the National Capital, the film appears to appeal perhaps even stronger to Washingtonians because the scenes are laid so near the National Capital and the action is so vivid.

At yesterday's performances scores of persons who attended the presentation of the film last week were observed in the audience. The National has a capacity of only 1,500 and it is understood the producers intend extending the engagement here until everybody in Washington has seen "The Birth of a Nation."

ENID DAILY EAGLE TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1916.

1/20

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Immense Spectacle Attracting Crowds to American Theater Three Days This Week

A picture in which the little common scenes of every day life are depicted with a faithfulness that is remarkable, in which the tragedy and pathos of war and the pitiful home scenes that accompany it are of no less interest than the spectacular and wonderful war pictures, in which there are thousands of people and in which embodied histroic scenes and events that are remarkable, is the "Birth of a Nation," seen here in Enid at the American for the first time yesterday. Widely heralded, the picture was in no way disappointing, and one went away from the theater feeling as though much had been learned, aside from the entertaining and emotional appeal of the story, which of course is an asset of any moving picture.

The orchestra's music is a wonderful part of the picture. As for the picture itself, it beggars description, and to attempt to pigeon hole or criticise it, is to do it an injustice. Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Henry Walthall, playing the three heavy leads, did not fall short of their established reputation. Mae Marsh as "Little Sister," did some emotional acting, wherein the moods and whims of a sweet and impulsive child were depicted with all the charm and abandon of a mad-cap child, that later gave way to the depths of sorrow and terror. Henry Walthall as the "Little Colonel" was at his best.

The historic scenes were faith-

GREAT PEAC E ALLEGORY.

THE BIRTH O F A NATION.

RECORD-HERALD. HANOVER. PA.

RECORD-HERALD.

HANOVER. PA.

APRIL 25, 1916.

The Birth of a Nation.

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Opera House commencing on Friday for an engagement of two days with Saturday matinee.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relation to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a title of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

—:o:—

Parade of Troops, a dramatic southern scene in D. W. Griffith's Gigantic spectacle "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" which comes to the Opera House, Friday and Saturday, April 28th and 29th, with a matinee Saturday.

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, opens an engagement of two nights at the Hanover Opera House, Friday, April 28th, and Saturday, April 29, with a matinee Saturday.

The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender of Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama.

In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The fun and froile of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown.

Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details.

A special orchestra is carried and furnishes music continuously.

Herald
Hagerstown Md
apr. 25

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HERE FOR TWO DAYS

Great Spectacle Playing Return Engagement In Hagerstown

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" begins its engagement at the Academy today. There will be two performances daily at 8:20 and 2:30 P. M., today and tomorrow.

It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an aera of 10 square miles and upon these planes and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent assunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of venefeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in a allegorical dream which visions the re-union of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

Mail, Hagerstown Md.
apr 26/16
Atlantic City

, APRIL 26, 1916.

AMUSEMENTS.

"BIRTH OF A NATION TODAY."

D. W. Griffith's great production "The Birth of a Nation" has broken so many records that it is hard to keep track of them. For the length of its run and the total attendance it holds the season's record in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Atlantic City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Brighton Beach and Seattle, Wash. These records are being added to in numerous other cities where the big spectacle is now piling up unprecedented records to substantiate its marvelous popularity. "The Birth of a Nation" returns to this city for four performances at the New Academy, opening with a matinee today.

ECORD-HERALD.
HANOVER, PA.
APRIL 26, 1916.

OVERHOLSER.

Pictures Seem To Live.

A distinguished dramatic critic, who has written many authoritative books, and whose word is as weighty as gold in any discussion relating to the stage, has taken a steady stand against the art of the motion picture, declaring it is no art at all and never will be. In a recent discussion of a popular actress he had just seen on the screen, he declared that "in the movies she is a dancing nightmare of her charming self and with the horrible suggestion of an animated dead person that is characteristic of all film pictures."

It is identically this "suggestion of an animated dead person" that D. W. Griffith has succeeded in removing in his impressive spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Overholser theater tomorrow night for the remainder of the week. And it is due to the removal of this sugestion that his film actors excite the audience to such frenzied outbursts of shouting and applause, seldom heard in the theater of flesh and blood actors, and almost never in the picture houses.

The only reason the phantoms of the screen appear phantasmal is because speech is lacking. Griffith has substituted for speech a musical score as truly interpretative as speech could possibly be, and presto! the ghosts have vanished. It is only the Wagnerian idea of opera applied to the screen. Wagner believed musical sounds could be made as eloquent and intelligible as words. He demonstrated his belief. Griffith believed that music could be made to overcome the one vital objection to the motion picture, and he, too, has demonstrated his belief just as surely as did Wagner.

Clever Actress In "The Birth of a Nation."

Mae Marsh, who plays [illegible] Flora Cameron in [illegible] Nation" at [illegible] 28 and 29th [illegible] day, is know[illegible] as the girl [illegible] Her remarka[illegible] in the mo[illegible] Maude Adam[illegible] mate drama [illegible] manner in w[illegible] master prod[illegible] personality [illegible] latent gift.

Little Mis[illegible] in pictures [illegible] already reac[illegible] der. A few [illegible] to the Griff[illegible] older sister [illegible] undeveloped [illegible] saw great p[illegible] surface of [illegible] mobile count[illegible] half-grown g[illegible] finishing and [illegible] she has the [illegible] the thousand[illegible] crowd, the G[illegible] is the joyous [illegible] most remarka[illegible] yet unfolded.

Experienced [illegible] a word of pr[illegible] phatic, for th[illegible] the young sis[illegible] story. This [illegible] press almost a[illegible] ine mind can [illegible] ed tomboys a[illegible] tive girls and [illegible] frightens her [illegible] recting. Toda[illegible] known than [illegible] world and she [illegible] fans in every [illegible]

HAVEN, MISSISSIPPI, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1916.

Semi-Weekly Leader

HENRY WALTHALL who plays the "Little Colonel"

D. W. GRIFFITH Producer of "The Birth of a Nation"

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING MAY 8TH

Mayor Charles Heuck has completed arrangements for the presentation of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at Heuck's theatre for three days beginning Monday night, May 8. The company's advance representative was in Brookhaven this week, coming direct from New Orleans, where the company is now in the seventh week of its phenomenal run at the Tulane theatre.

It has been decided to conduct the advance sale of seats at Mayor Heuck's office, city hall, beginning next Monday morning. The seat sale will be opened a week ahead because of the unusual importance of the engagement and the desire of the management to avoid the confusion that a three or four day's sale period would entail. Wherever "The Birth of a Nation" has been shown hundreds have been turned away and patrons are urged to obtain their tickets well in advance.

Brookhaven will enjoy the distinction of being one of the smallest cities in the world to be honored with an engagement of the Griffith spectacle, [illegible] date, being included with Baton Rouge, Natchez and Hattiesburg, [illegible] the company's route through this section. The [illegible] practically the [illegible] which [illegible] this wonder- [illegible] night, lower [illegible] $1.50; General [illegible] and [illegible] admission, 50c; Matinee, Tuesday and Wednesday, lower floor, $1; balcony, 50c and general admission, 25c.

The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's Theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpetbagging regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historcial details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra. Some of the old war-time tunes, thus thematically treated make the "counterfeit presentments" of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henaby as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Spottiswoode Atkin and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch.

ENID DAILY EAGLE TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1916.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Immense Spectacle Attracting Crowds to American Theater Three Days This Week

A picture in which the little common scenes of every day life are depicted with a faithfulness that is remarkable, in which the tragedy and pathos of war and the pitiful home scenes that accompany it are of no less interest than the spectacular and wonderful war pictures, in which there are thousands of people and in which embodied histroic scenes and events that are remarkable, is the "Birth of a Nation," seen here in Enid at the American for the first time yesterday. Widely heralded, the picture was in no way disappointing, and one went away from the theater feeling as though much had been learned, aside from the entertaining and emotional appeal of the story, which of course is an asset of any moving picture.

The orchestra's music is a wonderful part of the picture. As for the picture itself, it beggars description, and to attempt to pigeon hole or criticise it, is to do it an injustice. Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Henry Walthall, playing the three heavy leads, did not fall short of their established reputation. Mae Marsh as "Little Sister," did some emotional acting, wherein the moods and whims of a sweet and impulsive child were depicted with all the charm and abandon of a mad-cap child, that later gave way to the depths of sorrow and terror. Henry Walthall as the "Little Colonel" was at his best.

The historic scenes were faith-

RECORD-HERALD.

HANOVER, PA.

APRIL 25, 1916.

The Birth of a Nation.

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation" will be the attraction at the Opera House commencing on Friday for an engagement of two days with Saturday matinee.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relation to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a title of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

—:o:—

GREAT PEAC E ALLEGORY.

THE BIRTH O F A NATION.

RECORD-HERALD. HANOVER. PA.

Parade of Troops, a dramatic southern scene in D. W. Griffith's Gigantic spectacle "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" which comes to the Opera House, Friday and Saturday, April 28th and 29th, with a matinee Saturday.

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, opens an engagement of two nights at the Hanover Opera House, Friday, April 28th, and Saturday, April 29, with a matinee Saturday.

The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender of Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama.

In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown.

Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details.

A special orchestra is carried and furnishes music continuously.

Herald
Hagerstown Md
apr. 25

Mail, Hagerstown Md.

apr 26/16
Okla City

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HERE FOR TWO DAYS

Great Spectacle Playing Return Engagement In Hagerstown

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" begins its engagement at the Academy today. There will be two performances daily at 8:20 and 2:30 P. M., today and tomorrow.

It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an aera of 10 square miles and upon these planes and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent assunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of venefeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in a allegorical dream which visions the re-union of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

, APRIL 26, 1916.

AMUSEMENTS.

"BIRTH OF A NATION TODAY."

D. W. Griffith's great production "The Birth of a Nation" has broken so many records that it is hard to keep track of them. For the length of its run and the total attendance it holds the season's record in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Atlantic City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Brighton Beach and Seattle, Wash. These records are being added to in numerous other cities where the big spectacle is now piling up unprecedented records to substantiate its marvelous popularity. "The Birth of a Nation" returns to this city for four performances at the New Academy, opening with a matinee today.

ECORD-HERALD.
HANOVER, PA.
APRIL 26, 1916.

OVERHOLSER.

Pictures Seem To Live.

A distinguished dramatic critic, who has written many authoritative books, and whose word is as weighty as gold in any discussion relating to the stage, has taken a steady stand against the art of the motion picture, declaring it is no art at all and never will be. In a recent discussion of a popular actress he had just seen on the screen, he declared that "in the movies she is a dancing nightmare of her charming self and with the horrible suggestion of an animated dead person that is characteristic of all film pictures."

It is identically this "suggestion of an animated dead person" that D. W. Griffith has succeeded in removing in his impressive spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Overholser theater tomorrow night for the remainder of the week. And it is due to the removal of this sugestion that his film actors excite the audience to such frenzied outbursts of shouting and applause, seldom heard in the theater of flesh and blood actors, and almost never in the picture houses.

The only reason the phantoms of the screen appear phantasmal is because speech is lacking. Griffith has substituted for speech a musical score as truly interpretative as speech could possibly be, and presto! the ghosts have vanished. It is only the Wagnerian idea of opera applied to the screen. Wagner believed musical sounds could be made as eloquent and intelligible as words. He demonstrated his belief. Griffith believed that music could be made to overcome the one vital objection to the motion picture, and he, too, has demonstrated his belief just as surely as did Wagner.

Clever Actress In "The Birth Nation."

Mae Marsh, who plays the Flora Cameron in "The Birth Nation" at the Opera Hous 28 and 29th with a matinee day, is known all over the as the girl with a thousand Her remarkable rise to the po in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most liable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd, the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the young sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her face is better known than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

AVEN, MISSISSIPPI, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1916.

Semi-Weekly Leader

SAME
ghts, 50c,
UST BE ACCOM

Boy Wins Distinction
e Public School.

humpert, Superintend chools, has kindly e Leader the follow
h will be of interes unity, friends of edu especially to friends o
the Moreton family:-
gton and Lee Univers
Lexington, Virgin
Office of the Presid
April 18, 1
Schumpert,
aven City Schools,
okhaven, Miss.
Mr. Schumpert: to your letter of re
ssed to President Sm sure in sending to y e report of Mr. S.
for the term en thirty-first. We ndertaken to deter
e standing of the m
Freshman class, b hat young Moreton ong the first ten i re than 150.
be glad to accept pupils from the Br
h School.
ton and Lee does of affiliated schools, graduates from redited by the diffe rsities and such have sent us pupils
oughly prepared to lege work.
at liberty to say in that graduates haven High School
d to Washington and by certificate with n.
ery sincerely yours,
. D. Campbell, Dean.

easy for you to please
it is for everybody

E, AGED WOMAN
hol Made Her Strug

A NATION" COMING MAY 8TH

the first half of the great pic- exhibits the salient events of Civil War, which came to a at Appomattox fifty years Lincoln's call for troops, man's march, the Battle of rsburg, Lee's surrender to nt and the awful tragedy at l's Theatre live before the tator of the Griffith drama. the second half the South's ond uprising," this time onst the carpetbagging regime, own in a thrilling story of Reruction days. The romance e "little Confederate colonel" Cameron with the Northerner fe Stoneman, and that of the onist Captain Phil Stoneman Margaret Cameron, the South olina lassie, maintain two eads of continuous love-interest oughout the story.

he fun and frolic of plantation rs, as well as the heartache and hos of the stricken South are own. The great out-of-doors is r. Griffith's special field. Great ttle scenes and the rides of the an are staged with thousands of articipants There are 5,000 cenes in the spectacle, and (it is stimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historcial details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronization of the old war-time tunes, thus thematically treated make the "counterfeit presentments" of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henaby as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Spottiswoode Atkin and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch.

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

HOW [illegible] like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your [illegible] in your youth, [illegible] firmly and hold on to it [illegible] middle aged, then marry [illegible] releasing fame from your gras[illegible] joy in a quiet, [illegible] home?

Not so bad, [illegible] say, for some [illegible]ish individual who isn't a[illegible] how and hasn't a cha[illegible]ets of life? But utterly pre[illegible]tious for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life program for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics; not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology;" not even a suffragette; but a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, idol of 20[illegible] screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly in "The Birth of a Nation," running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her pursuer!

Too Busy For Love Affairs.

Yes, sir. Little Mae Marsh, [illegible]-eyed, the golden haired, the [illegible], the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "up stage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no fur topped boots, no lip rouge.

If that time old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument, for at the first glance and after a minute's conversation any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great [illegible] war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dignity that just escapes being primness and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same alternating repression and expression of motion that make the girl of the [illegible] so adorable and that go so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that have characterized any play on stage or screen in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages, and, believe me, it fills their lives. There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at thirty or thirty-five than I would be at twenty?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" out on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

Her motto seems to have been, "Whatever you do do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now give me sensible togs, lots of work and a typewriter to compose plays on and I ask nothing more.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living, going from one kind of occupation to another, because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage, or, rather, it would have taken courage, had I been of a wavering disposition."

She is still frail looking and still slender, but graceful as a fawn and with some of that pretty creature's characteristics—the quick intelligence, quick movements, alertness, and when she is off guard, when she forgets she is being interviewed, when she is not constantly reminded by the whispers and stares of passersby that she is a heroine of the films, she is entirely natural. Apropos of that, she says it is on the screen that she is really her most natural self and that it is in conventional life she finds herself acting.

"I suppose," she says, "that sort of subconsciously I have the idea that I must show a difference in my manner, but I have done so much of the picture work and so thrown myself heart and soul into it that it is really difficult for me to separate myself from it."

"But"—with the little quizzical look that suggests laughter and tears and other things at the same time—"I suppose it's that way with every one who makes any sort of success out of what he undertakes, though my work is really nothing more than play to me, because I am so enthusiastic about it. I shall be perfectly content to be a moving picture actress all my days; that is"—hastily—"provided I can continue to live in California.

"I wrote Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen, I had gone into the studio where my older sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me playing about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my future possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looked as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was! I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock, twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the villain, is a good friend of mine and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month, on salary, too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working, I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace, Denver. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty, and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

"Suppose you tell me something about Mae Marsh for those who want to know more about her?"

"I began—that is, I was born in Madrid, New Mexico. My father was auditor of the Santa Fe Railroad and we lived in a lot of places while I was little. My earliest recollection is of sitting on the cabin floor in a Mexican cabin and eating tortillas. Mother says I spoke Mexican beautifully, only no one at home could understand me.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the San Francisco earthquake. I was at school at the Sacred Heart Convent. Something heavy came crashing down upon me. I cried: 'Oh, don't—Don't sister! I won't do it again.' I thought one of the sisters was spanking me. We were taken into the yard, and after an hour and a half mother came for us. She had walked across San Francisco to get us. We lived in a tent. I thought that was lots of fun. Mother paid $25 the first day for food. The next we didn't have anything to eat. We lived out of doors for three days in Golden Gate Park. I saw a man shot for stealing a drink of water.

"Then we moved to Los Angeles. My sister went into moving pictures and I followed her. That was four years ago, when I was sixteen. The first work that won recognition for me was Appleple Mary in 'Home Sweet Home.' I am the mother now in 'The Mother and the Law,' or 'Tolerance.' It is not quite certain what it will be called. I am a mother at the same age I am now, twenty. It is being taken over again after we worked on it a year. Mr. Griffith wasn't satisfied with it. He is a most wonderful man, a genius. We players call him father. He calls us children."

The conversation shifted to faith, finally to faith in prayer.

"When I have prayed for anything I have always gotten it"—again Mae Marsh was seriousness itself—"provided I was good."

Tulsa Democrat
Okla. 4/27-16

Ride of the Clansmen in "The Birth of a Nation" at the and next week.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

History Revived And Shown In Its Making In Coming Production

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will be soon at the Opera House —April 28-29— exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is said to be above all else one of the greatest things that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and with this frame work

(Continued on fourth page)

TIMES-HERALD, NEWPORT NEWS, VA., THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1916.

THREE DAY ENGAGEMENT OF "BIRTH OF A NATION" TO OPEN HERE TONIGHT

D. W. Griffith is the most talked about, and probably the most sought after, man in America. He learned how to plan things, in the making of the 5,000 scenes of the "Birth of a Nation," or he would be lost. He galloped through the myriad-and-one business details of a theatrical success without turning a hair or developing the slightest case of "nerve." When the turmoil and the tumult dies, and the hours are small, his refreshment is the dance or a friendly chat with a round table of chums.

It was said on the first night in New York that only the son of a soldier could have conceived and executed "The Birth of a Nation," As a Kentucky lad, the son of Brig.-Gen. J. W. Griffith, he drank in the Civil war narratives greedily. As he grew up came the poet's vision of the entire struggle and of Reconstruction days. In the prime of manhood awoke the beinus to make it a reality.

While planning the Battle of Petersburg, Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took thus thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign? Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a modern telephone swithboard. From it field wires ran to his various sub-generals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anachronism of field telephones in Civil war time.

Thus completed equipped as a modern Joffre or von Hindenburg, Griffith saw everything and telephoned all his instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1864 pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are far from spic and span. Many of them are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags even have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Plainly war, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers. It is hard, grueling, continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies, are employed. There's everything from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the handgrip of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "indoor" productions.

"The Birth of a Nation" opens a three day engagement tonight at the Academy o Music.

"BIRTH OF NATION" SLANDER; DECLARES REV. G. S. WOMER

Will Preach Sermon on Subject at Sunday Evening Service

THAD. STEVENS IN IT

That at least one Huntingdon man disapproves of "The Birth of a Nation" shown Monday and Tuesday evenings and Tuesday afternoon, at the Grand Theatre here, is shown by the announcement by the Rev. G. S. Womer, that on next Sunday evening at the First Methodist church he will preach a sermon on the slander of "The Birth of a Nation."

The Rev. Mr. Womer's announcement is as follows:

"Patriotism has been outraged, the memory of Thaddeus Stevens, the Great Commoner, Pennsylvania's foremost statesman during the Civil War has been slured, every living Veteran of the Civil War insulted and the sacrifice of the thousands who sleep in their graves sneered at in Huntingdon this week when The Birth of a nation was allowed to be exibited here without scarcely a single protest.

"All patriotic citizens are invited to come to the First Methodist Church next Sunday evening and hear a sermon on the Fickleness of the Crowd, when the untruthfulness of history and the slander of The Birth of a nation will be revealed. By the Pastor G. S. Womer."

CITIZEN'S AMUSEMENT SECTION

4/27

TELLER'S SHUBERT.

"The Birth of a Nation" Returns to Brooklyn.

To-morrow afternoon at Teller's Shubert Theatre "The Birth of a Nation," will commence its final appearance in this city. Performances will be given twice daily including next Sunday. The popularity of this spectacle is no longer confined to the country whose greatest historical events it pictures, for London, England; Sidney, Australia, and Buenos Ayres, Argentine; are now adding their thousands of interested patrons to the millions in this country and Canada, who have praised its immensity, grandeur and entertaining features.

The patronage to date has reached the most amazing figures. Practically every large and small city in this country excepting Ohio has had one or more presentations of the picture. Its title has become a household word; its patrons have ranged from school children eager to gain historical knowledge, to their elders, many of whom took active part in the eventful scenes that made the drama possible.

No great star, no successful example of the spoken drama has ever played to as many people as has "The Birth of a Nation," either in individual cities or in the country as a whole.

Washington Herald
4/27-16

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

No theatrical entertainment in recent years has caused such widespread interest as "The Birth of a Nation," the masterwork of the foremost of motion picture producers, David W. Griffith, which will begin its third week at the National Theater with next Monday's matinee. The playhouse has been crowded at each of the two daily presentations during the past and current weeks.

No detail has been slighted to make for perfect projection of the story on the screen. There is given visually a complete and accurate idea of the stress and storm of the upheaval that was essential to the cementing of the States of the Union into an indissoluble nation. And with it all there is a romance, with love finally triumph, after many heartburnings. The story is founded upon "The Clansman" by Thomas Dixon. Each incident is emphasized with music, original or carefully selected and played by a special orchestra of thirty pieces.

Press

Standard.

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin its second week in the Standard Theatre this afternoon. The attractiveness of this screen play is attested by the fact that, after being presented for a year in the Liberty Theatre to capacity audiences, and having been seen in many parts of the city during the interim, it is now packing the Standard twice daily.

The Gettysburg Times
4/27/16

DAILY PRESS, NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA, THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1916.

4/27-16
Hagerstown Herald Dnd.

MOST WONDERFUL PICTURE SHOWN

Gettysburg Most Fortunate in having Famous Films Brought here. Wonderful Creation of Moving Picture Work.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" begins its engagement at Walter's Theatre Monday night.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has even been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a large scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacles have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.—advertisement

MAE MARSH IS ONE OF RECENT MOVIE "FINDS"

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the capitivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music, beginning tonight, is a prodgy of Filmdom. In fact it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts, who declare her to be the best "find" of the last thirty months in this wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope if a stage career. A small job at spearholding with the "merry, merry" was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. Sensed also a emperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awakwardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility, could queen it in a palace or play a "biddy" in a kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit, with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero, had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention offhand a really great character actress in the photographic field, the chances are ten to one, that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan.

The "Birth of a Nation" will be here for three days with matinees Friday and Saturday and is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the 2 hours and 45 minutes' performance. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilse the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the States and the reconstruction of the Southland. Some faint idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor drama" cost half a million dollars. This cit, will be favored with the origisal production from one of the large cities—New York, Boston and Chicago, where it was first simultaneously shown.

Seats are now selling at Ferguson's music store for all five performances. Prices, matinee 25c to $1. At night, 25c. to $2. Matinees at 3 p. m. Night performances at 8:30.

MANY PERSONS SEE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

The Birth of a Nation, the world's greatest photoplay masterpiece, opened a two day's engagement at the New Academy yesterday. Good sized audiences were present at both performances and it is expected that the attendance today will be very large. This is a wonderful picture, and none should lose the opportunity of seeing this vast and marvelous scenic masterpiece which cost half million dollars and has created a sensation the country over.

4/27-16 MARTINSBURG, W. VA., EVENING JOURNAL.

GENERALS LEE AND GRANT AT APPOMATTOX

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed at the bottom.

The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith during his staging of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomatox," one of his striking historical facsimile scenes in Griffith's motion pictures "The Birth of a Nation", coming to the Central Opera [illegible] May 3 and 4. General Grant is

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" begins the third week of its run at the National Theater on Monday afternoon. This is the first time in the stage history of Washington that any attraction offered at the higher scale of prices has run more than two consecutive weeks. Capacity business has been the rule at the National Theater since the beginning of the engagement.

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

A striking detail about "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Grenhalgh next Thursday night for the remainder of the week, is the fact that D. W. Griffith, director, carried the entire scenario in his mind, and for five months worked without so much as a scrap of paper. Then, when all the photography was completed, and 200,000 feet, or nearly 40 miles of film lay before him, he selected, still without references, the present 12,000 feet of drama.

[illegible] I've

Valley Spirit 4/28/'16 Apr
Chambersburg Pa

252

Lillian Gish and the Sentinental Sentry—A Comedy Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Which Comes to The Orpheum, Friday and Saturday, May 5-6. Matinee Saturday.

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Orpheum theatre proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlano is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," which plays a return engagement at the Grand opera house for four days starting next Thursday, believes he has solved the problem of making history attractive to theatergoers. The drama actually depicting history has been almost invariably a failure from the days of Shakespeare to the present, with now and then a notable exception like Shakespeare's own "Julius Caesar" and the "Richelieu" of Bulwer. But even Shakespeare and Bulwer did not score the notable triumphs in drama that Sir Walter Scott and Alexander Dumas scored in fiction.

Mr. Griffith believes that dramatists have failed through lack of vividness. They have either been conscientious to the point of dullness in depicting historical incidents, or have been brilliant to the point of sacrificing accuracy.

Now, Mr. Griffith does not class himself with Shakespeare or Bulwer, but he believes himself more fortunate than the early dramatists in having at his disposal an art of which they knew nothing. He can take a historical incident, stage it in a vast manner, and add to it a touch of pictorial art, idealizing it without destroying its realism. This he is credited with having done in "The Birth of a Nation." The battle of Petersburg, for example, is staged so realistically, it is declared, that veterans of that famous fight have no difficulty recognizing their old comrades in familiar attitudes—not their faces, of course, but their general formations and actions. Yet, Mr. Griffith has thrown a glamour over the battlefield, the critics say, that lifts it out of the plane of realism into that art.

The striking success of the Griffith spectacle is taken as an argument in favor of his belief that history can be welded successfully to the theater.

Lincoln Signing Call for Volunteers—"The Birth of a

Evening Star
Hazleton Pa 4/28-16

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Lillian Gish Stars In Remarkable Production At Opera House

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Opera House tonight, is the lovesick sentry in the Hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look:

MISS LILLIAN GISH

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffiith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all theactors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Now playing to a full house, every day and night, during its last week at Ford's Theatre, in Baltimore, and has proven to be by far the greatest attraction ever given in that city. Although this is the eighth week, every seat for the entire week was sold by last Tuesday night.

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical sptctacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Grand Opera House, Cambridge, Monday, May 8th and 9th. "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the most widely discussed topics in the country. It established an absolutely new art in the realm of the theatre—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with music. It also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the same theme as Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The consequences of the Civil War in Southern reconstruction are fully dealt with, and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed the stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures, accompanying music and effects tell the coherent, logical and moving story.

Democrat & News Apr 21/16
Cambridge Md.

MICHIGAN CITY, INDIANA
FRIDAY, APRIL 28, 1916. Evening News

NATION PICTURE IS WONDERFUL

Biggest Spectacular Film Ever Produced

AUDIENCE FAIRLY PARALYZED

Gripping Dramatic Story With Thousands of Thrills Unrolled Under Most Favorable Circumstances—Orchestral Accompaniment

Don't fail to see "The Birth of a Nation."

Last night's audience at the Orpheum theater was almost paralyzed by this wonderful picture. One's blood was made to run warm, the hair stands on end; you find yourself unconsciously gritting your teeth, bracing your feet and clinging to the arms of your chair with every muscle and nerve exerted to the utmost, as the thrilling climaxes are revealed on the screen before you. Again you relax into your normal condition, your fever heat is gone and in another instant a big lump jumps up in your throat, your eyes moisten and for a moment you feel as if a good cry would do heaps of good, but as quickly as the emotions were worked to the crying pitch the scene changes, the trumpeter in the splendid orchestra bangs the high, shrill, notes of his horn squarely on the nose, the drummer boy slam bangs the drum, the effect crew on the stage assists in bringing up the troops of the North, or the mounted warriors of the Ku Klux Klan, and action that beggars description is passing on before you, and, if you are not very, very careful you will be on your feet shouting, or in some other way giving vent to that something within you.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the last word in filmdom. It cannot be described. It is advertised as a mighty spectacle, as a stupendous production; its all of that and more too.

Cities are built up and then destroyed by fire; the biggest battle of the Civil war is re-enacted, giving a pretty fair idea of the way things are now taking place in Europe; Ford's theater, Washington, is reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy; series of wild Ku Klux rides that commandeered a county for a day, cost $10,000; women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux costumes 25,000 yards of cloth in the making; night photography of battle scenes were invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000; wonderful artillery duels in which real shells, costing $80 apiece were used; miles of trenches, thousands of fighters, and war as it actually is, are reproduced and go to make the greatest moving picture. An orchestra of twenty pieces plays music written and arranged by Joseph Carl Briel, and there is a note for each changing action. When the reel stops, the orchestra rests, but there is little resting. Every note has a meaning all its own and each musical bar fits in thus and so with the celluloid of which there is 12,000 feet.

"The Birth of a Nation" is surely a great masterpiece of untold historical value. Its a whirlwind of a picture, well worth the admission regardless of the price. Its the picture of a lifetime.

When David W. Griffith, the author and producer of "The Birth of a Nation" first gave serious thought to the idea of bringing forth such a supurb spectacle, he was quite lost from his associates for several days. The idea was first suggested to him from his knowledge for the book and play known as "The Clansman." For a period of almost three weeks Mr. Griffith appeared as a mysterious man of silence to his friends and companions. He just kept on thinking this [illegible] upon as a convincing illustration of what may be done in the future in the matter of giving instruction to the young upon historical subjects. When the work of re-construction was taken on following the Civil War many things were done badly. The south had already suffered as much as it could bear from the evils of war and it was doubly crushed when the stricken states were overrun with many thousand carpetbaggers, the term "carpetbagger" in those days was one of reproach, meaning an unscrupulous, dishonest, dishonorable and desolate individual, who for self agrandizement to secure office, betrayed the blacks and incited them to violence against the whites which they would not have done had it not been for this dishonest crowd of carpetbaggers. The Southerners were the best friends the colored population had, but the carpetbaggers made the newly enfranchised believe that their former masters were their avowed enemies which they were not. The colored man was blamed for many things he did not do and would not have done, had it not been for the evil influence of the carpetbaggers. The progress which the blacks have made in the past forty years is excellent proof that they were the victims of the treachery of the disreputable whites who went south for the purpose of securing office.

HANOVER, PA.
RECORD HERALD

THE THEATRES

"Birth of a Nation" Tonight.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen for the first time in Hanover tonight at the Opera House; also Saturday afternoon and night.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius.

The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theatre at every performance.

Oklahoma City - Times Apr. 28
OVERHOLSER.

"The Birth of a Nation," with its picturesque and realistic battle scenes, its tragedies and joys, its romance and drama thrilled an audience last night at the Overholser theater, where it commenced a return engagement that will continue through Sunday night. It was received with the burning appreciation that attended its first production here.

This picture play is Griffith's masterpiece and, without doubt, is the greatest film presentation America has witnessed. There is body to it. There is history in it. There are marvelous pictures, wonderful portrayals of human characters, mighty scenes, and a romantic story that tingles the blood.

The symphonic music is no little feature accompanying this splendid production. It is an aide that lends color and vividness to the scenes.

Considering the vast amount of detail, armies of players, careful choice of locations, accuracy of costuming and the worth of the story as a whole, the price asked for admission to see "The Birth of a Nation" is not a bit excessive.

The picture is worth the money.

OKLAHOMA CITY, FRIDAY, APRIL 28
THE DAILY OKLAHOMAN

BIRTH OF NATION THRILLS AUDIENCE

Greatest of Film Pictures Covers Gamut of Human Passions.

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's motion picture masterpiece, returned to the Overholser for a four-night engagement Thursday evening. The picture has not been brought back overheralded; it is justly lauded and entitled to the title of "the greatest photoplay ever wound around a projection spool."

When a great artist creates a great picture, the world lauds the creator; when a great author evolves a great literary work the same encomium is tendered him. When one is confronted with a great achievement of human genius, approval wells up in some form or other and is given vent in either quiet approbation or lusty cheers.

It is with both these emotions that an Oklahoma City audience greeted "The Birth of a Nation" Thursday night. The theater was not crowded, but enthusiasm ran high; the applause frequently overwhelmed the music of the symphony orchestra.

Greatest of Films.

Achievements are keeping apace with the evolution of things, but none ever dreamed until a few brief months ago that the eye of the cinematograph would some day depict with unerring truthfulness the molding of a people through fifteen years of riotous conflict, such as this greatest of all films has accomplished.

Beautiful in its portrayal of the glories of nature, appalling in its depiction of war; appealing in its presentation of the heart emotions of a people divided against itself, and little short of marvelous in its mastery of technique "The Birth of a Nation" does not fail short one iota with the most expectant audiences. The film possesses a wondrous and subtle power over its audience.

Human emotion, covering the entire gamut from the great, powerful and psychological political mind of a floundering nation to the merest trifling whim of a petulant girl is registered in this visualized evolution. The power of the silent drama was never before illustrated in so forcible manner as when the audience at the Overholser cheered the valor of the Ku Klux Klan almost continuously for seven minutes.

Stirring Epoch Re-enacted.

One forgot he was sitting in a theater as thousands of men, women and children, horses and guns re-enacted one of the most stirring epochs in American history. Heavy cannon boomed, brave warriors fought their brothers on a gory battlefield, speedy vengeance was wreaked on the deluded and ignorant factor of the populace, hearts were wrung and others were gladdened—in fact, every emotion of which humanity is capable was flashed on the screen in living characters for three short hours.

To attempt a description of the plot of "The Birth of a Nation," to repeat its thousands of scenes and to enumerate its characters would be to attempt an almost hopeless task. It tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife.

All the technique of the modern photodrama is found at its maturity in the picture. It is a monument to the genius of D. W. Griffith. He has taken limited material and molded this a material, concrete story, a story the magnitude of which alone makes possible top prices that heretofore have been aligned only with the spoken drama.

Truly Spectacular.

"The Birth of a Nation" is truly spectacular. It is blood-stirring. It is historically correct. It is life as it was in the days gone past. Every mechanism of the stage is brought into play to give the proper effects, not possible with the film alone. The roar of cannon, the rattle of artillery and the noise of battle are reproduced behind the screen.

The first half of the play reveals the nation prior to and during the war. The second half shows the period of rebuilding. A romantic love thread is woven throughout by Henry F. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Mae Marsh and others.

Of importance is the music. It consists of an elaborate symphony score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs of the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war; again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites, sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes like a flowing, beautiful garment.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Overholser Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

FRIDAY, APRIL 28, 1916.
NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA

LARGE CROWDS SEE BIRTH OF A NATION HERE

Famous Film Drama Draws Well on Return Engagement at Academy. Here today and Tomorrow.

Large crowds last night witnessed the return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music. The picture is the greatest spectacle ever filmed and those who have not seen it and miss this opportunity to do so are missing a spectacle that should be seen by every man, woman and child in America, for it shows how the North and South were united and a new nation born through a baptism of fire and a reign of terror.

There will be afternoon and night performances today and tomorrow.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theater, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the south's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel" Ben Cameron, with the northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in conection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in traveling company of 50 people.

THE CHAT, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1916

TELLER'S SHUBERT THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Commencing next Monday matinee, D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" will make its last appearance in Brooklyn, at Teller's Shubert Theatre. The production is the same in every way as the one that played to crowded houses on a former visit—including the symphony orchestra of thirty. Of particular interest to patrons this time are the prices and the fact that there will be performances twice daily and Sunday. The afternoon prices will be 25 cents and 50 cents—no higher. For each evening performance, including Sunday, there are 1,000 reserved orchestra and balcony seats at 50 cents each. All seats are now on sale and, judging from the popularity of this pictorial masterpiece's former engagement, the early buying of seats is advisable.

The success of this film epic is more than national in scope for in Canada and England, as well as in this country, its patronage has reached the most amazing figures. No theatrical production of any country or century has given as many performances in twelve months as "The Birth of a Nation" has, or has been seen by as many people. Without question it is the most widely discussed play of modern times. Everywhere crowded houses feature its engagements. In the theatrical world it has made history and demonstrated the fact that it is more popular than the greatest English-speaking star or the most successful productions of the spoken drama. The piece is now being presented in Sidney, Australia and Buenos Ayres, Argentine. Of special interest is the fact that the London production at the celebrated Drury Lane Theatre is playing to crowded houses.

War as it really is—as it has never before been shown on any stage, is pictured in "The Birth of a Nation." The drama is crowded with reproductions of historical scenes—there are intimate views of Lincoln, Lee, Grant and other celebrated figures; Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta and the assassination of Lincoln are but incidentals of its thrilling, convincing and realistic dramatic story.

4/27-16

FRANKLIN REPOSITORY, CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

BIRTH OF THE NATION HERE ON MAY 5TH AND 6TH

Following its London success at Drury Lane Theatre, D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" has been sent on tour in the provinces of the United Kingdom. One company is nearing the end of a six weeks' run in Manchester, and on Easter Monday additional engagements of newly organized companies were installed in Liverpool and Edinburgh, and as soon as these are out of the way two other organizations will open in Birmingham and Glasgow.

On Easter Satuday in the Theatre Royal, Sydney, New South Wales, the Griffith masterpiece was presented for the first time in Australia and the following Monday another

Mae Mar of a Natio day and Sa company opened at os Aires, the invas field.

This is the first time that an American production has been running simultaneously on four continents within one year of the date of its original presentation in New York City.

So many unfounded reports of D. W. Griffith's present occupation have been spread broadcast throughout the country since his brilliant success with "The Birth of a Nation", that an official statement from the Griffith offices is in order. Mr. Griffith for the past fifteen months, with the exception of a short time devoted to launching "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, has devoted his sole time and attention to his forthcoming creation, which is intended as a further step forward in the building up of that form of art which Griffith has made his professional trade-mark. Mr. Griffith has not made another production since "The Birth of a Nation." Any claim that he has done so, or any use of his name in connection with a new production, is wholly unwarranted and without his permission.

Mr. Griffith has never announced his plans for the immediate future and any comment on his next endeavors is futile speculation. Within the next month his plans will be fully completed and official announcement will be made regarding the next great work under his direction.

This great picture, with orchestra of 30 and full company will be seen in Orpheum Theatre on May 5th and 6th.

Okla. 4/28

ENID MORNING NEW

BIRTH OF A NATION

Quite the most wonderful of many wonderful scenes picture "The Birth of a Nation" is showing Sherman's march to the and the burning of the city of lanta. Imagine if you can, a of a long, fertile valley extending miles, apparently between the Moving through this valley, in s ling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in arm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal —the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of terrified people as they flee to hills for their lives. Few make attempt to save household effects, great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, dear and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the south. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox Court House with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

THE WORLD: SUNDAY, BROOKLYN NEWS. APRIL 30, 1916

TELLER'S SHUBERT—The Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," to-morrow afternoon at Teller's Shubert Theatre, will commence its final Brooklyn engagement, which will include two performances next Sunday. This famous film, now about one year old, has demonstrated by the enormous patronage it has played to that it is more popular than any star or production now before the public. It has played longer engagements and appealed to more persons than the most successful star or play of any period. It has been seen in all sections of this country and Canada, and now is being presented in London, Sydney and Buenos Ayres, where its attendance indicates runs that will rival those in this country.

Bellefontaine Times 4/28-16

FINE PICTURE BRINGS LARGE COMPANY ALONG

Full Orchestra and Other People who were in Big Cities will Come with "Birth of a Nation."

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a two days' engagement next Monday evening at Walter's Theatre. The first class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 25 people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the War between the States as well as those of Reconstruction.

Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the south—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered states.

The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.—advertisement

April 30, 1916

BROOKLYN REFORM

TELLER'S SHUBERT THEATRE.

Commencing next Monday matinee, D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" will make its last appearance in Brooklyn, at Teller's Shubert Theatre. The production is the same in every way as the one that played to crowded houses on a former visit—including the symphony orchestra of 30. Of particular interest to patrons this time are the prices and the fact that there will be performances twice daily and Sunday. The afternoon prices will be 25 cents and 50 cents—no higher. For each evening performance—including Sunday—there are 1000 reserved orchestra and balcony seats at 50 cents each.

The success of this film epic is more than national in scope for in Canada and England, as well as in this country, its patronage has reached the most amazing figures. Without question it is the most widely discussed play of modern times. Everywhere crowded houses feature its engagements. In the theatrical world it has made history and demonstrated the fact that it is more popular than the greatest English-speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama. The piece is now being presented in Sidney, Australia and Buenos Ayres, Argentine. Of special interest is the fact that the London production at the celebrated Drury Lane Theatre is playing to crowded houses.

War as it really is—as it has never before been shown on any stage, is pictured in "The Birth of a Nation." The drama is crowded with reproductions of historical scenes—there are intimate views of Lincoln, Lee, Grant, and other celebrated figures; Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta and the assassination of Lincoln are but incidentals of its thrilling, convincing and realistic dramatic story.

INDIANA FRIDAY APRIL 28, 1916

MICHIGAN CITY,

'THE BIRTH OF A NATION'

SPECTACULAR PICTURE PLAY IS PRESENTED AT THE ORPHEUM.

Scores of Historical Scenes of Civil War Period, With Thousands of People in the Cast.

"The Birth of a Nation," evolved by D. W. Griffith from the historical novel, "The Clansman," written by Rev. Thomas Dixon, a southerner, is an absorbing dramatic spectacle, as presented at the Orpheum last night, and that it is a stupendous and sensational undertaking, with its thousands of actors, is a distinction upon which all can agree.

Mr. Griffith has compressed, as it were, the events of four years' duration into an entertainment of upward of three hours, and during the entire progress of the presentation of the pictures there are continuous thrills of excitement, made so because of the historical importance of the events shown. The battle of Atlanta fought at night, the field of carnage illuminated by the bursting of the shells and the glare of the flames emanating from the mouth of the cannon furnishes a spectacle that could hardly be expected except in real life, and with the crashing of the great orchestra a spectator may imagine he hears the roar of the cannon, the shouts of the men, the clatter of horses' hoofs, the rattle of musketry, and the bugle calls of the army charge in scenes so realistic that it seems like living in the stirring times from 1861 to 1865 and the period of reconstruction immediately after the war.

As if by the waving of the magician's wand the great scenes are, one by one, unrolled. Griffith and his associates were eight months in creating the production. They traveled over the sections in which the story is located and reproduced the scenes with rigid fidelity. Thousands of works of historical and official value were carefully read to get all the full and exact ticulars. It is not to be wondered, he light of all these facts, that the making of the production, as claimed, involved an expenditure approaching half a million dollars.

It is estimated there are probably 18,000 men and women shown in the picture from beginning to end and several thousand head of horses. There is hardly a quiet moment during the time the picture is being shown. The realism which is given by Mr. Griffith makes it one continual round of thrills and excitement. Oftentimes audiences break into uproars of patriotic cheering.

As to the impression that the picture makes on the spectator, aside from its merit as a work of dramatic art—that depends on how much or how little one knows, or how much he cares to remember, of the history of his country, particularly of the period covered by the play. The picture is likely to make one forget that his northland had a cause. The keynote of the play is the scene where groups read a headline that "if the north wins the election the south will fight," and they gleefully spring to arms, only to find that war is what Sherman said it was. Not all the tears were shed in the south. Not all the hate was in the north. Not all the heroism, honor, dignity, respectability and bravery were below the Mason and Dixon line, and not all the cut-throat bushwackers wore the blue. But the inferences from the picture are clear enough. Even a vein of deceit runs through the plot to show how much better the south loved Lincoln dead than Lincoln living.

But whatever one may think of its treatment of events, the picture is a great show, and that is sufficient.

4/29-16
RECORD-HERALD. HANOVER, PA.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

Mae Marsh, who plays a leading role in "The Birth of a Nation"

Out-Tops "Ben Hur" or "Blue Bird"

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation" has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this opic of American history, with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theatres of the country.

D. W. GRIFFITH
The man who created "The Birth of a Nation."

This stupendous production finishes this week a most successful engagement of several weeks at Ford's Theatre, Baltimore, where it has been seen by many people of Cambridge, all of whom have expressed themselves as delighted with it. Aside from those features which make it the leading stage production of its kind in the world, the subject matter, alone, makes it worth the while of everyone to see it.

Tickets for the Monday night performance, Tuesday matinee and Tuesday night will be on sale at the Postoffice-Pharmacy Monday, May 1, at 10 a. m.—Adv.

Daily Times
Cambridge, Md.
Apr. 29

The City News
April 29/16

SHOW IN TOWN

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Five professors of American history in as many Western universities were employed steadily for several months by D. W. Griffith in gathering data, odd and accurate, for "The Birth of a Nation," which appears here tonight for the first of a four-day engagement. "The Birth of a Nation," is so accurate historically that it has been universally endorsed by the universities.

Chickasha News
Apr 29

SHOW IN TOWN

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Five states and one foreign country contributed to the scenery of "The Birth of a Nation," which is at the Overholser this week. The greater part of the film spectacle was made in California. But, in order to make this photodrama exactly accurate, D. W. Griffith took a number of his players overland from California to the Carolinas and Virginia. This was particularly the case for some of the woodland effects and for the scenes in the cotton field. One big scene was taken in Mexico. Another extended thru the California border into Nevada.

THE STAR AND SENTINEL, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1916.

A LAST WORD

Much of the argument pro and con on the subject of "The Birth of a Nation" centers on the character of Thaddeus Stevens who is represented in the picture as "Stoneman". Utterly ridiculous stories are told with the greatest positiveness by partisans of the picture who a month ago had the most value knowledge of Thaddeus Stevens or of the great work he accomplished in the state of his adoption. "They heard these things said" say the modern traducers and slanderers of a great man, but every effort to trace a particular story to an authentic source meets with the same result. Contemporaneous expression should be accepted by every reasonable person, as carrying moreweight than the gossip that comes after a half century. Fortunately that is available. Below is printed a proclamation issued by Gov. Geary, of Pennsylvania, on the subject of the death of Mr. Stevens and an account of a public meeting that was held in Gettysburg on that occasion with resolutions that were adopted, together with a list of names of prominent citizens of town and county who attended the funeral of Mr. Stevens in Lancaster.

Cedar Street
Chambersburg 4/29.

4/29

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation" looms up as a coming attraction at the Orpheum where it will be seen May 5 and 6. It is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the two hours and forty-five minutes performance. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the States and the Reconstruction of the Southland.

Some faint idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horsese took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor drama" cost half a million dollars. This city will be favored with the original production from one of the large cities—New York, Boston and Chicago—where it was first simultaneously shown.

RETAIL MARKETS

Butter, country, lb	26@28
Eggs	.2[illegible]
Chickens	18@2[illegible]
Potatoes, per bushel	$1.3[illegible]
Pigeons	20@25 per pair

OVERHOLSER.

Makes Appeal to Women.

When a producer of theatrical entertainment finds that his work makes a strong appeal to women he instantly draws a long, free breath, for he knows he has a financial success. Strange as it may seem to those who have only heard about "The Birth of a Nation" which closes its second engagement at the Overholser theater tomorrow night, without seeing it, David W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle of the civil war and reconstruction days makes just the appeal that spells millions. The superficial delver into the psychology of women reasons that scenes of war and such conflicts as the Ku Klux Klan engage in do not interest the feminine mind. This psychologist, of course, spent his college days in his garret poring over books, and never went near a football field. But the natural appeal of virility is not all there is to "The Birth of a Nation" to entice women away from their fancy work. Griffith has woven into his story of war and a conflict still sterner than war, a gripping romance of the sort that animated the fine old stories of chivalry before the wicked Spaniard, Cervantes, laughed the valiant knights and true into their grave. There never lived a woman who could resist the stirring stories of the knights of King Arthur's court and their fair ladies, and there does not exist today a woman who can resist the thrill of "The Birth of a Nation." This accounts for a very noticeable fact that the matinees at the Overholser are as well attended as the night performances, and that fully 70 percent of the patrons of these matinees are women. Even at night, women predominate in the audiences, the percentage being about 60 to 40.

THE WORLD, MARTINSBURG, W.

April 28. W. Va.

Lillian Gish, one of the heroines in D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation."

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Central shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this pulay.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never

THE REV. WRIGHT GIVEN RECEPTION

By the Members of the First M. E.

TEACHERS NORMAL CLASS ORGANIZES

Sunday School Workers of First Bap

4/29-16

LEY SPIRIT, CHAMBERSBURG, PA., SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL

Lillian Gish and the Sentinental Sentry—A Comedy Scene in "The Birth of a Nation," Which Comes to The Orpheum, Friday and Saturday, May 5 6. Matinee Saturday.

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Orpheum theatre proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlano is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

ATRIOT ,HARRISBURG, PENNA., SATURDAY, APRIL

HENRY G. WALTHALL AS "THE LITTLE COLONEL" IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

4/29-16

HENRY G. WALTHALL

Henry G. Walthall, who plays "The Little Colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Orpheum for three days, beginning Monday, May 8th, with daily matinees.

Public Op.
Gettysburg Pa
4/29/16

SURRENDER OF LEE IS VIVIDLY PORTRAYED

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Orpheum next Friday and Saturday with one matinee, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time, while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing a fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

LILLIAN GISH

Appears in a leading role in "The Birth of a Nation."

THE OKLAHOMA NEWS

SHOW IN TOWN

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Five states and one foreign country contributed to the scenery of "The Birth of a Nation," which is at the Overholser this week. The greater part of the film spectacle was made in California. But, in order to make this photodrama exactly accurate, D. W. Griffith took a number of his players overland from California to the Carolinas and Virginia. This was particularly the case for some of the woodland effects and for the scenes in the cotton field. One big scene was taken in Mexico. Another extended thru the California border into Nevada.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1916.

256

THE GETTYSBURG TIMES

WHAT IT MEANT TO MAKE PICTURE

Greatest Care in Arranging for Production of "Birth of a Nation." No Expense Spared to Make it an Unqualified Success.

D. W. Griffith is the most talked about, and probably the most sought after, man in America. He learned how to plan things, in the making of the 5,000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" or he would be lost. He gallops through the myriad-and-one business details of a theatrical success without turning a hair or developing the slightest case of "nerve". When the turmoil and the tumult dies, and the hours wax small, his refreshment is the dance or a friendly chat with a round table of chums.

It was said on the first night in New York that only the son of a soldier could have conceived and executed "The Birth of a Nation". As a Kentucky lad, the son of Brigadier-General J. W. Griffith, he drank in the Civil War narratives greedily. As he grew up came the poet's vision of the entire struggle and of Reconstruction days. In the prime of manhood awoke the genius to make it a reality.

While planning the Battle of Petersburg, Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig up the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a modern telephone switchboard. From it field-wires ran to his various sub-generals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anachronism of field-telephones in Civil War time.

Thus completely equipped as a modern Joffre or Von Hindenburg Griffith saw everything and telephoned all his instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1864 pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old-fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are far from spick and span. Many of them are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags, even have the look of battle scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Plainly war, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers. It is hard, gruelsome, continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies are employed. There's everything from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the handgrip of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the Battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "indoor" productions.—advertisement

HE BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE
W YORK, SUNDAY, APRIL 30, 191

SENTIMENTAL SE
IN "BIRTH OF A NATION
SHUBERT

"Birth of a Nation" at Shubert.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," makes its last trip to Brooklyn this week, when it will be seen at the Shubert. The comment which this daring effort in the film line started when it was first shown has drawn to it so much attention that it is scarcely necessary to describe it. "The Birth of a Nation" portrays the troubles that the United States encountered during the Civil War. Vividly and accurately the great rift in the nation and its attendant woes are shown. The massive nature of this motion picture lifts it high above the great majority now being offered. The scenes are singularly stirring and majestic. The entire production bears an importance that is both romantic and historical.

T LLER'S SHUBERT.—To-morrow afternoon at Teller's Shubert Theatre "The Birth of a Nation" will commence its last appearance in this city. There will be performances twice daily, including next Sunday. During its twelve months of existence this already famous film has achieved a record attendance that establishes it as more popular than any star or production of the spoken drama. In every city, large and small, where it has appeared, its length of stay and patronage has exceeded that of any stage presentation. And now in London, England; Sidney, Australia; and Buenos Ayres, Argentina; it is repeating its American success. "Our greatest motion picture production," the newspapers called it a year ago, and, it is to-day, with the added prestige of being the most successful theatrical offering of the past year, or any preceding year as a matter of fact. With this picture D. W. Griffith revolutionized motion picture production, and by his art surpassed all former achievement. That he produced a masterpiece is evidenced by the record of the picture both in this country and abroad.

Kansas Farmer April 30 1916 Billy

SUNDAY, APRIL 30, 19
E WASHINGTON TIMES.

National: "Birth of a Nation." Spectacle Film.

SO great is the success of the D. W. Griffith historical drama, "The Birth of a Nation," now to be seen twice daily at the National Theater, that it is not always possible to accommodate the crowds. A line of intending purchasers of seats is at the box office throughout the day, and the [illegible] disappears until the ticket office is closed for the evening.

For the proper enactment of the views of battle of the civil war shown upon the screen, thousands of men and horses were utilized. Great numbers of men, women, and children were used to give verity to pictures showing the departure of troops for the front, jubilation over victory, or scenes of violence.

At close range is seen the great liberator, Abraham Lincoln, and his assassination in the crowded Ford's Theater is one of the most deeply impressive reproductions of an historic happening that has ever yet been visualized on the screen.

Of great value is the accompanying music arranged by Joseph Carl Breil. In this score are melodies of war times, martial tunes, national airs, tripping dance t[illegible] and bits of grand opera that fairly [illegible]ate and interpret the scenes unfolded to the eye.

TULSA DAILY WORLD, SUNDAY,

Personal Side of D. W. Griffith Is as Human a His Professional Achievements Are

There is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices and has got the so-called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in La Grange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry [illegible] at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the civil war, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

Today he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life, and he gets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for his career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep"

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself and is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side, one wonders if he is ever going to let up. On observing closely one feels that he is easing the strain, just as in the big crashes of his "Birth of a Nation" the tense situation is relieved by flash of field flowers or golden grain or kittens at play.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their power and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense east with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the east in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing for Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this, beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time, "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was unaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellow depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He put his art on a par with the best the highest priced theaters afforded. He rented a theater and assumed all the risk. He worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches on to a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen—725 consecutive performances. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is the only $2 attraction which stretched through the summer from last season without a break. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons in New York. It is touring the country in the first class theaters, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than four million persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost $500,000 to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like of which was never dreamed of in the theatrical world before.

D. W. GRIFFITH

Genius of the screen whose masterly work in "The Birth of a Nation," has placed him so high above his fellows, is gentle, unassuming, neighborly and altogether a "regular guy."

RALPH LEWIS
AS THE "RADICAL LEADER"

Post Sunday April 30 1916

THE WASHINGTON TIMES, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1916.

TAKES ROLE OF LINCOLN

JOSEPH HENABERY.

TRIED FORTY ACTORS TO GET ONE LINCOLN

Forty players were tried and found wanting before one was finally chosen to represent Abraham Lincoln in the Griffith film, "The Birth of a Nation."

The spell of Lincoln is cast over the whole of this film drama, and naturally it was quite necessary that the role be filled not only by an actor of experience and intelligence, but by one who was able to represent him materially.

Joseph Henabery was finally chosen, and after a great many more had presented themselves for the role.

Notwithstanding the difficulties of technique encountered in making the film, Griffith himself says no obstacle was harder to overcome than this stage representation of Lincoln. A man had to be chosen who fitted into the narrative, and who at the same time met the dramatic and photographic requirements, which this character demands in the proper rendering of the story.

The first steps taken by the producer were to obtain Lincoln photographs and descriptions of all sorts, and to send out a call for an actor to play the part. From the first it was almost impossible to obtain a photograph which was seemingly authentic.

Personal descriptions differed remarkably, and the mass of matter collected regarding the martyred President, while voluminous, was varied.

It was almost impossible to obtain pictures which showed the softer and finer moods of the man.

The professors engaged in the search for data at last managed to obtain fifty photographs which they accepted as authentic. But they could not decide between the fifty.

Each one was passed upon by some personal friend of the war President, who recalled him as he looked in the days just before and during the civil war. Every photograph differed from the others, but these same personal friends stated emphatically that they were all "good likenesses."

At last Joseph Henabery was given a try-out by Mr. Griffith. He studied all of the material at hand, comparing the dominant characteristics as revealed by each picture and personal narrative. Every habit of dress and facial expression, every trick and trait which he discovered, he made a part of himself.

To make the likeness perfect, he had a composite photograph made which embodied all of the dominating facial characteristics, without a flaw.

He worked upon his make-up for the part for many weeks, giving endless performances in which he appeared alone, before a mirror, with himself critic and audience in one.

Other portrayers of famous characters well known in history had just as difficult a task as did Henabery.

They profited largely, however, by his experience. The method of attacking work on each character was about the same, and the best results were established, not by selection of any one picture of a character in history, but by a composite portrayal.

Washington Post April 30 1916

April 30

Muskogee Daily Phoenix

The Assassination of President Lincoln

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

The impressive photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its third week at the National tomorrow. This is the first time that any high-priced attraction has remained in this city for more than two weeks. The Griffith spectacle is an epic that was posed with intense realism by talented players chosen to impersonate famous characters of the soul-stiring times when a nation was moving onward to a glorious destiny. For all of its "two dimensions" this widely heralded motion picture drama has the power to hold its audiences. The rapid succession of stirring scenes, the piling of spectacle upon spectacle never fail to grip the most blase spectator and hold his fixed attention to the end. There is no withstanding the apeal of the great scenes. At every performance the kaleidoscopic picturization brings frequent and hearty applause and often cheers. One marvels at the ingenuity of the photography and at the skill of the producer, but there is also admiration for the dramatic quality of the enactment and beauty of the panoramic settings.

Each incident is made the more impressive by the musical accompaniment played by a large orchestra. Apart from the wonderful representation of the assassination of President Lincoln, one of the most impressive scenes in the historic drama, there is a succession of events of compelling interest. Begining with an exposition of early slavery days, the picture takes the onlooker into the trying period of the civil war. Each dread happening, however, is placed in contrast to delightful romantic scenes and the horrors of war

HARRISBURG TELEGRAPH APRIL 29, 1916.

SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" RETURNING TO ORPHEUM

"THE GATHERING OF THE KLANS"
A big moment in "The Birth of a Natio n," which returns to the Orpheum for an engagement to last three days beginn ing Monday, May 8, with daily matinees.

e Birth of a Nation," returning to the Hinton for Three Days, beginning, Monday, May 8

W. Griffith, producer of "The of a Nation," which returns to Hinton theater for a three days' ment beginning Monday, May 8, thorized the announcement over nature that the spectacle will be e-hibited in any other than -class theater, at first-class When it has outlived its use- in such pl ayhouses, it will not ut to the cl eaper houses, after nner of mar y other theatrical ons, but will be withdrawn en- Consequently, all who wish to spectacle must see it in the heaters. Mr. Griffith is in the business permanently of producing great spectacles, and it is his intention to keep his name associated with the present high standard of excellence. He is a young man of thirty-five and has a long career before him. He is now at work on another huge production, entitled "The Mother and the Law," and has started the preliminary research work for a mighty spectacle on the theme of "The Holy Grail." These and the ones to follow, like "The Birth of a Nation," will be shown in the first-class theaters at first-class prices. Mr. Griffith will never consent to cheapen his productions to the point of making them profitable in second or third rate theaters. For example, his big symphony orchestra at the Opera house could not be taken into a cheaper house, and his expert electricians and mechanicians could not be paid their present salaries with the price of admission lowered. "The Birth of a Nation" in its present state of excellence could not be transferred to a cheaper theater any more than could "Ben-Hur," and Mr. Griffith is determined that not one jot of excellence shall ever be sacrificed. He intends to make his name on the screen as sure a guarantee of excellence as Charles Frohman's was as sponser for a star in drama.

"Birth of Nation" Arouses Audience to Real Enthusiasm

Griffith Film Produces Unusual Effect on Washington's Customary Apathy.

By FLORENCE E. YODER.

Any one who has ever entertained the idea that Washington audiences are phlegmatic and undemonstrative will do well to go to see the "Birth of a Nation" at the National this week and instantly rid himself of the idea.

It is true that the average dramatic performance in the form of a play rarely arouses actual demonstrations with the voice, but since some may recall instances when cheers were given at some production it will do well to consider such for a moment.

When Maude Adams first appeared in this city as Peter Pan in the play of that name, enthusiasm in the audience reached a height which may have been equaled since then but which has never been excelled until this week.

The last plea of Peter when he stretched forth his hands and asked, "Do you believe in fairies?" invariably brought replies from the audience, which stood as one person while hats and handkerchiefs were waved in the air.

But the demonstrations attending the showing of the Griffith film, "The Birth of a Nation," are not to be compared with even that magnum.

At certain points in the Griffith film the audience shouts. The people applaud and cheer and stamp their feet and otherwise everlastingly debar themselves from being known as the most phlegmatic audiences on record.

Sympathies Aroused.

Of course the fact that Washington is a southern city, must be taken into consideration. The film has a distinct appeal to anyone who has either experienced personally, or even known of, the tragedy of the South following the civil war.

But it is utterly without feeling or prejudice that the history of the Cameron and Stoneman families is followed. The tragedy which brings forth the most intense fervor in the audience, the moments at which the piece reaches its most dramatic heights, are indicative neither of the success of the North or of the South, but of the personal triumph of right over wrong.

So it is not a sectional feeling which makes the audience go wild, not any unusual enthusiasm due to the fact that this is a Southern city, but a natural excitement occasioned by the construction of the plot of the film itself.

Tension Soon Felt.

At first there is little more than the ordinary handclapping as the film is unwound. People settle themselves comfortably in their chairs, and plan to accept the history quietly. The fortunes of a Northern and a Southern family whom fate has brought together supply the basis of the plot.

As the story unfolds the tension begins to be felt. People become a little stiffer, and sit more rigidly so that the tell tale tears which will sneak out of their eyes may not be seen by the person sitting next them.

Thesadnes and beauty in the reproduction of a South which will never live again gripe like iron bands.

The desperation of a South confronted with a problem with which they cannot cope without financial ruin in any event, transfers itself to the spectators. The music of a generation ago, perhaps handed down by mothers and fathers, or remembered personally, helps to bring back the past.

Unlike the "Battle Cry of Peace," this film does not instantly produce storms of applause. Its workings are more logical; built on the firmer grounds of actual history and suffering.

Swings Into War Scenes.

But as the story swings into the war scenes, as the terrible period of reconstruction is brought nearer and nearer, an uneasiness begins to manifest itself.

The whole audience gradually begins to lose control. Northerner, Southerner, even the indifferent, are hopelessly one in their sympathy for the suffering Cameron family—one of the hundreds which was bruised and torn by merely being in the path of destruction, cleared at so great a cost.

By the time that the film reveals the formation of the Ku Klux Klan, and the major points of historical interest are completed, a sobbing, breathless audience sits with nerves drawn taut to await the outcome of the fortunes of the Cameron and Stoneman families.

It is then that pandemonium breaks loose.

Polite, conservative, phlegmatic Washington playgoers yell.

They have everlastingly lost their reputation for being cold-blooded. But it took "The Birth of a Nation" to do it.

HENRY WALTHALL.
The leading man in the film "The Birth

LILLIAN GISH
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

April 30

Muskogee Daily Phoen

The Assassination of President Lincoln

"The Birth of a Nation," returning to the Hinton for Three Days, beginning, Monday, May

D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Hinton theater for a three days' engagement beginning Monday, May 8, has authorized the announcement over his signature that the spectacle will never be exhibited in any other than a first-class theater, at first-class prices. When it has outlived its usefulness, in such playhouses, it will not be let out to the cheaper houses, after the manner of many other theatrical attractions, but will be withdrawn entirely. Consequently, all who wish to see the spectacle must see it in the larger theaters. Mr. Griffith is in the business permanently of producing great spectacles, and it is his intention to keep his name associated with the present high standard of excellence. He is a young man of thirty-five and has a long career before him. He is now at work on another huge production, entitled "The Mother and the Law," and has started the preliminary research work for a mighty spectacle on the theme of "The Holy Grail." These and the ones to follow, like "The Birth of a Nation," will be shown in the first-class theaters at first-class prices. Mr. Griffith will never consent to cheapen his productions to the point of making them profitable in second or third rate theaters. For example, his big symphony orchestra at the Opera house could not be taken into a cheaper house and his expert electricians and mechanicians could not be paid their present salaries with the price of admission lowered. "The Birth of a Nation" in its present state of excellence could not be transferred to a cheaper theater any more than could "Ben-Hur," and Mr. Griffith is determined that not one jot of excellence shall ever be sacrificed. He intends to make his name on the screen as sure a guarantee of excellence as Charles Frohman's was as sponser for a star in drama.

APRIL 30, 1916—PART

SUNDAY STAR, WAS

historical claim. It is a colossal drama. True, it touches the high peaks of American history, makes history live—in a flash presenting, as it does, Lincoln among his counsiors, the call for troops, the battles of the conflict, Sherman's march, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the south in the throes of change, the carpetbaggers' excesses, the miseries of reconstruction, the famous rides of the K. K. K., the reconciliation of the north and the south.

But all these scenes have been presented dramatically, employing 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses and 1,000 scenes, at the cost of half a million dollars. To get the effects cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire, battles of the civil war were re-enacted, Ford's Theater in this city was reproduced and the great tragedy of the war re-enacted, a series of wild "Ku Klux" rides overran a whole county for a day at the cost of $10,000. Night photography for battle scenes was invented and perfected at the cost of $5,000, artillery duels were staged, in which real shells costing $80 apiece were used, miles of trenches were dug, and thousands of fighters employed. Twelve thousand feet of film and 140,000 feet of actual photography all enter into the dramatic elements and restruction of this wonderful picture spectacle.

It is drama built upon a scale which has never been realized heretofore upon the stage. The dramatic construction, the mere dovetailing of these accessories is an undertaking which staggers the imagination—the simple carpentry of it.

National

Following two weeks of [illegible] at the New National "The Birth of a Nation," produced by David W. Griffith at a cost of $500,000, will continue to be shown at that playhouse, which, fortunately, has the capacity to accommodate the large crowds. Important in the showing of this art creation of history and romance is the incidental music appropriate to each incident.

This is the first time in the history of the theaters of Washington that a high-priced attraction has played for more than two weeks.

It is an impressive story, wonderfully told, that is revealed on the screen.

The romance is based on the incidents taken from Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman." Henry B. Walthall, recognized as one of the foremost players appearing before the camera, heads the picture cast, which includes Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, George Seigmann, Mary Alden, Bessie Walsh, Spottiswoods Aitken and Josephine Crowell.

PUBLIC OPINION, CHAMBERSBURG, PA., TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 2, 1916.

760

AT THE THEATERS

Sherman's march to the sea, a stirring scene in "The Birth of a Nation", which comes to the Orpheum Theater, Friday and Saturday, May 5 and 6, with a special matinee on Saturday.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Art is long, says the poet, and outlasts throne or emperor. Occasionally, however, old art ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the sceptre and remakes the world. This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Orpheum on Friday and Saturday of this week.

Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: a new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

The director put on "The Birth of a Nation" as no other filmed play—not even "Cabaria" or "Quo Vadis?"—had been put on. He used half a State for his locale; 150 years of American history as his subject; 18,000 people as his actors; 3,000 riders and steeds as his cavalry; 5,000 scenes instead of a few scores or a few hundred. His work dwarfed the old-fashioned stage art to such pettiness that many are wondering whether the so-called "indoor" drama is not doomed to long and possibly total eclipse.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill.

May 1/16

Public Op. Chambersburg Pa

SHOWS KU KLUX KLAN

The Ku Klux Klan which forms such an interesting part of D. W. Griffith's great production "The Birth of a Nation" was organized as a secret and social band in the State of Tennessee in May, 1866. The title was taken from the Greek word kuklos, meaning circle. The third word Klan was added by the members who were in a large percentage descended from the Scotch who settled in old Virginia. In subsequent years when the Klans went forth to put down the desperados, who swarmed down from the north to grab everything in sight in the south the riders adopted the emblem of the fiery cross which the Scotch Highlanders had long used as a call to battle in the early days of wars in their native land.

K PRESS, MONDAY MORNING, MAY 1, 1916.

"The Birth of a Nation" Again.

Standard—That undying Griffith masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," attracts as it did in the days when it woke the country to the possibilities of pictures. There appears to be no abatement of interest in its pageantry. Every gallop of the Ku-Klux Klan before the lens earns its deserved round of applause.

For the reason that circuses and Wild West shows draw the oldsters as well as the youngsters, "The Bugle Call" will be popular. It is nothing more nor less than putting in pictures the dream of every imaginative boy. In this case, it is a boy at an army post whose father almost breaks his heart by bringing a step-mother to him. It requires the whole tribe of Lame Bear, the warlike Indian, to bring the lad to a love for his new mother.

5/2-16

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT TELLER'S SHUBERT

The last opportunity to witness D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in Brooklyn is offered this week at Teller's Shubert Theatre. The phenomenal success of this wonderful motion picture, portraying as it does the incidents and troubles encountered by this country before, during and after the Civil War, indicates that the Griffith masterpiece is the most instructing and entertaining production of its kind ever put before the public. The scenes are as true to life as it is possible to make them, and through it all is woven enough romance to make every one keenly interested. There will be two performance daily, including next Sunday—one in the afternoon at 2:15, the other in the evening at 8:15. The final curtain last night was at 11:15 o'clock.

5/2-16

"BIRTH OF A NATION" RETURNS TO SHUBERT

The Griffith, whole session film, "The Birth of a Nation," had solid audiences at the Shubert Theater, yesterday afternoon and evening, when the big film began an indefinite return engagement. As description of the film would be superfluous, observation of the effect on the audience of the stirring scenes would be more appropriate for comment. In the first part, with its scenes of family friendships between people of the North and the South before the Civil War, there was the same interest noted as in the usual film play, but the atmosphere in the audience changed from ordinary attention to gloom when the scene changed to that of the shooting of Lincoln in the Ford Theater in Washington. As lights were turned on for intermission, after the murder of the President, followed by a quick view of the sorrow for Wilkes Booth's act felt in a typical family in the South, a striking change in the facial expression of all in the audience was apparent. The faces of men and women alike were gray and pallid. Tenseness drew lines in faces where there had been something like every day emotion, or lack of stirring emotion.

But it was when the dramatic scenes with the Ku Klux Klan and their disguises in white came on the screen and galloped to the rescue of the oppressed white population in the South that the audience gave long continued applause. Doubtless, the news of war and rumors of war at this time put a keen edge on the emotions of the audience and, the dramatic action brought to the surface the inherent fighting instinct. At any rate the remarkable picture was received with undiminished interest and enthusiasm.

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 1, 1916.

VALLEY SPIRIT, CHAMBERSBURG, PA

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation" looms up as a coming attraction at the Orpheum where it will be seen May 5 and 6. It is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the two hours and forty-five minutes performance. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the States and the Reconstruction of the Southland.

Some faint idea of its magnitude may be had from the facts that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horsese took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor drama" cost half a million dollars. This city will be favored with the original production from one of the large cities—New York, Boston and Chicago—where it was first simultaneously shown.

THE WASHINGTON POST: SUNDAY, APRIL 30, 1916.

The most picturesque playwright in America and the foremost director of the movie world are in active competition this week. Richard Walton Tully's "The Bird of Paradise" and David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" represent rival forms of dramatic entertainment, but each depends to a remarkable extent on its incidental music. The haunting strains of the Hawaiian music that acompany the words of the play at the Belasco have made Mr. Tully's South Sea idyl a classic of the modern stage. "The Birth of a Nation" owes more than 50 per cent of its tremendous appeal to the familiar melodies that create "atmosphere" for the flashing scenes of the big film spectacle at the National. The music-coated drama will be ably represented in Washington theaters tomorrow evening.

* * *

Like a gleam of sunshine through the gloom of a Washington spring day comes the joyous news that press agents annoy readers of dramatic departments. We had supposed that only the conductor of a theatrical column writhed under the crimes of the publicity promoter. But there are, it seems, earnest patrons of the drama who share the mental anguish of the dramatic editor. Definite proof that we do not bear our cross in cheerless solitude is furnished by the following communication from a reader of The Post's dramatic pages. The correspondent submits a clipping of a story that passed our censorship, and which referred to "companies" organized in London and New York for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in untried fields. He writes:

> Will you please explain, if possible, the mental state of the press agent or whoever penned the attached clipping from your Sunday dramatic page about "The Birth of a Nation," with its ridiculous "newly organized companies," &c.? Does he see an advertising value in treating the production as if nobody knew it was a film drama, or does he merely find a personal relish in the pretense?
>
> I do seriously hope you will answer in next Sunday's issue, because anything so perplexing must be worth explaining, and the psychology of the press agent is a matter of general interest and great moment.

It is with profound chagrin that we find in the above letter certain limitations for our reply. We wish the writer had made a more general complaint and a less specific request. The psychology of the press agent presents a fascinating topic that has been grievously neglected since Mr. James O'Donnell Bennett deserted the dramatic desk of a Chicago newspaper to become an apologist for a warring nation in Europe and Mr. Wilton Lackaye turned the rapier of his wit from the theatrical press agent to the impassive front of Mr. Percy Hammond, another authority on the drama who has clung to the Chicago field. We must, it appears, call Mr. Griffith's general press representative into the limelight on the single count of having used the word "company" in connection with the presentation of a film drama.

A certain degree of caution, born of disastrous encounters in the past, impels us to approach the press agent's trenches under cover of support from an arm of the writing service that is sometimes respected. For that reason, we have called into consultation the recorded thoughts of Mr. Webster and learn that he believed a "company" to be "an assemblage of people." This ruling is most discouraging. It puts the press agent for "The Birth of a Nation" behind a concrete fortification from which he may snipe in the interests of filmdom with perfect impunity. For, if we accept the definition just quoted, the use of the word "company" in last Sunday's story was based on a foundation of solid fact.

The spectacle born of Mr. Dixon's lurid tale of reconstruction days in the South differs materially from the usual film entertainment. It calls for an orchestra of twenty or more pieces. It requires the services of a carpenter, a property man and an electrician. It employs a business manager and a company manager. And it makes provison on the pay roll for two motion picture operators. When Mr. Griffith feels impelled to move his production from point to point he demands and receives a baggage car and sleeping car and purchases transportation for some 27 or more "people." The fact that actors are not included in the party movement does not detract, of course, from the human qualities of the travelers. Ergo, as Mr. Shakespeare would say, the joyous and prosperous jaunts of the "assemblage of people" who receive some part of the profits from each "production" of "The Birth of a Nation" may with exact truthfulness, be termed the activities of a "company."

It is our fond hope that The Post's correspondent will not construe this explanation as a defense of the press agent. Our testimony is given with considerable reluctance. Had we been called upon to discuss the personal habits or moral shortcomings of the gentlemen who write in the financial interest of the theater we might have furnished a pleasing indictment. The theatrical press agent presents a topic on which, with entire shamelessness, we pose as something of an authority.

FRANK P. MORSE.

SUNDAY, APRIL 30, 1916.

THE WASHINGTON HERALD.

TUESDAY EVENING, May 2/16 HARRISBURG

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the C

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined S to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it striking effectiveness in his mous work. Miss Marsh is red and clever far beyond the reach eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the type of blond on the motion screen in America. She has been movies now for several years, ning under Griffith's direction mere schoolgirl. She has world of parts and is known as Miss Marsh, who is millions as the Maude Adams motion pictures.

These two girls between over $1,500 a week and have with the big producing firms land, which means they earn aries for fifty-two weeks in every Miriam Cooper is the newest of the trio and has only been tures about a year now. She has forward steadily, and her work in Birth of a Nation" has enhanced earning capacity. Miss Cooper southern type. She is willowy guid and a pronounced brunette, ing a complete contrast to the shock of Mae Marsh's red hair golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

May 1/16

HARRISBURG TELEGRAPH

"The Birth of a Nation"

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Orpheum for three days and three matinees beginning Monday, May 8, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage spectacle. "Ben-Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark if such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months' of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Frietchie" seem tame after seeing the splendors of "The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Homeric grandeur. The night riding of the Ku Klux Klan looks like a company of avenging spectors sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

THE WORLD, MARTINSBURG, W. VA.

E BIRTH OF A NATION.

v. Charles H. Parkhursh, D. D.)

not impossible to witness the rama, "The Birth of a Nation" eng shown at the "Liberty e" and not want to say some- about it.

ryone who has seen it is saying hing about it. When one has rowded upon, pressed down and ver, it is against Nature not to some kind of an outcry.

t is the way one feels when g out of the Liberty theatre. hing is vast. It is overwhel-

Nothing like it has ever before put upon the stage.

tension of the performance is single feature of it—but it has which one feels most poignantly three straight hours. It begins easy way but commences soon d its muscle and goes on to the ounding upon one's senses with that come heavier and heavier and more rapid.

is not apparent what are the ds of the objection urged against t what is the animus of those are scheming to have the exhibi- rohibited by Court proceedings.

The National Board of Censorship has approved it and when assault was made convened again and reaffirmed their approval. The popular endorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to surpress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving t wder and more remunerative publcity.

The intimate familiarity which Mr. David W. Griffith has shown wth the events of the Reconstructon Period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider teritory of events which the play surprising educational value to those covers renders the production one of who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of '60 to '70. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill, than by weeks and months of study in the class room.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the Negro in an unfortunate light and that it 's calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the Negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him, and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty, so new and untried, that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. In it is this respect exactly true to histtry and if it reflects upon the Negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have seen bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heriosm of the contestants and the glory of the victors. OnGriffith's screen we seel the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of men's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indellible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of was with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artists hand—the signing by the President of the Proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the Surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the President in Ford's Theatre.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken Southern mother pleading with him for her son sentenced to death as a guerilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theatre. What might not our Country have been saved had the problem of Reconstruction been left to the Great Heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

THE EVENING STAR

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1916.

National.

Entering the third week of its run in this city, "The Birth of a Nation," David Griffith's marvelous screen pageant-drama, continues to draw large audiences at the National. Noteworthy, according to the management, is the number of persons who, having seen the picture, return a second or a third time to see it. The picture is to be the attraction at the National the entire week.

CAMBRIDGE, MARYLAND,

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 2, 1916

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine.

Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the chash of riot and rapine, or the welcome KuKlux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the Master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Generals Lee and Grant, in a Scene from "The Birth of a Nation."

E WORLD, MARTINSBURG, W. VA.

Mae Marsh—In "The Birth of a Nation," at The Central Opera House.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES.

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" BEGINS THIRD WEEK

Probabilities Are Its Run May Be Extended For Even Longer Period.

"The Birth of a Nation" began its third continuous week at the National Theater last night.

Its stay in Washington will run through next week, with a possibility of a further extension after that.

Not in the history of Washington theatricals has a high-class production, either of the "legitimate" or the motion picture type, played so long an engagement here.

Again today the long line at the box office of the National Theater attested the unprecedented popularity of the film, which seems to possess an appeal for theater-goers and non-theater-goers alike.

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1916.

HE WASHINGTON POS

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its fourth week of its run at the National next Monday afternoon. Just how long it will run thereafter has not been determined by the management, but capacity houses still rule, and the management may continue for some time to come.

If in Shakespeare's time, or even 50 years ago, anyone had said that such a spectacle as "The Birth of a Nation" might come to pass in the twentieth century, little attention would have been given to the prophecy. Even in the twentieth century it is a remarkable accomplishment. D. W. Griffith is the one man now with Alladin's Lamp. The merit of his great pen story has been recognized. It is really one of the dramatic offerings of the decade, for its vivid picture story becomes gripping drama in its settings of music and amazing 'camera action." It is brimful of the element which makes for drama. It has the "punch."

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1916.

THE WASHINGTON HERALD.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

There is no change of bill at the National this week as "The Birth of a Nation" is still the attraction at that playhouse. Not in the history of Washington theatricals has a high class attraction made such a long stay in the city. Next week will be the fourth of the engagement.

People who never go to the theater are going to see "The Birth of a Nation." This condition does not occur more than once in seven or ten years; a dramatic offering does not make a general appeal more frequently. The Birth of a Nation is appealing to the theater-goer and the person who may go to the theater only once in a life time. The reason in this special case that everybody is going to the Griffith production is because there is something in it which everybody can understand; it is elemental. But at the same time it is human, and it presents some of the most tremendous situations which have ever been offered within the limitations of the stage.

Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they know nothing of pictures. Most people had been on a motion picture drama as a [illegible] proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It is not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case [illegible] unprepared to pass judgment on this undertaking. But in all there was nothing daring or [illegible] in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage [illegible] the other fellow never took into consideration.

The significance of this [illegible] of the big picture being an outstanding success. There will be many two-dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done and reverts each solely to a question of merit. [illegible] an enc[illegible] ture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when the dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the soul of a character into the principal role of a play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What [illegible] of sculpture stand out in my memory to compare with the acting, "Something you can't put your finger on" is a single revelation. Long and afterward in memorable moments I recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can never feel that woman's scene when he [illegible] the [illegible] in fiction [illegible] suffocating [illegible]

the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the overproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

CENTRAL OPERA HOUSE

Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation"

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Central Opera House tomorrow [illegible] shows Miss Gish as the daughter of the Confederate officer who led Congress [illegible] time, playing a guitar to a wounded rebel officer in the Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long, little Confederate colonel

Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothered by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the Second Southern uprising.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aur-

PA... HARRISB...
TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1916

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Bird's Eye View of Gigantic Spectacle Coming to the Orpheum for a Return Engagement Beginning Monday.

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expenses, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox, Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln Tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

MIRIAM COOPER

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells, costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches, two thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to re-adjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every board of censors in the United States and by scores of the most eminent United States senators and representatives, governors, of states, judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a large number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines expuisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of History's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation reborn" as the result of War between the States and Reconstruction.

FRANKLIN REPOSITORY, CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

STONEMAN WAS STEVENS

Old Commoner is Not Flattered by Dixon's Portrayed in "Birth of a Nation"

Who was Stoneman, the great, powerful character so wonderfully portrayed in "The Birth of a Nation?" which great picture will be shown in Orpheum on Friday and Saturday.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Herald says:

Some 15,000 persons saw the great film when it was in Grand Rapids recently. All watched with mingled hatred and respect the character of Stoneman. They noted his club foot, the strong face, the square set jaw. They observed the iron determination of the man and the tremendous power he wielded. They saw the result of his reconstruction policy, the ascendency of the colored man and the degeneration of the once proud whites. They saw the overbearing Lynch and the things he brought about and they cheered when the big negro informed Stoneman that the white woman he proposed to marry was Stoneman's own beautiful daughter.

Who was Stoneman? Everybody asked if there really was such a character in the history of the United States. Some few knew who the character was intended to portray. Most persons present did not know. As a result The Herald has been flooded with questions as to who the character was supposed to represent.

Thaddeus Stevens, congressman from Lancaster county, Pennsylvania is the man from whom the character of Stoneman was taken. Mr. Dixon in his "Clansman", from which "The Birth of a Nation" was taken, makes this plain, but in depicting Stevens, the author strayed far from the truth in order that his story might be readable and the things he was trying to show—the unwise policy of the north toward the south and the horrors of the reconstruction period—might be made strong.

THADDEUS STEVENS

Once Congressman From Pennsylvania and Prominent Figure During Civil War Period.

Stevens was a great power in the nation during and after the war. Stevens was radical and would have punished with most extreme measures those who had been responsible for the rebellion. Stevens was club-footed. Stevens was a friend of the Negro. Indeed, long before the war, long before there was an abolutionist party, Stevens, as a member of the constitutional convention of Pennsylvania, had fought bitterly when suffrage had been restricted to whites. So bitterly did he combat that clause that he refused to sign the completed instrument and sought to defeat it after it was passed by the constitutional convention.

Stevens did have a mulatto housekeeper, but she was not his mistress as the story of Stoneman seems to imply. Stevens did not have, as the "Clansman" and the "The Birth of a Nation" show, any daughter or son or family at all. He never married and his life was looked upon as a model. He never even used tobacco and would not permit liquor to be brought into his home.

FRANKLIN REPOSITORY,

BIRTH OF THE NATION HERE ON MAY 5TH AND 6TH

Following its London success at Drury Lane Theatre, D. W. Griffith's wonder spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" has been sent on tour in the provinues of the United Kingdom. One company is nearing the end of a six weeks' run in Manchester, and on Easter Monday additional engagements of newly organized companies were installed in Liverpool and Edinburgh, and as soon as these are out of the way two other organizations will open in Birmingham and Glasgow.

STONEMAN WAS STEVENS

(Continued from Page One).

it a libel and a scandal upon the name of one of America's greatest men and Pennsylvania's most loved citizens.

"Many a time have I stopped at the little cemetery in which 'Old Thad' lies buried", says Mr. Ranck. "Many a time have I looked over the fence at the tomb in which his remains rest and many a time have I hoped some day that another such as he should spring up in that state.

"The people of that section loved Thad Stevens. His name is still one to conjure with. He was born up in Vermont of the most humble parents. His mother was left a widow soon after the crippled boy was born. She did all in her power to secure for him an education and he was able to be graduated from Dartmouth college. Mr. Stevens' affection for his mother was great. Throughout his life when he had become rich and famous, his first thought was of his mother and her comfort. In his will he left a considerable amount to care for his mother's grave, but nothing for his own.

"Mr. Stevens was the big man of the nation during the war and just after it. Even if his policy toward the south may have been mistaken, it was born not of a desire to crush and humiliate the whites, but rather because of his mistaken conception of the ability of the Negro at that time to handle the ballot intelligently.

"He was a commoner by nature. He loved the poor and had no use for the aristocracy. His acts of kindness to the poor around Lancaster county are told over and over again even to this day. So greatly was he loved there that you can go into scarcely no farm house in all the country around and not find there an old steel engraving of Thaddeus Stevens or 'Old Thad.'

"In his will he left a large sum for a home for friendless children. The balance of his estate was allowed to accumulate for years until it had reychd a sufficient sum to build an industrial school for poor boys. That was the kind of man he was. Is it any wonder then that we who come from down in that part of the country see red when we see him depicted as 'Stonemen?'

"Mr. Dixon says he was buried in a Negro cemetery beside his mulatto mistress. As a matter of fact he was buried in a private cemetery, where he chose his own lot before death, while Mrs. Smith, his mulatto housekeeper, who had a Negro husband and two boys black as coal before ever she saw Mr. Stevens, is buried in the Catholic cemetery with her family.

"The whole character of Stoneman is as wide from the truth of the life of Stevens as the one incident of his daughter and his son, for he never married and never had children. We from Lancaster county resent the blackening of the name of our greatest citizen."

MARCH OF A MIGHTY CONQ UEROR SHERMAN) TO THE SEA. A THRILLING SPECTACLE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION." CENTRAL OPERA HOUSE, TWO NIGH NNING WEDNESDAY, MAY 3rd. MATINEE THURSDAY.

Wednesday Eve
THE EVENING STAR

"Birth of a Nation."

The "Birth of a Nation," next Monday afternoon, at the National Theater, will enter upon its fourth successful week, a remarkable record for a theatrical attraction in Washington.

From the first scene to the last the film seems to hold the keenest interest and it reaches its strongest point in the second part, where the hordes of the Ku Klux Klan gather for their thrilling ride.

Unusual spectacular effects, breadth of conception and skill of execution are the notable features of the production, whose scenes range through the civil war and reconstruction periods, visualizing effectively incidents and personages of the most stirring period of American history.

The Assassination of President Lincoln—Ford's Theat e—A dramatic sc in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Orpheum Theatre, Friday Saturday, May 5th and 6th, with a matinee Saturday.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Orpheum Theatre on May 5 and 6.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. Eighteen thousand people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of 000. Five hundred costume seamstresses worked for three m to make the costumes worn by people. Ten thousand yards of were worked into the costume by the women while 25,000 ya white muslin were used up in the galia of the KuKlux Klansmen yet with all this a simple, humanr y of love and romance weaves the vast spread of the action grips the hearts of the audience narrative is filled with tears smiles. A symphonic score ac panies the action and lends a p force to the drama.

265

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their quaincy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her South-lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and never far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

CHAMBERSBURG, PA.,
WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 3, 1916

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Orpheum Theatre on May 5 and 6.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. Eighteen thousand people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. Ten thousand yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the KuKlux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

May 3/16

HARRISBURG TELEGRAPH

Magnitude That Almost Appalls.

The magnitude of D. W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" is almost appalling — at least to the devotees of the older theater. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchback scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" is infinitisimal. For Griffith, in staging "The Birth of a Nation," used Nature for his background, 50 years of American history as his subject, 18,000 people as his actors, and no less than 3,000 mounts of cavalry in the celebrated "rides" of the Ku Klux Klan. After it was all completed, he had an operatic score prepared and provided orchestral music worthy of Wagner. The motion picture spectacle in which these marvelous things are done will be shown here for a return engagement at the Orpheum for three days beginning Monday with daily matinees.

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1916.
BRIDGETON EVENING NEWS.

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3000 horses. Approximate cost of production $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War reenacted.

Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of Wild Ku Klux "rides" that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"war as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

Making altogether the most stupendous dramatic and spectacular enterprise which the brain of man has yet visioned and realized.

THE HERALD, MARTINSBURG, W. VA. Mar 4-16

Big Audience at The Central Held Spellbound by "The Birth of a Nation"

With a tenseness of varying emotions, marked by breathing quiet, tears and laughter, for nearly three hours last night the large audience that filled the Central Opera House to capacity on the main floor and in the gallery, was held spell-bound in the production of "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's film marvel of the age from Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," embellished by a strong orchestra.

Human descriptive powers are at a loss and our language lacking in words to more than in a vague way tell of this "Eighth Wonder of the World." All who have read the famous novel naturally recall the general trend of the story that had been woven into the warp and woof, given the finishing touches of the magic wand of the filmdom artist. The portrayals of happy home-life in the southland before the break between the states comes as a pleasing thought in memory. Then follows the return to his old homestead of the young Confederate officer, wrecked by wounds and haggard, having left the younger brothers on the gory field of battle, to find his parents aged and tottering, his girlish sisters grown old in four years, the magnificent homestead wrecked and the estate impoverished. Soon followed the trying days of the reconstruction period and the horrors of the carpet-bag regime, when insult and degradation were heaped upon the old families, those who had worn the gray and given the best of their life blood for the "Lost Cause." In the common course of events came the Ku Klux Klan, night riders garbed in white, who took up the cause of the dominant race and in their own way had to do with bringing peace and order out of chaos, and a rehabilitating of the Confederate states. Throughout the scenes vary from the most pleasing to those of extreme sadness, to the tragic. The battlefield before Petersburg is reproduced in powerful realism with thousands of fighters, miles of trenches, here for hours it seems to the onlooker, the warring hosts of the blue and gray charge and re-charge, whole regiments being decimated by gun fire and shells, the heavens being enveloped in smoke and flame, when bayonets cross and hosts go down before the grim reaper. This scene is particularly graphic and powerful. Then the surrender of Lee at Appomattox.

Sherman's "March to the Sea," and the burning of Atlanta, terrible in picture realism, though significant in the fortunes of war.

The assasination of President Abraham Lincoln at Ford's theatre is a powerful feature in the play. Booth, the assasin, appearing on the stage after his fatal shot, as he totters on a broken leg and shouts "Sic Semper Tyrannus," while the Great Emancipator falls in the arms of friends in his box and all is confusion as the murderer escapes.

Running through the story in picture from end to end is a romance carefully interwoven, involving the younger members of one of the aristocratic families of the south and one prominent in political influence in the north, wherein love and brotherhood play a leading part, in various settings in the home and the battlefield.

But whatever prejudices may have been revived, whatever emotions however powerful and effective, all are lost in the beautiful finale representing a new south, prosperous and powerful, that has risen shinx-like in half a century, blotting out all but the sad memories of war and its wreck and ruin; a Union of States powerful and inseparable; a race that has gradually struggled from the bondage of the world, risen onward, upward under the guiding lives of their once masters, through the influence of education to a position of enlightment, with property interests, and with a sad past but a dim memory on the horizon of hope.

All with one accord must agree that "The Birth of a Nation" represents the highest pinnacle of success in filmdom, that it carries with it a powerful and lasting lesson in the history of the United States in the making, and the Central Opera House is offering to many the opportunity of a lifetime in its presentation today. Final performance tonight at 8:15.

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1916.
THE WASHINGTON POST

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin the fourth week of a record-breaking run at the National Theater next Monday afternoon. The Griffith spectacle has thrilled capacity audiences in Washington from the beginning of the engagement. The prosperity of the mammoth film story is based on a foundation of solid merit. Matinees daily.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA.
THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1916

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WONDER SPECTACLE

Beautiful and Artistic In Its Scenic Splendor.

"The Birth of a Nation," that amazing screen drama whose scenes are laid just before, throughout, and immediately after the great civil war, is all that has been claimed for it.

This was the unanimous verdict of the big audience at the Central Opera House last night and this afternoon, and will be the opinion of those who will undoubtedly pack the theatre tonight at the last performance.

As a rule, readers of the Journal become surfeited with the copious use of adjectives constantly employed in the descriptions of film dramas even those that are so incongruous as to be laughable in their most serious aspect. But in the description of "The Birth of a Nation" the employment of the most extravagant terms is entirely permissible.

The play is indeed a wonder spectacle with musical embellishment—and not the least important portion of the entire work is the music by the splendid orchestra of 20 pieces. This not only accompanies the film scenes—it places them in a setting of peculiar effectiveness and permeates and actually becomes a part of the finished work. If Mr. Griffith never did anything else, his mighty spectacle, shown at the Central, would entitle him to a lofty place in the ranks of producers.

While most persons who keep in touch with such matters are more or less familiar with "The Birth of a Nation," either by reason of having seen the great pictured drama or by reading accounts of it, the mind pictures they have visioned will prove far short of the actuality. There is nothing like it in the picture world today, and it will be a long time before it is surpassed.

It is splendidly beautiful as a piece of artistry, it is immeasurably valuable as a work of history of the crucial period of the American republic, and it is positively stupendous as a spectacle. If you have not seen it, do so tonight.

The Journal for advertising.

WASHINGTON HERALD.
THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1916.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

Entering upon its fourth week next Monday afternoon at the New National theater, D. W. Griffith's epoch-making photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," still is thrilling audiences with its charming love story and historic spectacles.

The spectacular effects, the breadth of conception and the skill of execution with which the picture has been made differentiates it from all previous attempts at photo-spectacle. The scenes range through the civil war and reconstruction periods and visualize with graphic effect the scenes and personages of the most stirring period of American history. "The Birth of a Nation" has now the record for a run in Washington for a high-priced attraction. The longest run heretofore has never reached over two weeks.

HARRISBURG, PENNA
THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1916

At the Theatres—

ORPHEUM

Three days beginning next Monday with daily matinees—"The Birth of a Nation."

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Many of the critics who have been earnest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to—the unique offering at the Orpheum next week, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday with daily matinees.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular states, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Barrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

[illegible] DEFENCE IS REQUIRED AT

Storming the trenches, a tremendous scene in D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Orpheum for a return engagement three nights beginning Monday, May 8. Daily matinee at 2 p. m.

May 5/16 THE HATTIESBURG N

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play the feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunette, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

THE WORLD, MARTINSBURG, W. VA.

MIRIAM COOPER, IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film, but impossible for the "indoor drama" is illustrated by the "Ford's Theatre scene in 'The Birth of a Nation."

The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's Theatre in April, 1863 but also the auditorium of the theatre, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman whose head has fallen back in the stage box and at the assassin Booth who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the box draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical-realism has never been achieved before. It is part of what is meant by the so-called "new art" for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous art achievements of the film drama.

TIMES-DEMOCRAT— 5/5

MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA

"The Birth of a Nation."

The romance of the "little confederate colonel," Ben Cameron with the northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout "The Birth of a Nation" which returns to the Hinton theater next Monday for a three days engagement with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

Never, in the most terrific scenes of the spectacle, is the romance, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," quite forgotten. In the battle of Petersburg, for example, the "little colonel" leads a thrilling charge against the command of his old school friend, Capt. Stoneman. One of the brothers of Margaret Cameron falls a victim to war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. Elsie Stoneman and her brother Phil are present in Ford's theater the night of the assassination of Lincoln. It is to save the honor of his sweetheart, Elsie Stoneman, that the "little colonel" leads the Ku Klux Klansmen in the most sensational ride ever staged.

The spectacle is in two parts. The first half exhibits the salient events of the civil war, which came to a close at Appotomattox fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy in Ford's theater live before the eyes of the spectator as vividly as did the actual events in the era depicted.

In the second half is shown the second uprising of the south, this time against the carpetbag regime. Horrors worse than those of war are enacted, and there springs up the "invisible empire" with its vast hordes of 400,000 men. The Aryan race is restored to its rights after a secret and terrible combat. It is in this half of the spectacle that Griffith tells for the first time accurately and vividly the true story of the Ku Klux Klan.

Hamburg Pa. Sep 5

FRANKLIN REPOSITORY,

ALLEGORICAL PEACE GROUP.

A Scene in "The Birth of A Na tion" coming to The Orpheum Thea tre, Friday and Saturday, May 5 d 6, Matinee Saturday.

Many of the critics who have n eternest in their exactions of erican dramatists announce their ief that D. W. Griffith has t over the great American play last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful ctacle drama, "The Birth of a tion,' is referred to the unique ring at the Orpheum Theater, t Friday, and Saturday, May 5th d 6th.

r many years American dramas wrote able plalys of particular tes, cities and localities, ranging m "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" d from "Way Down East" to e Great Divide." But no one n seemed to grasp the whole t and genius of America until rid Wprk riffith picked a suggesn for his theme out of Dixon's e Lepard's Spots" and "The sman" and started to develop remarkable thing about Mr. ith's plan is that words (except n leaders and titles) did not en- into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great scenes. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting 2 hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is somethnig the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and the Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the case are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horsese and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

NIAGARA FALLS JOURNAL, FRIDAY, MAY 5, 1916.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION," HERE FOR 3 MORE DAYS

"The Birth of a Nation," is here. Several thousand Falls people are today discussing this mighty spectacle, which opened a four days' engagement at the Innternational theater last night before a large audience that was alternately awed by the magnitude and realism of battle scenes; sat tensely gripping their seats as John Wilkes Booth fired the fatal shot that robbed the South of its best friend, Abraham Lincoln, or applauded to the echo as 1,800 white-robed horsemen, the Ku Klux Klan, swept down on the little town of Piedmont, where the negroes and carpet-baggers held sway in a wild orgy. These and hundreds of other scenes are what make D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle one of the most widely discussed topics in the country, and the greatest attraction ever presented in the world's theaters.

Those who have not witnessed the remarkable spectacle pay homage to the genius of David Griffith. Those who have not witnessed it cannot appreciate the magnitude of the production. Many believe it is just a "feature picture" and express wonder at the scale of prices. They do not know that a company of 32 is necessary to produce the remarkable historical drama. A symphony orchestra of 24 pieces, while eight men are used "back stage" to work the carload of effects, all of which add to the realism of the scenes.

The magnitude of the spectacle is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older forms of theatrical entertainment.

Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" measures to the mountain like a molehill. Instead of scenery for his background Griffith has used Nature. For subject he has covered 150 years of American history. Eighteen thousand people have done his bidding and in the hair-raising rides of the Ku Klux Klan three thousand riders and horses sweep over the dusty roads.

No wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of the country. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theater—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchorinzed to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which both as book and play created the greatest furore of the last decade.

The great deeds of the Civil War and the horrors of reconstruction are made to live again and the nation re-born is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed this stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures with music and mechanical effects tell vividly this thrilling tale of 50 years ago.

This great attraction plays the International tonight, Saturday and Sunday, with matinees. There are plenty of good seats to be secured. It is advisable, however, to reserve them early.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA.
EVENING JOURNAL

CENTRAL OPERA HOUSE

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce; it is not a comedy. It is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle. Comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless. There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home; almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Again there is the scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing "Mississippi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw," and other steps in which the darkeys delighted.

LILLIAN GISH
In "The Birth of a Nation."

TULSA DAILY WORLD, FRIDAY, MAY 5, 1916

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand today, Saturday and Sunday.

ORLD, MARTINSBURG, W. VA.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS VERY PLEASING

Griffith Film Produces Unusual Effect on Washington's Customary Apathy.

(By Florence E. Yoder in the Washington Times.)

Any one who has ever entertained the idea that Washington audiences are phlegmatic and undemonstrative will do well to go to see the "Birth of a Nation," at the National this week and instantly rid himself of the idea.

It is true that the average dramatic performance in the form of a play rarely arouses actual demonstrations with the voice, but since some may recall instances when cheers were given at some production it will do well to consider such for a moment.

When Maude Adams first appeared in this city as Peter Pan in the play of that name, enthusiasm in the audience reached a height which may have been equaled since then but which has never been excelled until this week.

The last plea of Peter when he stretched forth his hands and asked, "Do you believe in fairies?" invariably brought replies from the audience, which stood as one person while hats and handkerchiefs were waved in the air.

But the demonstrations attending the showing of the Griffith film, "The Birth of a Nation," are not to be compared with even that maximum.

At certain points in the Griffith film the audience shouts. The people applaud and cheer and stamp their feet and otherwise everlastingly debar themselves from being known as the most phlegmatic audiences on record.

Sympathies Aroused.

Of course the fact that Washington is a southern city, must be taken into consideration. The film has a distinct appeal to anyone who has either experienced personally, or even known of, the tragedy of the south following the civil war.

But it is uterly without feeling or prejudice that the history of the Cameron and Stoneman families is followed. The tragedy which brings forth the most intense fervor in the audience, the moments at which the piece reaches its most dramatic heights, are indicative neither of the success of the North or of the South, but of the personal triumph of right over wrong.

So it is not a sectional feeling which makes the audience go wild, not any unusual enthusiasm due to the fact that this is a southern city, but a natural excitement occasioned by the construction of the plot of the film itself.

Tension Soon Felt.

At first there is little more than the ordinary handclapping as the film is unwound. People settle themselves comfortably in their chairs, and plan to accept the history quietly. The fortunes of a northern and a southern family whom fate has brought together supply the basis of the plot.

As the story unfolds the tension begins to be felt. People become a little stiffer, and sit more rigidly so that the tell tale tears which will sneak out of their eyes may not be seen by the person sitting next them.

The sadness and beauty in the reproduction of a south which will never live again grips like iron bands.

The desperation of a south confronted with a problem with which they cannot cope without financial ruin in any event, transfers itself to the spectators. The music of a generation ago, perhaps handed down by mothers and fathers, or remembered personally, helps to bring back the past.

Unlike the "Battle Cry of Peace," this film does not instantly produce storms of applause. Its workings are more logical; built on the firmer grounds of actual history and suffering.

Swings Into War Scenes.

But as the story swings into the war scenes, as the terrible period of reconstruction is brought nearer and nearer, an uneasiness begins to manifest itself.

The whole audience gradually begins to lose control. Northerner, Southerner, even the indifferent, are hopelessly one in their sympathy for the suffering Cameron family—one of the hundreds which was bruised and torn by merely being in the path of destruction, cleared at so great a cost.

By the time that the film reveals the formation of the Ku Klux Klan, and the major points of historical interest are completed, a sobbing, breathless audience sits with nerves drawn taut to watch the outcome of the fortunes of the Cameron and Stoneman families.

It is then that pandemonium breaks loose.

Polite, conservative, phlegmatic Washington playgoers yell.

They have everlastingly lost their reputation for being cold-blooded. But it took "The Birth of a Nation" to

NIAGARA FALL... FRIDAY, MAY

Many Witnessed Great Photoplay For Second Time

International Theater Filled last night the Occasion Being the First Presentation of "The Birth of a Nation."

Nothing could better emphasize the wonderful character of that marvelous motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," than the fact that a number of Niagara Falls people who saw the picture when it was presented in Buffalo some months ago, were in the audience that filled the International theater last night to have a second look at its thrilling scenes. When people will pay their money to see a picture the second time there must be some extremely good reason for it.

The reason in this instance is that nothing like this photoplay has ever before been attempted in the realm of filmdom. One could see it a half dozen times and enjoy it as thoroughly the last as at the first.

This photoplay was suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," and contains 500 scenes. It also presents 18,00 men and women and 3,000 horses. It requires three hours to shew and the realistic features heightened by an admirable orchestra, are amazing. Intense excitement prevails from the first, the audience frequently bursting forth in uproars of patriotic enthusiasm.

The two most illustrious figures visible in "The Birth of a Nation" picture are General Lee and General Grant. These two idols of the American people are impersonated by Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp. The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilber-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House under the historic apple tree April 9th, 1865. It is regarded as a most faithful reproduction of all personages in that historic event and likewise the minute details of the action. The misguided Booth, who assassinated Mr. Lincoln, was undoubtedly of the opinion that the removal of Mr. Lincoln would have the support of the South, but General Lee was altogether of a different mind. He realized that the South had been overcome in a struggle on the fields of contest and that to prolong the fighting farther would merely add to the horrors and miseries of the people. Shortly after the battle of Five Forks, General Lee opened negotiations with General Grant and later followed the surrender. General Lee was dressed for this last public occasion with great care, while, on the contrary, General Grant appeared in fatigue uniform, heavy raw-hide boots, which had rendered him such excellent service in his campaigns.

But this is only one of the many incidents based on historical fact and extremely interesting. In addition to the show tonight there will be matinee and evening performances tomorrow and Sunday.

There are a number of good seats for each performance that may be secured on application at the box office.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1916.
HATTIESBURG NEWS

ADVANCE SALE OF TICKETS IS LARGE

"BIRTH OF A NATION" PROMISES TO PACK THE LOMO AT EVERY PERFORMANCE.

These are strenuous days at the box office of the Lomo. The demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation," which begins its three days' engagement next Thursday night, shows no slackening, and if there was any doubt that every seat would be sold for each of the five performances, it has been dispelled. Manager R. R. Akers' desk is piled high with mail orders, indicating that many will pour into the city from the small outside towns to witness the spectacle that has swept the South like a prairie fire.

Besides the rush for seats, the attaches of the Lomo have been confronted with the necessity of numbering all the seats in the theatre and obtaining coupon tickets with corresponding numbers. This means that the seating arrangement that prevails in all first class theatres will be followed and that patrons obtaining their tickets in advance can rest safe in the knowledge that they will occupy the seats they have selected. The stage and orchestra pit are also undergoing an overhauling and preparations are being made to put all the Lomo's electrical equipment out of commission during the three days' stay of the company. As already announced, the organization carries two carloads of special constructed projection and stage devices as well as its own orchestra of 25 New York artists.

Some bare facts of the sheer vastness of the production are:

Produced by David W. Griffith, and suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox. Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

Matinees have been arranged for Friday and Saturday for the especial convenience of out-of-town people. The matinees will begin at 2:30 and the night performances at 8 o'clock. The scale of prices will be found in the company's full-page advertisement in this issue of The News.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1916.
THE HATTIESBURG NEWS

A CALL TO ARMS

Lincoln signing his first appeal for volunteers. One of the historical scenes in "The Birth of a Nation."

MAE MARSH

A Pet of the Motion Picture Fans Who will be Seen as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation" at Heuck's Opera House, May 8, 9, 10.

THE GLOBE AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER, NEW YORK,
SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1916.

STANDARD.—Third week of "The Birth of a Nation."

EVENING SENTINEL

BIRTH OF A NATION

The next attraction at the Opera House, will be D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins on Monday, May 15 and is for two nights and Tuesday matinee.

This is the great production which is still making a record run of over 600 performances in New York City where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over two million people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the east. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of half a million dollars.

Linked with the drama is an operatic score which carries recurrent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra travels with the attraction to handle the musical feature of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has built his story. The conflict which this question caused is reproduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things which are a part of war.—Adv.

MAY 6, 1916
TULSA DAILY WORLD,

Miriam Cooper as "The Southern Heroine in "The Birth of A Nation," At the Grand today and tomorrow.

NING, MAY 6, 1
Muskogee Daily Phoenix

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

In the gigantic task of producing "The Birth of a National," which returns to the Hinton theater Monday for a three days ngagement, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, D. W. Griffith received valuable assistance from the United States army officers and men cooperating with him to the fullest extent. Every piece of artillery used in the battle scenes, for instance, was loaned by the ordnance department of the army, and had seen actual service in the civil war. Army engineers assisted in surveying, laying out and reconstructing to the smallest detail the battlefield of Petersburg. Clerks in the war department at Washington assisted Griffith's own corps of investigators in gathering the data necessary for the exact reproduction of the civil war and reconstruction scenes. Then, when it came to the actual work of staging the mighty conflicts, Griffith employed men who had seen military service either in the regular army or in state militias, in order to give the military effects impossible with raw "supers."

THE CHAT, SATURDAY, MAY 6,

TELLER'S SHUBERT THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

At Teller's Shubert Theatre "The Birth of a Nation" is to continue for two more weeks including Sundays. In place of the usual vaudeville entertainment there will be two performances of the Griffith masterpiece tomorrow. From the time of the first picture, showing the importation of slaves into America, is 1916

NEW YORK HERALD, SU

TELLER'S SHUBERT.—The success of the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at Teller's Shubert has caused the management to continue it for two more weeks, including Sundays. To-day there will be two performances—one at fifteen minutes after two and the other at fifteen minutes after eight. "The Birth of a Nation," with its realistic, thrilling battle scenes, replicas of famous historical events and views of Lincoln, Lee and Grant, has proved intensely popular. There is no city of any size in this country where it hasn't been shown this season—and already patronage has reached the eight million mark.

SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1916.

THE DAILY STANDARD

UNION: BROOKLYN, NEW

TELLER'S SHUBERT—At Teller's Shubert Theatre, "The Birth of a Nation," has again been greeted by such success that the engagement is to be continued during the next two weeks. Commencing with two performances to-day this wonderful film will be shown twice daily up to and including Sunday, May 21. To see the tremendous battle scenes in this pictorial masterpiece is to realize what war really is. Despite the spectacular burning of Atlanta, Sherman's March to the Sea, and the night battle scenes which are shown with such wonderful affect, the horrors of war are in no wise glorified, rather they are shown in noteworthy magnificence. Many of film-land's most popular players are seen in the picturesque roles, notably Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper. To music lovers the score of this famous picture, and its interpretation by the large symphony orchestra, makes the performances doubly attractive.

MORNING, MAY 7, 1916.

THE NEW YORK PRESS.

"The Birth of a Nation" will enter upon the third week of its run in the Standard Theatre to-night. Capacity audiences are being attracted by this spectacle, and the run is likely to extend several weeks in this popular uptown playhouse.

TIMES-DEMOCRAT—MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA

A SOUTHERN BALLROOM ON THE EVE OF BULLRUN

May 6-1916

"The Birth of a Nation."

The magnitude of D. W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Hinton Monday for a three days' engagement with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, is bewildering to the casual onlooker and almost appalling to the thoughtful students of stagecraft and of history. Beside "The Birth of a Nation," with its tremendous battles involving 18,000 men, such "good old war plays" as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Frietchie," with their litle groups of "super" actors and their pinchbeck scenery seem tame. Instead of scenery for his background, Griffith has used nature. For subject, he has covered 150 years of American history. Armies as large as those actually engaged in the sternest warfare fight over a territory of some thirty square miles. Three thousand riders, mounted on the fleetest horses the western plains afford, sweep over the dusty roads reproducing the thrilling rides of the Ku Klux Klans.

People who have seen "The Birth of a Nation" no longer wonder that this magnificent historical spectacle is the talk of all America. It has established an entirely new art in the realm of the theater—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with an orchestral score perfectly synchronized to the action. It has also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the theme that created so great a furore when Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," was published, and that was repeated when the novel was visualized on the stage.

The great deeds of the civil war and the horrors of reconstruction are made to live again, and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Everything is managed without the aid of dialogue, the ear being satisfied as well as the eye through music and sound effects.

May 8/16

HARRISBURG TELEGRAPH

LOCAL THEATERS

"The Birth of a Nation"

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Orpheum for its return engagement of three days beginning to-day with daily matinees, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had give nher brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in indoor or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera, are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Muskogee Daily Phoenix

May 7, 1916

played. The publis taste demands that. It seems to me, that there must be a great opening in this country for the large number of musical students to help out their musical education by playing in these moving picture houses in the evenings."

Amusements

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Beginning with the arrival of the first slaves in this land, the forces leading up to the main story of "The Birth of a Nation" to be unfolded to theatergoers at the Hinton for three days beginning Monday with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday and following its impelling lesson, range through the vital pages of American history.

The first rumblings of the abolition movement are heard ominously. The sovereign states in their claims to the right to maintain the institution of slavery reach the climax of their discontent in the election of Abraham Lincoln. The new president issues his first call for troops, and the civil war, so long dreaded, comes to be a tragic reality.

The story of the mighty conflict is told vividly in the works of the best historians, but D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" founded on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," is credited with a vividness that is to theirs like the electric light to the oil lamp. Sherman marches to the sea before the very eyes of the spectator, and the storming of Atlanta excited the veterans in the audience, both northern and southern, to the wildest pitch of enthusiasm. The battle of Petersburg is fought on a stage five miles in width, and the veteran recognizes the tree or the clump of bushes whose shelter he heroically abandoned to meet the murderous charge of the enemy.

But, while the men of the north and the south are engaged in the fearful struggle, Griffith flashes before the eyes of the spectator the woman's part in the war. She is at home praying, or is ministering to the wounded in the hospitals, or is scanning with dreadful anxiety the lists of the slain. Then comes Appattomax court house. General Lee and General Grant drew up articles that are to put an end for all time to strife in this nation, and when they walk toward each other and stretch out their hands for a brotherly clasp, the audience, according to reports from the eastern amusement centers, farily rise to their feet and yell and cheer as if they were present at the actual scene of reconciliation.

But though the war is over, the nation must still go through some bitter throes before it becomes the wonderful reality it is today. Lincoln is assassinated, the enemies of the south in congress undeterred by the strong hand of the great leader, make possible the rule of the carpet bagger. The newly liberated race, under the influence of pernicious politicians go to such excesses that the Aryans of the south are forced to band together secretly for their preservation. This gives rise to the Ku Klux Klan, and their wild riders on their errands of vengeance and mercy are among the most thrilling scenes of "The Birth of a Nation."

Throughout it all there runs a story of love and chivalry based upon "The Clansman" though not following the book in its details. The story serves to soften and make romatic the stern realities or war and political selfishness.

The spectacle is rendered still more realistic by thousands of sound and electrical effects, especially devised for this production, and by a musical score, blending patriotic and sentimental themes into an operatic whole, interpreted by a special symphony orchestra.

May 7, 1916

Muskogee Daily Phoenix

The Battle of Petersburg in "The Birth of a Nation"

CARLISLE, PA., MONDAY, MAY 8, 1916.

LILLIAN GISH
Star of Photo Play "The Birth of a Nation" To Be Shown in Carlisle.

BIRTH OF A NATION

A great deal of film comedy is horse play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty theatre proves that quiet comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil war portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doubles of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil war type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil war and reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

The picture will be shown at the Carlisle Opera House on Monday and Tuesday, May 15 and 16, with a matinee Tuesday.

THE SUNDAY STAR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 7, 1916

National.

D. W. Griffith's motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will begin its fourth successful week at the New National Theater tomorrow. The interest manifested in this elaborate production elsewhere seems to prevail in Washington. "The Birth of a Nation" is a marvel as a theatrical attraction to managers all over the country.

It is a big theme, handled in a stupendous way, with romance woven about historical incidents that are found in the annals of America. Actual observation of a battle on a European field would give the onlooker no more complete idea of the conflict of armies than may be had in "The Birth of a Nation." One sees also the south of ante-bellum days, of the war and of the reconstruction period. Through all Lincoln is the central figure.

The stirring scenes depicting the

CAMBRIDGE, MARYLAND,
EVENING, MAY 8, 1916

A PICTURE THAT ALL SHOULD TRY TO SEE

"The Birth of a Nation" Educates as Well as Entertains—The Price Seems High, But is Really Reasonable—Such Pictures Are Seen But Once in a Lifetime.

"The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Opera House tonight, tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow night, arrived in Cambridge last night in two special cars, which were attached to the regular train. The symphony orchestra, which accompanies the drama, is composed of thirty musicians, also the operating company furnishes its own scenery, picture machines, operators, curtains, etc.

At first thought the prices for admission to see this wonderful photo play seem unusually steep, but when one considers the length of time required to show it ,only one show being possible in an evening, and this one being of about three hours duration, some idea can be obtained of the tremendous cost attached to the production of such a picture. The average photoplay is shown in thousands of theatres, the time required for the production being from a few minutes to one or two hours, seldom longer than this. The ability to distribute the cost of production among thousands of houses makes it possible to show at what may be termed moderate prices; then, too, much of the scenery used in one production can be used again in other productions. In the case of "The Birth of a Nation" the situation is entirely different. The cost of the production is said to have exceeded a half a million dollars; little if any of the cost can be transferred to the account of any other play on account of the character of the play.

It depicts the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, in Washington, in detail. This scenery cannot be used again. It shows the reconstruction of the South immediately following the Civil War, and the elaborate scenery used in this depictation of events is valueless after having been used the one time. It is so throughout the entire production, and the cost of the production is so great that it is not possible to show it in thousands of theatres, but instead it can only be shown in the theatres in the larger centers of population, where it is possible to find enough persons interested in the development of this great nation of ours to be willing to spend the money and time necessary to witness the reproduction of the most important historical events that have transpired since the declaration and winning of our independence.

Even though the price of tickets may seem somewhat high, those who see this picture tonight, or tomorrow, and who hear the splendid music that accompanies it, will feel that they have been fully repaid for their expenditure, even though such expenditure may have seemed a trifle extravagant. Besides the entertainment and the pleasure, those who see the picture will have a truer and better conception of the real worth of the United States of America.

SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1916.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

That same meed of success which came to the D. W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and other large cities has been the good fortune of the production here. At each presentation in the National Theater there has been a crowd sufficient to place standing room at a premium.

So widespread has been the discussion of "The Birth of a Nation" that it is hardly necessary to again outline the story. Suffice it to say that the spectacle deals with a big theme in a big way. No such wonderful photographic conceptions have ever before been made for the screen. A more complete idea of the conflict of armies on the field of battle could not be given, even were actual hostilities to be photographed. The onlooker sees a battle as only those on the very front line of fighting would see a conflict.

Then there is a wonderful realization of the South in ante-bellum days when slaves worked in the cotton fields and were sold on the block. The great liberator who gave to the helpless the boon of freedom is seen in his very human aspect as the comforter of the oppressed, and the tragedy that snuffs out such a life is most impressive. Indeed it would be difficult to imagine a more effective and affecting scene than that showing the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in Ford's Theater.

The great historical value of this picture is shown by the large number of school classes that have been attending the performances in a body. There is no better way of telling the impressive story of the civil war and reconstruction.

MONDAY, MAY, 8, 1916
CAMBRIDGE, MARYLAND

Author Endorses "Birth of a Nation"

Dorothy Dix, foremost woman writer, says the following about "The Birth of a Nation:"

"It is history vitalized—history by lightning flash. Go to see it because of the wonder of the pictures themselves, and finally, go to see it because it will make a better American of you, for out of the baptism of blood of the Civil War was born the new nation, one and indivisible."

"The Birth of A Nation"

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. It will be seen at the Grand Opera House tonight, and tomorrow, matinee and night.

Petersburg, and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theatre, the foothills of South Carolina, and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theatre at every performance. Adv

MONDAY, MAY 8, 1916
GLOBE AND COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER, NEW YORK.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Standard Theatre this week. D. W. Griffith's great spectacle has lost none of its popularity, judging by the attendance yesterday. Seats were at a premium in the evening. Fine music adds to the attractiveness of the bill at the Standard. At yesterday's performances the audiences showed the same enthusiasm which has greeted "The Birth of a Nation" wherever it was presented.

WASHINGTON POST
SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1916.

National—"The Birth of Nation."

With tomorrow's matinee, "The Birth of a Nation," will enter upon the fourth week of its highly successful run at the National Theater, a record that has never been approached by a high-priced attraction in this city. It will probably be witnessed by a very large percentage of Washington's population before the long engagement comes to an end. As the run continues the demand for seats grows instead of diminishing, and this is taken as an indication of the widespread interest this epoch-making film has created.

The battle of Petersburg, the assassination of President Lincoln and the awe-inspiring rides of the Kuklux Klan are but a few of the many tremendous incidents brought upon the screen and intermingled with the romance and comedy of Griffith's remarkable film story.

Incidental to the showing of the picture is a musical score that is a marvel in synchronization, for each melody is illustrative of the shifting scene. The whole field of musical composition has been searched to provide a suitable accompaniment for the picture story. This score, played by a symphony orchestra of 30, accentuates the dramatic effect so skillfully contrived by Griffith.

Then, too, the play was splendidly cast. Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, to mention only a few, proved themselves ideal selections for the big roles. As a matter of fact, there is not a person in the production who is not true to character, and as there were required 18,000 persons to give verity to this historic and romantic photoplay, the task which Griffith set himself and which was so successfully completed seems the more astounding. Pictorial spectacles like "The Birth of a Nation" are inspirational and truly educational. As a result many large classes from the schools of this city and vicinity have attended in a body.

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916

THE PATRIOT, HARRISBURG, PENN.

"...MEMORY OF A NATION"

...well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles Studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures in my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation." The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamar—like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Eutopia.

In the sense that it ...

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.,

GAZETTE AND BULLETIN,

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

The Birth of a Nation.

The Epoch Producing company, of New York, has leased the Hippodrome theater for three days, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 15, 16 and 17 for the purpose of exhibiting D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs. This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American ...

BROOKLYN CITIZEN,

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Great Photo-Drama Remains at Teller's Shubert.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's wonderful production, continues to draw large crowds to Teller's Shubert Theatre. So successful has been the presentation before downtown audiences of the great movie depicting the turning point in the nation's history, that the management of the Shubert house will not only continue showing it throughout this week but next week as well. The remarkable film will be presented twice daily, including Sunday.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a picture so magnificently created that words cannot adequately convey its greatness. It tells a story bubbling over with interest. Beginning with the history of our country just before the outbreak of the Civil War, the picture portrays the war and its aftermath. Dual love stories are wound within the reels.

The stirring times of the reconstruction period are brought back to us vividly. The people of the sixties live again. Lincoln, Lee, Grant, Sherman and other great figures of those days are pictured in striking realism. A symphony orchestra serves to heighten the effect of the picture.

Lexington Herald May 9 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The play, "The Birth of a Nation," will be shown at the Lomo Theatre in this city the last three days of this week, with matinees Friday and Saturday.

It is the greatest play ever put upon the screen, and the equal of any play that is on the stage today. It is intensely interesting; it is thrilling; it is exciting; it keeps you guessing; the music written for the play, is beautiful. Simply as a play; a three hours' entertainment, it is well worth the price.

But it is more than that. A great deal more than that. It is historical. It is founded on fact. It tells of a cause "though lost, still just," and how out of that struggle a Nation was born. It burns into the brain that great tragedy called "Reconstruction Days," and it teaches the history of that great epoch as no history can teach it.

It is a chapter in the life of this Nation which every boy and girl, young man and young woman, ought to see and learn. A generation has grown up since those dreadful days, and they do not understand their meaning. When you talk to them about what their parents suffered and endured, it passes over their heads. They do not "take it in." They have a hazy idea, only a hazy idea, what it means. It is a part of their inheritance, and they ought to know it better and appreciate it more.

Every student at the Normal College; every girl at the Woman's College; every pupil of the high grade schools of the city, every young man and young woman in Forrest county ought to see that show for the information they will get out of it. They can learn more in those three hours from looking at that panorama of the Civil War, than they get from any book or learn from the lips of any man.

It is not a sectional play; it is an historical play. It is founded upon fact and it portrays facts. It matters not whether a youth is northern or southern born, "Reconstruction Days" is a part of the history of his country, and he ought to know and understand it.

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE

NATION FILM CONTINUES

Griffith's Production in Second Week at Shubert.

D. W. Griffith's historical drama, "The Birth of a Nation," continued at the Shubert last night, where it will remain for two weeks prior to leaving the metropolis for good. "The Birth of a Nation" shows the possibilities of the photo play such as no other production has ever done. It is a strikingly poetical story, with many titanic scenes, which, in their consummate reality almost stagger the observer.

Historical places and scenes are presented to view with veracity. An augmented orchestra, containing some twenty pieces, furnish musical selections, which are carefully compiled and in perfect keeping with the tenor of the story. Delightful rhapsodies mark the festive gayety of the Southern planter and his family; old plantation melodies are played during the scenes at the darkies quarters.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES, TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

FIVE OF THE PRINCIPAL CHARACTERS IN THE GRIFFITH FILM PRODUCTION, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," BEING PRESENTED HERE.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS BACK AT HINTON

Same Company Throughout That Was Here in December, Presents Great Film.

With all the magic intact that created riots of enthusiasm at every performance last December, "The Birth of a Nation" opened a return engagement at the Hinton theater last night. The exciting struggles between the north and the south in the last gray days of the Confederacy started the applause that makes an audience forget that it is a picture they are looking at; and when the Ku Klux Klansmen rode off into the night on their errand of revenge and chivalry that was to rescue the southland from terrors worse than those of war, the audience rose to a pitch of excitement such as has not been witnessed in the theater of the spoken word since the days when the Lincoln Carter variety of melodrama was taken seriously.

The company presenting "The Birth of a Nation" at the Hinton is identically the same to the smallest detail that was seen here last December. The same orchestra is carried, accompanying every action on the screen with music truly interpretive of the passions of the players at the moment, supplying the place of the spoken word so accurately that the audience forgets that the players are not talking. It was to rescue the southland from terrors worse than those of war, the audience rose to a pitch of excitement such as has not been witnessed in the theater of the spoken word since the days when the Lincoln Carter variety of melodrama was taken seriously.

The company presenting "The Birth of a Nation" at the Hinton is identically the same to the smallest detail that was seen here last December. The same orchestra is carried, accompanying every action on the screen with music truly interpretive of the passions of the players at the moment, supplying the place of the spoken word so accurately that the audience forgets that the players are not talking. It is a vital part of the entertainment and the orchestra carried by "The Birth of a Nation" surpasses in consonance with no musical accompaniment ever heard in Muskogee.

The engagement lasts the first half of the week, closing Wednesday night. There will be matinees today and tomorrow.

Muskogee Daily Phoenix

May 8/16

THE HATTIESBURG NEWS

May 7-1916

This Little Movie Favorite Is of the "Golden Aureole" Type

Lillian Gish, Quaint, Dainty and Piquant, Is Prettiest of the Blondes In Picture World

She Plays Part of the Northern Heroine In "The Birth of a Nation"

MUCH of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stoneman, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blond type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nesting bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation" with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner, her native State being Ohio. For a time in her early girlhood she and her sister Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhardt's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until he finally cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

WILLIAMSPORT SUN

COME TO BLOWS OVER 'THE BIRTH OF NATION'

Two congressmen came to blows following an argument over the suppression of "The Birth of a Nation" in a Washington hotel, a United Press dispatch to The Sun today says. The dispatch which is from Washington follows:

"Arguing over whether 'The Birth of a Nation' should be suppressed, Representative Sam Nicholls, of South Carolina, and Representative Lehlbach, of Newark, N. J., came to blows, night before last in a local hotel, it became known today.

"Nicholls, who is a young militia officer, admitted today that he had slapped Lehlbach, but said that the latter and he had fixed up their differences and are friends again."

The seat sale for the production at the Hippodrome next week started yesterday afternoon. People stood in line some time before the board opened and there was a line on the pavement in front of the theatre during the entire afternoon.

The romance of war as well as its spectacular horror is depicted in "The Birth of a Nation." Consciously or subconsciously D. W. Griffith's mind ran in the same channels as Lord Byron's in working out his epic masterpiece. Even those to whose ears the name "Childe Harold" is only vaguely familiar, recall vividly the stirring lines in which the most red-blooded of English poets describes the ball before Waterloo, that night of revelry and gaiety which ended so tragically.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Griffith has made use of the same thrilling contrast between the joy of life and the hollow emptiness of death that stirs in Lord Byron's immortal poem. On the eve of the Battle of Bull Run, just before the soldiers are to leave for the front, a great ball is held in the little Carolina town of Piedmont. It is one of those brilliant, old-fashioned functions where the aristocracy of birth and breeding were as apparent as at the ball of Brussels. Beauty and chivalry, laces and uniforms mingle to the soft strains of the waltz. The "shadow shapes" on the screen sway to the stately music of the audible orchestra. The illusion is complete.

Then as at the Brussels ball, "A deep sound strikes like a rising knell." The bugle-call to arms is heard. Tears spring to soft eyes that looked "love to eyes that spake again," for they well knew what was to come. There are hurried partings. "Chivalry" rides to the field of glory, perhaps to death, while beauty is left in the joy-deserted halls to weep alone. It is one of the most striking scenes in this wonderful spectacle. At the Hippodrome, Williamsport, three nights, three matinees, May 15, 16, 17. Matinees daily.

WASHINGTON POST: SUNDAY, MAY 7, 1916

WASHINGTON'S professional playgoers recorded last Sunday decent and becoming expressions of regret that the end of the season was at hand. There were plausible evidences of mourning for the flickering footlights and the passing of the audible play. We were prepared for a period of tropical calm quickened only by a philosophical contemplation of the peaceful [illegible] and a closer scrutiny of the gasoline market. Within [illegible] hours, however, the joys of an annual [illegible] were rudely dis[illegible]ed by the fall of the mercury and a bulletin from A. [illegible] Woods.

It [illegible]ears that Mr. Woods resents the news that the Capital of his country has been turned over to "The Birth of a Nation" and other estimable and [illegible]fying screen stories. Detailed information of the Washington theatrical situation did not reach him in time to place a production in our midst tomorrow evening, but he will make a belated appearance on Wednesday night at the Belasco with a new farce that has been constructed to fit the charms of the Misses Dolly and upon which Mr. Rising, the author, has bestowed the disquieting title, "His Bridal Night."

Only a complete and almost childlike confidence in Mr. Woods will enable us to approach the Belasco on Wednesday evening with any degree of fortitude. The vague timidity bred in us by the name of the new comedy is not soothed by hints of the plot. We are told that Mr. Rising has found inspiration for his story in thoughts of what embarrassments might beset a bridegroom rash enough to wed one of beautiful twin sisters. This particular benedict, it is added, is unable to determine which fascinating creature promised to love and [illegible] and which agreed [illegible] be a sister-in-law. However, the fact that the charming Dolly sisters are to essay the essential roles will strengthen our sense of duty and permit us to hope [illegible]

David Wark Griffith, who startled the world with his wonderful combination of film and operatic drama in "The Birth of a Nation," is a native of Kentucky. He began his public career as an extra actor in a Louisville stock company. He also studied grand opera and developed a splendid barytone voice. He became interested in pictures as a scenario writer, but the technical side of the work fascinated him. In less than three years from his first entrance into a motion picture studio he was the most promising figure of American directors. His numerous inventions and his wonderful judgment soon placed him at the forefront of the motion-picture industry. He is recognized as the greatest director of motion-picture productions in the world today. He has gained this eminence in

Attractions in the St. Joseph Theaters

"The Birth of a Nation" Next Week

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's mighty masterpiece, returns to the Lyceum theater Monday, May 15, for an engagement of one week. Audiences that tested the capacity of the theater were in evidence twice daily throughout the last engagement. Never before had such applause been heard in a theater in this city. This wonderful spectacle of the American military era is eminently suited to the present with the great war in the minds of all. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstandings; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the great, all-loving heart of the president and the little men, who, after his death, thwarted his far-seeing plans; the victory of the north and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges vividly upon 1916 as in 1861-'65.

Never before has America's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on stage, film, panorama, or canvas. It is the biggest patriotic entertainment ever devised and it inculcates the lesson of national solidarity with sledge hammer strikes. It is a powerful plea for patriotism. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent acting and perfect photography, the emotional appeal of the music and the cunning art of the mechanical effects combine to make an offering satisfying delightful to all classes of theater goers.

The blending of history, romance, and emotional power proves irresistible. The titanic events sweep on with the force of a whirlwind. In its spectacular features, so prodigally shown, "The Birth of a Nation" is positively superb.

The sale of seats will open Friday. The scale of prices for this return engagement will be very popular. The best seats on the lower floor at nights will be 75 cents and $1. The balcony seats will be 50 and 75 cents. At the matinees the prices will be 25, 50 and 75 cents.

Scene from the battle of Petersburg, in "The Birth of Nation," which will be shown at the Lyceum a week, starting Monday matinee, May 15

LILLIAN GISH - National -

THE WASHINGTON TIMES, SUNDAY, MAY

"The Birth of a Nation." Film Spectacle.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" starts upon its fourth successful week at the National tomorrow afternoon. As usual there will be two performances today, the Sunday matinee beginning at 3 o'clock.

Twelve different companies are now touring the Eastern, Southern, and Central States with Griffith's wonder spectacle, and most of these are now booked up until the 1st of June. All records will have been smashed by the time the current theatrical season closes.

In addition to the companies directly under the control of Mr. Griffith's organization, there are at least ten more companies touring the Western States and Canada, making in all a grand total of twenty-two separate organizations playing on the American continent.

There are five additional companies now being directed on tour or for runs in London and the British provinces. Other companies are booked in Australia and in South America.

"The Birth of a Nation" was the first combination of the silent screen drama with music and theatric effects, which Griffith has combined into a new form of art, to ever play tours in the recognized first-class theaters of the country at prices corresponding with the scale of charges for the best-known plays of its period.

Birth of a Nation.

The Griffith film drama of the reconstruction period will continue next week at the National Theater, with the usual daily matinees.

Burlesque.

Short Man Can Be Hero In Movies and on Stage

Walthall in 'Birth of Nation' Definitely Dispels Dread of Actor Folk.

FAME CROWNS HIS EFFORTS

First Dug Ditch as Italian Laborer—Climaxed Work as "Little Colonel"

HENRY B. WALTHALL.

Some fifty thousand Washingtonians have been added to the most of people who have investigated the matter and are willing to state that a man short in stature can so visualize their idea of a hero that they lose all sense of height values except as they relate to the artistry of perfect performance.

The eternal question of the theater whether a short man can be a hero—a question that has kept some wonderful actors and still more wonderful singers off the stage in times past—has been definitely settled by Henry B. Walthall—the young man whom critics agreed was easily the best artist among all the actors in motion pictures, long before Walthall became famous as the "little colonel" of "The Birth of the Nation."

For more than five years it has been difficult for even the most blase critic of the drama—and this includes dramatics with the most highbrow tendencies—to discuss the work of Henry Walthall in motion picture productions soberly.

A young man, a student, and such a consummate artist, they all considered him far beyond the average of motion picture stars, and critics feared they would be accused of extravagance in placing on paper their estimates of this young man's work.

In Boston, in New York, in newspapers and magazines devoted to discussion of the dramatic from purely literary or artistic viewpoints, Walthall's work has always been given the most careful consideration and the highest praise.

Climax of Fame.

It is through "The Birth of the Nation" that Walthall's work has become known to those theatergoers who are not familiar with other motion pictures. He has made the most decided impression on them and many inquiries are received at the theater and by the dramatic editor of The Times as to just who he is.

Walthall is an actor with a considerable stage experience behind him. While he has never lived in Washington, many intimate friends of the late United States Senator Walthall of Mississippi, will remember him as a very small boy visiting his uncle, Senator Walthall, during the latter's last term of office.

The actor branch of the Walthall family lived in Birmingham, Ala., where Henry B. was born. He was graduated from the high schools of his city and was completing a college course when war with Spain was declared. He immediately entered the volunteers and served throughout the war, although he did not get nearer to the front than Tampa, Fla.

Walthall always had been interested in the stage and in the drama as an art. He had taken part in theatricals at school and at college, and decided to go on the stage after the war.

He went to New York from the place of his discharge and began at the bottom as an extra man with a stock company. The fact that he was a real artist was soon discovered by his stage director, but his small stature was against his being selected for very important parts.

As a juvenile and especially in the parts of very young men, Walthall made a reputation among theatrical folk that led to his being given important parts in important productions.

Aided by Henry Miller.

Henry Miller is credited with giving Walthall his best chance on the stage, and it was while supporting Miller in "The Great Divide" that Walthall's attention was turned to motion pictures.

He was in New York at the time, and was persuaded by a friend who was then playing in motion pictures to go to the old Biograph studio and watch a rehearsal.

David W. Griffith saw the quiet, reserved young man watching the production of the play with much more interest than was usual in visitors, and asking questions about the methods adopted that showed his interest.

Griffith and Walthall discussed the drama and the place of motion pictures in the drama. The discussion became so interesting to both men that Griffith finally persuaded Walthall to try the pictures, simply as an experiment to convince him what could be done. The men recognized in each other the big vision and broad outlook on the art in which they were both so deeply interested.

Walthall's first appearance in motion pictures was as an Italian laborer. In those days it was not easy to get people to agree to let motion picture actors utilize their dwellings or workshops for picture plays as it is now.

Griffith wanted to produce this picture with as much realism as possible. He made an agreement with a contractor who had undertaken to dig a trench, to dig part of the trench for him if he would permit the photographer to use it for a film play.

The contractor agreed and Walthall was put to work digging in the trench. The scene was to be a short one, but Griffith kept him at it. When his back seemed about to break and big blisters appeared on both hands, Walthall asked Griffith if he hadn't almost enough film.

Had to Make Good.

"I got all the film I wanted an hour ago," the director replied, "but I promised the contractor you'd dig about a yard more of trench for him than you've done, so please hurry up flashed on the piece of drama

WASHINGTON HERALD,
MONDAY, MAY 8, 1916

FILM FIGURE HAD BASIS IN HISTORY

Austin Stoneman in "Birth of a Nation" Is Modeled After Thaddeus Stevens, Political Lord.

AUSTIN STONEMAN.

"Was there ever such a man as Austin Stoneman in American history?" is a question asked by nearly all who see "The Birth of a Nation." It will be recalled that Stoneman is pictured as the leader of the House of Representatives in Washington and the dominant figure in political life after the assassination of President Lincoln.

It was an open secret that Thomas Dixon, the author of "The Clansman," upon which "The Birth of a Nation" is based, modeled the character of Stoneman after Thaddeus Stevens, who was one of the most powerful parliamentary leaders in American history. There is no denial of the fact that Stevens came into power when Lincoln was killed. He was born in Vermont, but later moved to Lancaster, Pa. He was always an extremist and a radical of radicals.

As leader of the House he was the prime factor in passing the Reconstruction bills which caused so much misery in the South. When President Johnson decided to follow the Reconstruction ideas of Abraham Lincoln, Stevens turned against him and afterwards managed the impeachment trial of the President. His attitude towards the South was exceedingly bitter and naturally he was looked upon by the people in that section as their worst enemy.

Aided by the Union League of America, which was first founded in Ohio by his friends, Stevens hoped to bring about confiscation of the property of the South. This league did everything in its power to prevent the second election of Lincoln. Nicolay and Hay in their biography of Lincoln say that Stevens and his friends made no concealment of their joy at the death of the President. This made Stevens practically the dictator of the nation.

MIDDLETOWN EVENING NEWS, TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation"

At the AUDITORIUM, Vineland, Friday and Saturday Evenings and Saturday Matinee, May 12 and 13

FIGHTING IN THE TRENCHES

A big scene from "The Birth of a Nation," the photoplay to appear in Carlisle next Monday and Tuesday.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE GREAT PHOTO PLAY

Bird's Eye View of Gigantic Spectacle To Be Played Here Soon

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, New York, July 3; Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All of these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also 17 weeks in Los Angeles and 18 weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expenses, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, two hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil war re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox. Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at cost of $5000.

Wonderful artillery duel in which real shells, costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches, thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters "war as it actually is."

First time in the history of the trials for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two 60 foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphony orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the seven thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every board of censors in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States senators and representatives, governors of states, judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.—Adv.

CAMBRIDGE, MARYLAND,
TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 9, 1916

BIRTH OF A NATION PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE

Famous Photoplay Draws Large Crowd to The Opera House And Is Splendidly Received.

"The Birth of a Nation," which has been widely advertised in the local papers for the past ten days, was shown at the Opera House last night to a large audience, and seemed to give universal satisfaction. The play, which has had a run of several weeks at Ford's Opera House, Baltimore, where it was seen by a large number of Cambridge and county people, fully lived up to the expectations of those who had not seen it.

One of the spectators said after the show, "Well, I paid a dollar to see this play, and now that I have seen it, I would sooner have paid five dollars than to have missed it." This seemed to represent the views of a great many of those who saw it; they felt that they could not afford to miss an entertainment that had been staged at such a huge cost to represent historical facts of the country, which have transpired in the country in which they live.

While there has been an exceptionally large sale of tickets for the two performances today, the one this afternoon and the other tonight, there will, undoubtedly, be a sufficient number left to accommodate those who desire to see the later performance, as the number who have already seen the play is a guarantee of additional room for those who have not been so fortunate and who may have waited for the last performance.

The musical accompaniments at both of the performances completely excelled anything of the kind ever heard in Cambridge, and besides aiding in keeping the attention riveted upon the screen, added much to the entertainment.

WASHINGTON TIMES,
TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" BEGINS FOURTH WEEK

Griffith Production Has Power to Draw Audience Back Time After Time.

The beginning of the fourth week of the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation," at the New National Theater yesterday emphasized the fact that the big Griffith spectacle is not only attracting larger audiences each day and evening of people who have never seen it, but it has the remarkable power of compelling people who have been once to come back for a second and a third time.

There has probably been no dramatic attraction in Washington which has so plainly shown its ability to entertain the same people three or four times and give really more entertainment on the fourth visit than on the first. Usually an audience is pleased with a play, but does not care to see it again. In the case of "The Birth of a Nation" people seem again and again and enjoy it each time.

The final two weeks of the big play began yesterday, with big audiences at both performances, despite the circus and other counter-attractions. The quality of the musical accompaniment of the picture is coming in for more and more comment from theater patrons. The music is interpretive of the theme of the play itself, and the orchestra, which has accompanied the production from city to city, plays the score with the precision and finish that make it an important part of the play.

...ene From "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," To Be Presented at the Auditorium, Friday and Saturday, May 12 and 13. 5-9-1t

...EVENING, MAY 9, 1916.
...DAILY NEWS, TUESDAY

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NOTEWORTHY PRODUCTION

DELLINGER THEATER AUDIENCE THOROUGHLY PLEASED.

No one can afford to miss the wonderful spectacle play, "The Birth of a Nation," which was produced at the Dellinger Theater last evening and this afternoon and which will be presented again this evening and tomorrow afternoon and evening. There was a fair-sized audience present last evening, which vented its enthusiasm time and again by outbursts of applause.

In no small measure the work of the large orchestra contributed to the success of the picture, every detail and incident having its appropriate music. There are about twenty members in the orchestra and there are others who assist in securing the sound effects. The picture was started at 8:15 o'clock, and with only an interruption of about three minutes between the first and second parts, was run continuously until 11:05 o'clock.

History and fiction, fact and romance, were finely blended so as to make an absorbing narrative, and one could easily recall the biographical sketches of the men who lived at the time of the Civil War, as well as the glamour with which an after generation, and especially the writers of historical novels and romances, have since clothed those characters and incidents.

Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," served largely as a basis for the moving picture story. There are 5,000 scenes and 18,000 men and women and 3,000 horses in the spectacle. Besides the presentation of President Lincoln, in which it is claimed that fidelity has been sought to preserve the mannerisms of the man, the other illustrious figures visible are General Grant and General Lee. The picture shows Lee surrendering to Grant in the Wilber-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House under the historic apple tree. It is regarded as a most faithful reproduction of all personages in that historic event and likewise the minute details of the action.

Sketches of Sherman's march from Atlanta to the sea were marvelously real pictures and of course the scenes in which the Ku Klux Klan figure were most spectacular. The series of wild rides by the clansmen show daring horsemanship and artistic riding. It is said that in the production of this pageant more than 25,000 yards of cloth were consumed in making the costumes worn by the Ku-Klux riders.

Night photography of battle scenes, a new invention, is another of the amazing features of the affair. There are wonderful artillery duels in which real shells were used. There are many miles of trenches and thousands of fighters—war as it actually is. There are 140,000 feet of actual photography—the longest picture that was ever taken. When measured in magnitude "The Birth of a Nation" can well be classed as a stupendous dramatic and spectacular enterprise by far the most pretentious that the brain of man has visioned and realized.

...UESDAY, MAY 9, 191...
THE WASHINGTON ...

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

Evidently everybody in Washington means to see "The Birth of a Nation." Washington, like other cities throughout the country is alive to the fact that this entertainment is quite worth while. It seems almost a marvel that any offering could run more than a week in this city, but here is "The Birth of a Nation" in its fourth week, and seats selling for the fifth week, which is said to be the last. One might doubt it, and predict that this great spectacle will run all summer.

There is nothing hereabouts in stone which can tell this great story of a nation with such force; stones and color make but a mute appeal. There are heart beats in "The Birth of a Nation;" it shows the travail of a young nation being re-born as no other vehicle might show it. It is a new art mastered, something to glorify, not to oppose.

...TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916
THE EVENING STAR.

New National.

"The Birth of a Nation" opened its fourth week at the New National yesterday afternoon. Practically nothing new can be said of the Griffith photoplay, founded on Thomas Dixon's book, "The Clansman." It is to motion pictures what any supreme achievement in its line is to literature, music or art. It cannot be compared, because there is nothing with which to compare it. It is a glimpse of the past, a warning for the future and a poignantly dramatic spectacle of the very now.

Romance winds its way in and out of the red lanes of battle, but it is the war itself which conveys the terror of a possible future, measured by a knowledge of what has gone before. Enlightenment as to the why of "Ku-Klux-Klanism" and its judgments by "invisible empire" is visioned by the death of "little sister," and, in high light to the dark tragedies born of the clash of races, is shown, throughout the splendid loyalty of the southern slave. "The Birth of a Nation" will be continued throughout next week.

WASHINGTON POST:
...TUESDAY, MAY 9, 19...

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered its final fortnight at the National. Definite announcement is made that the remarkable film spectacle will cease its mission of entertainment in Washington on Saturday evening, May 20. The photoplay built on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," deserves the very great measure of success it has attained in the Capital. It overshadows every camera story that has come into existence since the period of adolescence in the art of the movies. Its exhibition of stirring battle scenes and clashes of races, its pictured episodes of romance and comedy, love and tragedy; and the haunting music that was employed to make more potent the lure of the Griffith spectacle have appealed to the theatergoers of Washington and other American cities as material well worth the attention of the amusement seeker. In consequence, the film has prospered in greater degree than any theatrical offering, audible or silent, since the theater became an institution in the United States. The fourth week, which began yesterday afternoon, finds the attraction at the National Theater as prosperous and popular as it was when it inaugurated its record-breaking run in Washington.

...ERALD
Tuesday, May 9, 1916.

EL PASO

When D. W. Griffith's play, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown at the Drury Lane theater, London, not long ago at a special matinee for the benefit of the women war workers' fund, royalty attended. Queen Mary with Queen Alexandra and Princesses Victoria and Mary and the Princes Henry and George were there.

DAILY STANDARD UNION: BROOKLYN.

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916

"BIRTH OF A NATION" CONTINUES AT SHUBERT

"The Birth of a Nation," as popular as ever, drew a full house at its opening for another week's run at the Shubert last night. The box office man made an estimate that a third of the folks who saw it last night had seen it before, which is as worthy a tribute as an old play, an old book or an old film can receive. Curtain at 10:25 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1916.

THE WILLIAMSPORT SUN.

BIRTH OF A NATION HERE THREE DAYS

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Hippodrome commencing an engagement of three nights and three matinees, May 15, 16, 17.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the great attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlative because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tents of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

May - 10 - 1916

THE WASHINGTON TIMES

PLAYS COMING TO CAPITAL THEATERS

Varied Programs Offered Amusement Seekers of Capital Next Week.

National.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's great photoplay spectacle of the civil war and reconstruction days, continues to attract large audiences at the National Theater, although next week will be the fifth and last of its phenomenal engagement in this city.

Dealing with scenes easily within the memory of many men, this picture has proved its possession of a peculiar sway over the emotions of all classes and degrees of men. Its love story, though of a type that has been seen in tales of the civil war, has a strong emotional appeal.

The very capable cast presenting the piece includes Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Mariam Cooper, and Lillian Gish. To Walthall and Miss Marsh fall the chief histrionic scenes of the action.

THE EVENING STAR,

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1916.

"Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photoplay spectacle, continues to attract large audiences to the National Theater, although next week will be the fifth of its phenomenal engagement in this city. Dealing with scenes easily within the memory of many men, this picture seems to exert a peculiar sway over the emotions of all classes. Its love story, of a type oft told in tales of the civil war, has a strong emotional appeal. Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper and Lillian Gish are pictured in important roles.

May - 10 - 1916

THE WASHINGTON POST.

D80

Aladdin's Lamp Not In It With the Camera's

Here Is a Trio of "Movie Girls" In "The Birth of a Nation" Whose Combined Salaries Run Up to Considerably Over $100,000 a Year and None Is Out of Her Teens.

BEFORE the moving pictures made the Arabian nights look tame this might have seemed a fairy story. At present it is just a reporter's notebook sketch of actual events, and there is a sordid sound of money in it.

Think of three girls still in their teens who are piling up annual incomes of over $100,000 in the aggregate. The girls are Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, who play feminine leads in D. W. Griffith's epoch making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith understands the force of contrast in art as well as every other detail of this fascinating form of expression which he has made famous. In the three youthful stars of his masterpiece he has the satisfaction of seeing his work carried out triumphantly by three girls who have been trained under his guiding direction. Mae Marsh has that elfin and elusive quality which her Irish ancestry bestowed upon her. Griffith brings it out in striking effectiveness in his world famous work. Miss Marsh is red headed and clever far beyond the reach of her eighteen years.

Lillian Gish is pronounced the finest type of blond on the motion picture screen in America. She has been in the movies now for several years, beginning under Griffith's direction when a mere schoolgirl. She has played a world of parts and is known as well as Miss Marsh, who is beloved of millions as the Maude Adams of the motion pictures.

These two girls between them earn over $1,500 a week and have contracts with the big producing firms in filmland, which means they earn these salaries for fifty-two weeks in every year.

Miriam Cooper is the newest member of the trio and has only been in pictures about a year now. She has come forward steadily, and her work in "The Birth of a Nation" has enhanced her earning capacity. Miss Cooper is the southern type. She is willowy and languid and a pronounced brunetta, making a complete contrast to the brilliant shock of Mae Marsh's red hair and the golden blonde of Lillian Gish.

TIMES-DEMOCRAT-MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA

May 10

"The Birth of a Nation."

Five states and one foreign country contributed to the scenery of "The Birth of a Nation" which opened a three days' engagement at the Hinton Monday night with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. The greater part of the film spectacle was made in California, where the clear, pure atmosphere eclipses even the softness of the tones under Italian skies for the production of photographic effects.

But, in order to make his photodrama exactly accurate, Mr. Griffith took a number of his players over land from California to the Carolinas and Virginia. This was particularly the case for some of the woodland effects and for the scenes in the cotton field, that win enthusiastic applause from Texas audiences. Never before in film drama has the beautiful, silky texture of the cotton blossom been so practically treated.

One big scene was taken in Mexico, where the wild ruggedness of the land was better adapted to Griffith's purpose than the California landscape. Another big scene extended through the California border into Nevada.

PENNSYLVANIA Wednesday May 10. 1916 SUNBURY DAILY ITEM, SUNBURY

CAPACITY HOUSE FOR "BIRTH OF NATION"

RECORD THRONG TO WITNESS PERFORMANCES WHICH BEGIN TOMORROW.

With seats selling fast for all performances of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lomo theatre Thursday, Friday and Saturday it is apparent that the spectacle will perform its usual feat here of playing to capacity business. Matinees have been arranged for Friday and Saturday, making five performances in all, but it would not be surprising if hundreds are turned away.

Since the opening of the advance sale Thursday morning, the boxoffice has been beseiged by playgoers of all ages and classes, many of them from the small towns in this section of the state that have no facilities for staging a theatrical attraction approaching the magnitude of "The Birth of a Nation." They realize that unless they see it during its local engagement they may never have another chance. The company coming to this city has just finished a phenomenal engagement of seven weeks at the Tulane theater, New Orleans, and during that period virtually every person of playgoing age journeyed from all parts of Southern Louisiana and Mississippi to see it.

But prosperity brings its worries. Just now the theatre management is somewhat concerned as to how the crowds are to be handled inasmuch as the capacity of the local playhouse is much smaller than the company has been accustomed to in the larger cities. Wherever the spectacle has been shown there has been confusion and congestion, due to the tendency of many patrons to wait for the final performance. It is urged, therefore, that all who can conveniently do so, attend the Thursday and Friday performances.

As has been repeatedly stated in the advertising for the local engagement, "The Birth of a Nation" is not a mere moving picture. It is a vast spectacle employing the services of fifty people in each presentation and depicting the salient events of two stormy periods of American history. It was eight months in the making, cost $500,000 and is by long odds the most gigantic theatrical offering that the world has known. The story is taken from "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon.

PRODUCER AND THE LEADING MAN

Persons responsible for "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a run at the Lomo tomorrow.

MAY 10, 1916
WILLIAMSPORT, PA.
Williamsport Sun
WEDNESDAY EVENING.

SEND LAWYER HERE TO CONTEST ANY PROTESTS

Edgar B. Linck, manager of the Hippodrome theatre, has been informed by the management of "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be shown in his house next week, that a New York lawyer representing the company will be in this city to look after the interests of the concern in case of any protest against the picture. Some colored residents protested to the city council last Monday morning. They were informed by council that that body would see the picture before it is shown publicly.

Mr. Linck has been informed that the company has been able to overrule objections in all other cities in the United States where the picture has been shown and that it will be given here complete.

WOULD SURPRESS "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Congressman Benj. K. Focht has introduced a bill in congress to suppress the exhibition of the picture, "The Birth of a Nation," in the District of Columbia. This action is of special interest here, as the picture is coming to Sunbury next week:

Congressman Focht's resolution follows:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the congress of the United States that the picture exhibition entitled "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented in Washington, is largely immoral and untrue to history, and maligns and monstrously libels and traduces the memory of one of the nation's greatest statesmen and patriots, former Congressman Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania. In response to a common demand the commissioners of the District of Columbia are therefore called upon to suppress the invidious portrayal in which the immortal Lincoln and Grant are introduced as a mask and palliation of the evident real purpose of the picture, believing that a further exhibition can only tend to arouse and perpetuate that sectional hatred so unhappily born of civil strife, and which all true Americans hope to see buried in the love of a reunited country with all animosities forgotten and former enmities forgiven. We, the congress of the United States, further voice the sentiments contained in an editorial written by Howard E. Butz, and published in the Huntingdon, Pa., Globe, of May 4, 1916, which reads as follows:

"'We witnessed the production of the play, "The Birth of a Nation." It is a stupendous production, one of the biggest things ever put on the American stage, but the blight it puts upon the life of Thaddeus Stevens is rank, outrageous, and as black as hell. We do not wonder that the people of Lancaster, headed by Congressman Griest, prevented the production of the play in that city, where the great commoner and the founder of the public school system of Pennsylvania spent so many years of his great and useful life.'"

May 11/16

282

EVENING REPORT, LEBANON, PA.,

Return Engagement of "The Birth of a Nation"

A great deal of film comedy is horse play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the Hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed. "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Academy of Music, Lebanon, Thursday, Friday and Saturday May 18th, 19th and 20th, with matinees daily starting Thursday.

THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1916.

THE WASHINGTON HERALD.

Na[illegible]nal—"The Birth of a Nation."

"[illegible]e Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffi[illegible] great photoplay spectacle of the ci[illegible] war and reconstruction days con[illegible]s to attract large audiences to the N[illegible]onal Theater, although next week w[illegible] be the fifth and last of its engage[illegible]t in this city.

[illegible]ealing with scenes easily within the [illegible]mory of many men, this picture has [illegible]oved its possession of a peculiar sway [illegible]er the emotions of all classes and de[illegible]ees of folk. Its love story, though of [illegible] type that has been seen in tales of [illegible]he civil war, has a strong emotional [illegible]ppeal.

The very capable cast, presenting the piece includes Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Mariam Cooper and Lillian Gish. To Walthall and Miss Marsh fall the chief histrionic scenes of the action. Lillian Gish, as the daughter of the unrelenting Stoneman, proves particularly lovely in the last climaxes, while Mariam Cooper is fascinating as the proud Southern girl.

CARLISLE, PA., WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1916.

CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS

Scene showing Lincoln Issuing the call for the first 75,000 men. One of the features of the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," to be shown here.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS HISTORICALLY CORRECT

Various Scenes Show Great Attention to Detail—Picture Beginning of New Art

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Opera House May 15 and 16 with a matinee Tuesday. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and Nature paints the backgrounds nd army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes like Ford's Theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimilies of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousan people and 3,000 horses appear in th picture, which cost approximatel, $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and raphsodies, again bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on he ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the Master's hail,"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well earned laurel of having created a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of 50 people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices which are 50 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

WASHINGTON POST: FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1916.

Coming to t

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin its fifth and last week at the National next Monday afternoon. The big film spectacle continues to attract large audiences, notwithstanding the fact that it is rounding out this week an entire month's run in the Capital. This remarkable record is due to the inherent worth of the entertainment constructed by D. W. Griffith.

CARLISLE, PA., FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1916.

MILES OF TRENCHES USED IN BATTLE PICTURE

Astounding Attention to Detail Makes War Scenes of "Birth of a Nation" of Remarkable Interest

D. W. Griffith is the most talked about, and probably the most sought after, man in America. He learned how to plan things, in the making of the 5,000 scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" or he would be lost. He gallops through the myriad-and-one business details of a theatrical success without turning a hair or developing the slightest case of "nerves." When the turmoil and the tumult dies, and the hours wax small, his refreshment is the dance or a friendly chat with a round table of chums.

It was said on the first night in New York that no soldier could have conceived and executed "The Birth of a Nation." As a Kentucky lad, the son of Brigadier General J. W. Griffith, he drank in the Civil war narratives greedily. As he grew up came the poet's vision of the entire struggle and of reconstruction days. In the prime of manhood awoke the genius to make it a reality.

While planning the battle of Petersburg, Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully as Kitchner in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceeded the soldiers to di gthe long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a moderen telephone switchboard. From it field wires ran to his various sub-generals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anchorism of field telephones in Civil war times.

Thus completely equipped as a modern Joffre or Von Kluck, Griffith saw everything and telephoned instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1864 pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are far from spick and span. Many of them are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags, even, have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Plainly war, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers. It is hard, grueling continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies are employed. There's everything from the far flung panorama of the general battle to the handgrips of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "indoor" productions.

MORNING. MAY 12. 1916

LEBANON PA. FRIDAY

AMUSEMENTS

BIRTH OF A NATION

There would be more horses than the present 3,000 shown in Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" if the European war had not broken out when this part of the big production was being completed. The foreign drain on American horseflesh is something the average citizen has no comprehension of. Griffith had to beg, borrow and buy the horses for his big scenes and they were corraled from all parts of the country. He found agents of the English, French, Italian and Russian governments competing with him for these horses and while he only rented them by the day the foreign demand was so great that many shrewd horsemen forced him to buy at war prices in order to complete his picture within a given time.

The Birth of a Nation will be shown at the Academy of Music, Lebanon, Thus, Fri, & Sat, May 18 19, & 20, with matinees daily starting Thursday.

EVENING TELEGRAM-TIMES, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1916.

BIRTH OF A NATION TO BE SHOWN SUNDAY AT SHATTUCK

"The Birth of a Nation," the wonderful photoplay, which has created a sensation wherever shown, was presented to a capacity house at the Shattuck last evening, and was thoroughly appreciated.

But slightly less wonderful than motion pictures themselves, this stupendous production comes as near being a classic as any that have yet been filmed, and its remarkable success and drawing power, apparently continues as strong as it was when the picture was first shown. It is truly a remarkable effort, and depicts in perfect details one of the most tumultuous and critical periods in the history of the United States.

The opening scenes are laid in the south, just previous to the opening of the Civil War, and portray life in a peaceful southern village at about the time Lincoln was elected president of the United States.

The scenes pertaining to the outbreak of the war are carefully presented, the ability of the director, David Griffith being displayed in the human touches which permeate the entire story. The many battle scenes which follow bring out some of the horrors of war in a startling manner.

The scenes in this part of the picture are far out of the ordinary. Like the entire production, special attention has been given to detail and the charge of the "Little Colonel's" command is realistic to a marked degree.

Following the scenes of the surrender of General Lee which are historically correct, the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theatre is graphically shown, the escape of the assassin Booth through the stage being out in detail.

For eight years after the close of the war the south was busy, rebuilding itself, and the second part of the picture dwells entirely on this subject. Following the assassination of Lincoln those in power at Washington advocate the policy of bringing the colored race to the front, on an equal basis with the white, with the result that trouble ensued.

The formation of the powerful Ku Klux Klan, by the southern wites, following a number of outrages by the power drunk negroes, is presented, and the way in which the whites deal out justice is shown to have been not only effective, but very successful. The methods of the organization in putting down outlawry has been the subject of many powerful gripping stories.

Special descriptive music has been written especially for the picture and the program by a seventeen piece orchestra added materially to the strength of the production.

So great has been the demand to see the picture that it is to be shown Sunday. The original engagement called for but Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week but arrangements were completed today to continue it Sunday.

BRIDGETON EVENING NE WS, FRIDAY, MAY 12, 1916.

HENRY WALTHALL in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

as the Southern Colonel and Ku Klux Captain, in D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, showing at the Auditorum, Vineland. m5-12 d 1t

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TONIGHT.

The attraction par excellence of the entire season will visit the Auditorium, Vineland, in the engagement there tonight and Saturday, matinee and night, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" with the original metropolitan production and company.

This is the mighty spectacle that employs motion picture, mechanical effects and music in a vast and thrilling presentation of Civil War and reconstruction days. It was doubly the sensation of New York, Chicago and Boston last spring and summer; first, because of its absolute artistic novelty and, second, because unsuccessful efforts were made to stop the productions on the part of those who opposed it as a picturization of "The Clansman."

The Baltimore Sun
Apr. 13, 1916.

VINELAND, N. J., SATURDAY, MAY 13,
DAILY REPUBLICAN, SATURDAY, MAY 13,
THE EVEN
HERALD, SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1916.

Opening Session Of The Board Of Movie Censors.

As Reported by Homo Candidus.

MEMBERS OF THE BOARD.

THE REV. MALACHI METHOD, appointed on the recommendation of the Rev. Tom Hare, the Hon. Oliver Metzerott, Bibb Mills, the Lord's Day Alliance and the Anti-Vice Society.

THE HON. BILL BRANNIGAN, appointed through the influence of the Hon. Frank Kelly and the Hon. William J. Ogden.

MISS PENELOPE PRUNES, backed by the Purity League and the Ladies' Federated Societies for the Uplift.

PRAYER by the Rev. Dr. W. W. Davis.

Touching addresses on the demoralization of our youth, by the Hon. Howard Bryant, author of the law, and the Hon. Oliver Metzerott, who saved its morality by insisting on a Republican having one of the $2,400 jobs.

Song, "Brighten Up the Movies!"

First Film Shown—Entitled "The Race."

SYNOPSIS.—Sportive young son of millionaire, engaged in gay doings at a roadhouse, is "pinched" in a raid. Disowned by "Dad"; goes to work in a garage; meets girl chauffeur; enters cross-country auto race to get money to pay an' old poker debt; girl enters to pay debt for her father, a mild and kindly embezzler many horrendous adventures; ends in a wedding and forgiveness.

Verdict.—Hero gambled and drank intoxicating liquor and was not punished sufficiently for his sins. Should have been portrayed roasting in brimstone. Women shown in low-necked attire, old man and woman shown in night clothes, girl chauffeur wore trousers, all very immodest and tending to evil thoughts. Rejected.

Mild dissenting opinion by the Hon. B. B.: "I don't see nothing wrong about it. Wasn't the feller and goil married all legal and right at the finish?"

Second Film—"Julius Cæsar." (From the well-known play by William Shakespeare.)

Verdict.—Tends to glorify murder and war, an evil influence on our young men who should be taught that their mothers did not rear them to be soldiers, but meek and pious church members. Men and women in the Forum shown with bare legs and otherwise indecently dressed, and women shown dancing, a sin so hearteningly denounced by the Rev. William Sunday. All very demoralizing. Rejected.

Miss P. P. concurs, but thinks the film very interesting in showing the customs and dress of heathen times.

Dissenting opinion by the Hon. B. B.: "What is this anyhow—a pink tea or a prayer meeting?"

Third Film — "Views in Buenos Aires."

Verdict.—Part of film not objectionable, but one scene shows a racetrack and a horse race actually going on with betting. This is wicked and demoralizing enough, but we are informed that these races actually take place on the Sabbath, which makes the film impossibly offensive. If all this is destroyed, and we can be assured that none of the other scenes were photographed on the Sabbath, we might be willing to approve the balance, although moving picture concerns ought not to go to heathen countries for pictures when hundreds of Chautauquas and Billy Sunday revivals might be photographed in this Christian land. Final decision reserved.

Dissenting opinion by the Hon. B. B.: "Gee! They wanta cut out the only hot stuff in the picture. I'd abeen willing to lay 3 to 1 on that little jockey in the green coat."

Fourth Film—"The Undraped Truth." Highly moral, if maudlin, allegory, showing how truth and righteousness are stoned and crucified by the wicked world. The Truth, surprisingly enough, is personified by a female, clothed only in her hair and her innocence. She appears on the screen.

Miss P. P. faints, and is revived by smelling salts.

The Rev. M. M. seems fascinated, and says "Stop it! Stop it!" but too low for the operator to hear.

Verdict.—Frightful! Rejected with scorn.

Concurring opinion by the Hon. B. B.: "Pretty bum stuff, for a fact, but I kinda liked the looks of that dame running through the park."

Fifth Film—"Charlie Chaplin on a Bat."

Charlie removes his apron, "swipes" a bottle, empties it, is kicked out of the saloon, lands on a policeman, kicks the "copper" in the midriff and he goes down—

[The Hon. B. B.: "Ha, ha! ho, ho!"]

Staggers down street, hat on crosswise, collides with pedestrian, who bats him over a hedge into a garden where a girl is picking posies.

[The Hon. B. B.—Oh, ha, ha, ha—ain't it great!]

Charlie makes "goo-goo eyes" at the girl.

[Miss P. P.—Disgusting brute!]

Girl apparently does not agree with Miss P. P. Charlie finally kicked out by irate father, etc, etc.

Verdict.—Drunkenness is here treated with disgusting levity. Peculiarly dangerous, in view of the prohibition election in the fall. Rejected.

Loud and profane dissenting opinion by the Hon. B. B. [unfit for publication.]

Sixth Film—"Charlie Chaplin in the Wrong Cell."

Charlie, full of "scats," raises a roughhouse in the hotel office, jams a cuspidor over clerk's head.

[The Hon. B. B.—"Ha, ha, ha, ha, oh, ha, ha!"]

Escapes from office, falls up steps, goes head first into a door, door flies open, lady in boudoir cap and night clothes leaps from bed shrieking.

[Miss P. P. screams and faints again.]

[The Rev. M. M. threatened with apoplexy from indignation.]

[The Hon. B. B., in a fit of laughter, nearly chokes.]

Verdict.—Shockingly immoral! What is to save our land from the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah if such vile pictures are shown to our children? Rejected.

The Hon. B. B. (disgusted)—"Whattell's the use? Say, you old maids, how inel do you expect to git any salary if you're going to tin can all the films, I'd like to know? Aw, I'm going down to Mike's and get 14 drinks—no use staying here. Billy Ogden told me there'd be some money in this, but I guess he was kiddin' me."

The Hon. B. B. retires and exhibits continue.

Result of first day's work: Twenty-three films examined, 20 rejected, 2 admitted on condition that they be expurgated, 1 called "Scenes in Palestine" accepted.

It is understood that the Hon. Bill Brannigan has applied for a position with the Oyster Navy or with the Board of Penal Control under "Bill" Lankford.

MAY 13, 1916.

BRIDGETON, N. J.,

Press

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TONIGHT.

Those who witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Auditorium, Vineland, last evening, are loud in their praises of the wonderful spectacle. True to its name, those who viewed it witnessed the birth of this glorious country as a united nation, following the horrors of the civil war which so nearly rent it asunder.

To see this great picture one lives through history as it was made by our forefathers.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" THRILLS BIG AUDIENCE

Most Stupendous of Motion Picture Productions Re-enacted Gettysburg Battle and Assassination of Lincoln Last Night at Auditorium—Film is of Necessity Sober and Sombre.

Easily the most stupendous dramatic and spectacular enterprise that the brain of man has yet visioned and realized, "The Birth of a Nation" that peer of motion pictures which thrilled city audiences for months was equally thrilling in its first production in Vineland last evening at the Auditorium. The engagement here ends with another production this evening.

Some of the "Facts About 'The Birth of a Nation'" are worthy of reproduction here in reviewing the gigantic film drama:

5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production $500,000; cities built up and then destroyed by fire; the biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted at Gettysburg; Ford's Theatre, Wasihngton, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln Tragedy; a series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000; Women's dresses used, 25,000 yards and Ku Klux costumes, 12,000 yards of cloth; Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000; Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches, thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is;" twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation," is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures the times that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached with levity. It is not a comedy, unless the word comedy be used as it was by Dante and Balzac. It is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature in those days. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle, comedy of the most delicate sort but comedy nevertheless.

A typical Southern home is shown where all is of good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A young Northern lad is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds there is pure comedy. A few months later they are destined to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is shown the young daughter of the old Southern family; almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Later is seen her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps to her death from a high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy nevertheless.

Again there is a scene in "the negro quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the amusement of the Northern visitors. They dance the shuffle, buck and wing, and other steps to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw."

When the Camerons are besieged in the cabin of two Union soldiers by a mob of frenzied negro soldiers, a time when tragedy looms over the scene like a dread spectre, the audience goes into convulsions of laughter when the faithful old negro mammy hits a negro soldier on the head with a billet of wood. And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shades of life in striking contract to the more sombre scenes. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times, for tragedy follows comedy ever.

A large orchestra added realism to the film with its accompaniment.

Ghostly Garbed Ghouls of Ku Klux Klan Are Shown in Film

"The Birth of a Nation" Depicts Members of Secret Society Who Rode to Rescue of People of South.

Probably the most thrilling scenes in David W. Griffiths' spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," are those in which the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the South.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonari in Italy, and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were the Know Nothings, who made their creed, "America for Americans." Somewhat like the Ku Klux Klan, the Vigilantes of California were organized to bring about law and order when the regular machinery of the law had broken down.

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as "an institution of chivalry, humanit, and patriotism.' In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tenn., in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the grand cyclops; his assistant was the grand magi; the marshall was the grand turk; the treasurer was the grand exchequer, and the guards were termed lictors.

As the sorrows of the South under the baneful reconstruction acts began to be unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popularized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because so many of the original members were descendants of Scottish clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scottish Highlanders was again used as a call to arms.

A similar order was started in Louisiana known as the Knights of the White Camelia. The shibboleth of both organizations was "The Supremacy of the White Race," and that has survived in the South to this very day. At first the Ku Klux Klan devoted their efforts to putting down disorder among the bad negroes. Generally all that was necessary was to play upon the credulity and superstition of that race. They would ride up to a negro's cabin in the dead of the night and one of the riders would call for a bucket of water, which he would drain to the bottom by using a concealed leather bag. He would then say that was the first drink he had had since he was killed at the Battle of Shilo. This is very effectively shown in "The Birth of a Nation."

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1916
SUNBURY DAILY ITEM,
SUNBURY, PENNSYLVANIA

BIRTH OF A NATION IS SURE TO PLEASE

Demand for seats for the production of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Chestnut street opera house next Wednesday and Thursday are very encouraging and indicate that a capacity audience will be present at all performances and that it will be difficult to secure seats on the day of the show.

This is the greatest historical spectacle that has been produced by David C. Griffith and the reputation it gained as a marvelous work of art on its previous appearance in Sunbury this season has aroused the curiosity of men and women in all walks of life and the management assures the public that this production will be enhanced by even greater music.

Press

MAY 13, 1916.

The neighborhood theatres, as they are called, would have had a meagre season but for the existence of the famous film "The Birth of a Nation," which has been seen in many theatres about New York during the present season.

"Theatre managers," said one of them yesterday, "have no reason to complain of the moving pictures which do as much for them as this sensational film play has done. Many a time it would have been necessary for the so-called combination playhouses about New York to shut their doors had this film not been available. For two months at a stretch the combination theatres in Brooklyn relied on this picture play, and there were many weeks in which the New York theatres would have had to close had there not been this substitute for a combination.

"So many companies closed their tours after short seasons on the road that there were not enough plays to supply the combination theatres that were to present new pieces every week. As it was, some of the least satisfactory of the pieces sent on the road were kept alive by playing several engagements in the theatres. When the managers refused to accept return engagements from the booking agencies there was no alternative but to close or accept 'The Birth of a Nation.' So it would be ungrateful for managers to complain of that sensation. It has kept many a playhouse open this season."

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1916
THE WILLIAMSPORT SUN

CAPACITY CROWDS TO SEE 'BIRTH OF NATION'

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles will be seen in one of its original productions at the Hippodrome beginning on Monday May 15 for three nights and three matinees. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicate that the pdayhouse will hold capacity crowds.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and event pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallent clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-dooors, where Nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle compaigns. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of the southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the Master's hall."—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gisgas as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stonemen; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant respectively. George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant-governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

LEBANON DAILY NEWS
LEBANON, PA.

Birth of a Nation Return Engagement

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in Academy of Music, Lebanon, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 13,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Ku Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thos. Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimistic are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" of the not henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay, so far as spectacular features are concerned. Thursday, Friday and Saturday, May 18, 19 and 20, with matinees daily starting Thursday.

CARLISLE, PA., SATURDAY

FAME IN DAY IS HER HISTRONIC EXPERIENCE

"Birth of a Nation" Intrdouces Mae Marsh to Stardom—Is Leader in Big Picture

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Opera House May 15 and 16 with a matinee Tuesday, is a prodigy of filmdom. In fact it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts who declare her to be the best "find" of the last 30 months in his wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spear holding with the "merry, merry" was at last promised her. While waiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility could queen it in a palace or play a "biddy" in a kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit with the possible exception of Henry Withall, playing the hero, had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention offhand a really great character actress in the photographic field, the chances are ten to one that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan! —Adv.

THE EVENING REPORT,
LEBANON, PA., MAY 13, 1916

Return Engagement of "The Birth of a Nation"

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the Hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil War and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed. "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Academy of Music, Lebanon, Thursday, Friday and Saturday May 18th, 19th and 20th, with matinees daily starting Thursday.

WASHINGTON TIMES, SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STAR

MERIAM COOPER.

WASHING[illegible] TIMES, [illegible]DAY, MAY 14, 1916.

Griffith Film Closing Local Theater Season at the National---Irvin Cobb Stories Dramatized by Bayard Veiller Into "Back Home" Comes to Poli's---Mary Shaw, in Bits from Shaw and Ibsen, Comes to Keith's

A MOST successful theatrical season is drawing to a close here in Washington. Although pictures, and local musical and dramatic events will be housed in the local major theaters, the retirement of the Griffith film to other fields will practically [illegible] the vale.

As long, however, as the Poli organization persists in presenting most engaging and late productions the chronic playgoer should no grieve.

This week the play founded on the Judge Priest stories which Irvin Cobb wrote for the Saturday Evening Post will be presented. Barnard Veiller who made the dramatization, has named it "Back Home."

Keith's offers Mary Page as the head liner this week. F. Y.

National: "The Birth of a Nation." Feature Film.

SEATS for the spectacular creation of D. W. Griffith, "The Birth of a Nation," at the National Theater continue to be sold a week in advance, although tomorrow will mark the beginning of the fifth of the phenomenal run of this great production.

"The Birth of a Nation" is so vital a production, and so historically illuminative that its appeal is universal. One contains an accurate idea of conditions prevailing in this country prior to the civil war, and through tremendous battle scenes, sees the significant changes leading to the bitter days of reconstruction, and to the actual making of a new nation.

As the picture is flashed upon the screen there is a wealth of illustrative melody from a symphony orchestra of thirty, and the impression that one takes from the theater is of a realistic presentation far surpassing one's own power of imagination.

The stirring tale of divided families and separated friends, which forms the story basis of the film, seems to possess unlimited power for eliciting the interest of spectators. Certainly it is the vehicle for the exhibition of a remarkably interesting series of pictures, all historically accurate, of the most critical period in the history of the United States.

Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper are the principals in a cast of great merit.

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

MAY 14. 1916.

DAILY STANDARD UNION:

TELLER'S SHUBERT.—With the two performances to-day at Teller's Shubert Theatre, "The Birth of a Nation," commences its last week in Brooklyn. The two performances next Sunday will positively be the last appearance of this famous film in this city. Just how popular this pictorial masterpiece has proved in the Bushwick section of this city is indicated by the fact that already some 60,000 people have attended the presentations of it at Mr. Teller's theatre, and this remarkable record of prosperity represents but a fraction of the enormous number of people who have witnessed the Griffith drama throughout the country. Both press and public everywhere have pronounced this film a real triumph in the art of the screen. The tremendous battle scenes, the thrilling encounters of the Ku Klux Klan, the great spectacular marches, the replicas of the most important historical events like the assassination of Lincoln and the surrender of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant, are but a part of the dramatic story.

MAY 11. 1916.

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE

NATION FILM'S LAST WEEK

Picture Opens Final Week at Shubert Tonight.

With the two performances today "The Birth of a Nation" at the Shubert commences its final week in this city. The engagement will end next Sunday evening. In the four weeks that this screen drama has appeared at this playhouse it has been seen by some 60,000 people. In a year of more or less harrowing experiences for stage entertainments the Griffith spectacle has rolled up a country-wide attendance that numerically is almost unbelievable. Practically every large and small city in the country has had its engagement of this photoplay, and welcomed it with capacity audiences twice daily.

Nothing quite like its battle scenes, replicas of historical happenings, clash of interests and appealing love stories have ever been presented. Even the score of this film drama is remarkable for its wealth of good music.

MAY 14. 1916.

THE NEW YORK PRESS

Standard.

"The Birth of a Nation" will begin the last of its four weeks' presentation in the Standard Theatre to-night. Two showings are given daily, and the large audiences that have been attracted by the spectacle go to prove its tremendous drawing qualities.

Tribune Mon 1-4-16

BROOKLYN DRAMA.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to hold the boards at Teller's Shubert Theatre.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES:

Birth of a Nation ~~Mexican War Pictu~~

SCENE FROM "A BIRTH OF A NATION" - National -

HENRY WALTHALL - National -

MIRIAM COOPER - National -

MARIAN COOPER IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" - NATIONAL

D.W. GRIFFITH DIRECTING A SCENE IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

WASHINGTON, D. C.,

SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1916.

THE CURRENT WEEK.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

Had it not been for the daily matinees inaugurated at the National Theater when the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" opened, it would have been impossible for the management to provide accommodation for the crowds clamoring for admission. It is hoped that through the continuance of these daily matinees in addition to the usual evening performances disappointment of those who have not yet seen this epoch-making film may be averted. Griffith lays stress upon his announcement that the spectacle will never be shown in any but the best theaters and at prices that prevail with high-class attractions. There will positively be no reduction of prices during the engagement in this city.

"The Birth of a Nation" is stupendous in every way. Eight months were spent in preparation of the spectacle. One of the high points in the presentation is in the graphic reproduction of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in Ford's Theater at Washington. This representation of a tremendously vital happening is said to be as nearly accurate as it is possible to achieve after the lapse of half a century. The interior of the theater is an exact reproduction of the auditorium and stage of that historic playhouse and every action of Lincoln as he sat in a box to watch the play, "Our American Cousin," is as described in authoritative accounts of the tragedy.

The battle scenes that are pictured are a triumph of realism and for thrills there could be no more stirring activities than those of the Ku Klux Klan during the reconstruction period at the close of the civil war.

The story itself is founded upon Thomas Dixon's world-popular novel, "The Clansman," and there is thus a strong element of romance as well as delightful leaven of comedy. It is doubtful if there has ever been a more able cast of players than is seen in this production, and with its orchestral music the show becomes the greatest triumph in the history of the theater.

With the matinees tomorrow will begin the fifth successful week of the unprecedented run of this globe-girdling spectacle.

CARLISLE, PA., MONDAY, MAY 15, 1916

ONE SCENE IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" COST $25,000

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Opera House, May 15 and 16, Tuesday matinee, he was confronted with a seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tones of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.—Adv.

MAY 15, 1916.

CARLISLE, PA.,

HALF MILLION IS COST OF BIG PHOTO PLAY

"Birth of a Nation" is Unique Spectacle—History Faithfully Followed in Making

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a two day engagement May 15 and 16 with a matinee Tuesday. The first-class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomottox and Ford's theatre, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion pictures, which took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an emitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions, and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1870, the period occupied by the Civil war and reconstruction. Suggested by Robert Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius. The enormous popularity achieved by it in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles has been repeated in all the towns of the route, and the prospects are that it will crowd the local theatre at every performance.—Adv.

CLEARFIELD, PA.
May 15, 1916

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" is due for an engagement of two days at the Opera House commencing Monday, May 22, when D. W Griffith's mighty spectacle will be offered for the first time here. This is the great attraction which has broken all records in New York City and has also to its credit record runs in Boston, Chicago and elsewhere. It takes four cars to transport the big organization. In the story proper 18.000 people and 3,000 horses are seen. The story tells in thrilling detail the relationship that the rise and fall of slavery in this country bore tot he making of American history. It ist he great est achievement ever seen upon the American stage. Seats are now on sale.

A great Big Feature

"The Birth of a Nation" which will be presented at the OperaHouse House on May 22 and 23 is the most stupendous spectacle that has ever been presented to the public. It took over a year to make it and the cost was over 500,000 dollars. 18,000 people and 3000 horses were used in the various scenes which show all the decisive battles of the Civil War.

May 15 16
LEBANON PA
Times

BIRTH OF A NATION

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation", at the Academy of Music, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Map 18, 19 and 20, is of necessity sober and sombre. It represents a critical peri d in the history of the States. It pictures the times that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached with Levity. It is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and here was little of a comic nature in those days. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle, comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

A typical Southern home is shown where all is of good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A young Northern lad is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds there is pure comedy. A few months later they are destined to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each others arms.

Again there is a scene in "the negro quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the amusement of the Northern visitors. They dance the shuffle, buck and wing, and other steps to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw".

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shades of life in striking contrast to the more sombre scenes. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" Such a truthful picture of the times, for tragedy follows comedy and

MAY 15, 1916.

THE GLOBE AND COMMERCIAL ADVE

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to be the attraction at the Standard, as does "Where Are My Children" at the Globe Theatre. This is the last week at these theatres, however. At the Forty-fourth Street Theatre "Ramona" remains.

MONDAY, MAY 15, 1916
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
GAZETTE AND BULLETIN

Theatrical

At the Hippodrome.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Hippodrome of three nights and three matinees today. There will be two performances daily at 8:15 and 2:30 p. m. Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York city where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles. It covers a wide range of American hictory and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated in the Civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadside. The decisive battles of the Civil war are reproduced as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative.

MAY 14, 1916
SUNDAY STAR.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Limitations of the Stage.—Mu might be said upon the subject of t limitations of the stage. It is a sma world with only three walls and an i different ceiling, a window or a door two, maybe as many as six doors, the modern farce is to be produc Withal a small confined circle so in mate by virtue of its having only th walls instead of four that of late theaters have been built with a sma capacity in order that the auditors m be in closer touch with the players.

The pulling down of one wall did secure quite the intimacy desired w the modern play of few characte Where there is a mob, a thous ways are devised for its exit but w but three or four players it is the m difficult thing in the world to get t on and off the stage. The auditor intimately acquainted with them watches their every move. And we have the limitations of the st The playwright has not had the field of the novelist or the story e until the coming of the phot As in the novel, the "cut-back" thing in the photoplay. This trick of dropping a character in midst of a situation, rushing b an earlier event and taking up a act of characters. Such a thing not be done in the legitimate dra time would have to tear down the wood work and the iron and the steel with the "cut-back" the limitations are fewer.

Then came "The Birth of a Nation." And here the stage is limitless, infinite There is no woodwork, no steel, no iron. The travail of a whole world being reborn is shown within three hours.

National.

At the National remains of the engagement of the D. W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the National. This production has just completed its fourth week in this city, beating all records for length of run and for receipts. Seats for all of the remaining performances are on sale at the box office. The photoproduction will not be offered in this city again before next season.

There are many elements entering into the success of "The Birth of a Nation" apart from the perfection of its photography and the excellence of the acting shown in this highly dramatic and tensely human story. Among them is the illuminative orchestral score. This music, played by a large orchestra of the best musicians, includes folk tunes, dance measures, national anthems, old war songs, selections from the works of the greatest composers, and in addition some really notable compositions by Joseph Carl Breil, who synchronized the music and acting.

The players selected by Griffith for "The Birth of a Nation" include Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Mariam Cooper, Ralph Lewis, Wallace Reid, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken and others, hold names among the devotees of film drama.

The wonderful battle scenes, filmed under Griffith's direction, never been surpassed in any screen presentation.

Poli Players Support Spoken Drama Week Given Over to Films, W the "Yellow Ticket." Morto Sensational Success. Griffith's Fi of Reconstruction Period to Shown for Two Weeks at Nation First Mexican War Pictures to Shown at Belasco.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" is at last in our midst, after h favored almost every other city with its presence.

It opens at the National Theater tomorrow night at for a run which is as yet indefinite, though at least two weeks have promised.

Comment on this film has been so extensive in the press that it is necessary to introduce it further. Opinions and impressions more m fold in number than there is space to speak of here, will be undoubt supplied by those who see the film. Elsewhere in this paper, a slight tempt has been made to give a few of the facts concerning the product and producer.

The Mexican war films which are to be shown at the Belasco The are said to be the first to be exhibited which give actual scenes fro regions which Villa has harassed.

In conjunction with the films, a lecture with pictures will be giv man L. Sper, an American Boy Scout, whose experiences in E said to be most interesting.

d by the Poli organizati

May 16/16
Carlisle Pa

THE EVENING SENTINEL

PACKED HOUSE SEES GREAT SHOW

Birth Of A Nation Attracts Valle Patrons

Before an audience that packed the opera house in Birth of a Nation was produced in all its spectacular and gorgeous features and it pleased all who saw it. Before the show began the doors of the gallery had to be closed. No more seats were sold. The orchestra adds a great deal to the enjoyment of the attraction. It plays splendidly and is a feature that probably could not be dispensed with. This afternoon another large audience saw the great production and this evening another large audience will gather. Manager Hitt of the opera house is deserving of the thanks of the community in general for bringing here this stupendous attraction and judging from the patronage his enterprise is appreciated. People of the valley towns as far west as Greencastle are among the ticket purchasers for the Birth of a Nation in Carlisle.

May 16/16

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE

WAR FILM STILL THRILLS

Griffith's Spectacle Begins Last Week at Shubert.

The "Birth of a Nation" began the second and last week of its latest showing in Brooklyn at the Shubert Theater last night, and judging by the well-filled theater, the film is far from being a played-out attraction as far as Brooklyn audiences are concerned. The film is of peculiar timeliness at present, picturing as it does the grim and sordid details of war in all their horrors. It presents a striking and forceful argument in favor of adequate preparation to prevent any unnecessary prolongation of a conflict at arms, if such a conflict should come.

The film, however, has one other justification for its continued appeal to the public—and that is its power of vitalizing for the mass of the public eras and events that would otherwise be appreciated in their full significance only by the students of our history. This film has done much to establish the contention of educators, that the moving picture is one of the great mediums of education devised in the Twentieth Century. Films like the "Birth of a Nation" are to the moving picture industry what the historical romances of Scott were to the novel—a combination of history and romance. And like the novels of Scott, films of this character will always have an appeal to the public, no matter how often repeated.

Brooklyn Citizen

MAY 16, 1916.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Is Now Playing Its Last Week at the Shubert.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," entered upon the third and last week of its run at the Shubert Theatre last evening, where it is being witnessed by large audiences. Despite the fact that this picture was shown at this house before, the theatre has been taxed to its utmost at every performance.

The picture, which depicts life in the South before and after the Civil War, is one of the most wonderful ever staged. The battle scenes are alone worth paying the admission to see. In the leading male role, Henry B. Walthall, the popular screen star, is seen to good advantage, while Lillian Gish is dainty and sweet in the leading female role that of a Southern belle. The rest of the cast is in the hands of capable players.

MAY 16, 1916.

THE NEW YORK PRESS

[illegible] other attractive features.

"The Birth of a Nation" is in its fourth and last week in the Standard Theatre.

May 16/16

GAZETTE AND BULLETIN.
WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

BIRTH OF A NATION DREW BIG CROWD

First Two Exhibitions Yesterday Were Largely Attended at the Hippodrome Theatre

Two large audiences witnessed the production of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Hippodrome theater yesterday afternoon and last evening. The afternoon show was well attended and last evening nearly every seat was occupied. The advance sale for today and tomorrow is unusually large, but the management stated that there are many choice seats left. Many people came here from out-of-town to witness this greatest of all motion pictures. The Epoch Producing corporation, of New York, under whose management this picture is being shown, carries with it a large orchestra of twenty pieces. The music during the three hours of picture was highly appreciated.

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation" has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions. They sink into insignificence besides this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 cavalry, 200,000 details the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monumental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business first class prices in the principal theaters of the country. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce, cost 500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," it has a grandly epical quality of its own which stamps it as a masterpiece of genius.

THE EVENING LEADER
CORNING, N. Y.

TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1916.

BIRTH OF A NATION IS THE HEIGHT OF REALISM

"The Birth of a Nation," is worth $2 but you don't have to pay the top price to see it.

As a moving picture it isn't one. It is too real to be a picture.

There is one scene in it—the assassination of President Lincoln, that for sheer realism has never been equaled. You feel as though you were an eye witness of that crime—as though you could give the personal testimony of an eye witness.

As an exposition of experience some parts of the south were subjected to, immediately after the war—scenes based upon historic facts—it gives us in the north a vivid understanding of things that time and distance have cheated us of.

The music which accompanies every incident is in its way just as wonderful as the events filmed. You are swept through the riot of battle until you become a man with a musket yourself.

As an example of what war is—as an exponent of preparedness—"The Birth of a Nation" is more than a book, more than a sermon, more than an oration. It is the experience of war itself.

Every American citizen should see "The Birth of a Nation." It will be at Corning Opera House tonight and tomorrow matinee and night.

SUNBURY DAILY ITEM, Pa

COME TO BLOWS OVER "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Two congressmen came to blows following an argument over the suppression of "The Birth of a Nation" in a Washington hotel. A United Press despatch to The Item from Washington follows:

"Arguing over whether "The Birth of a Nation" should be suppressed, Representative Sam Nicholls, of South Carolina, and Representative Lehlbach, of Newark, N. J., came to blows night before last in a local hotel, it became known today.

"Nicholls, who is a young militia officer, admitted today that he had slapped Lehlbach, but said that the latter and he had fixed up their differences and are friends again."

288

HISTORICAL FEATURES OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

David W. Griffith, creator of the first 12 film show, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the National Theater, has given in that masterpiece the only theatrical representation of the surrender of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant. The picture shows Grant and Lee in the Wilmer-McLean house at Appomattox. Grant is seen in fatigue dress, travel-stained, and Lee is in full dress, ready, as it were, for the historical painter.

"Gen. Lee," runs the story, "signed the papers by means of quill and inkstand he had borrowed from a young officer's kit, for, as it happened, there were no writing materials in the Wilmer-McLean home." This historical fact is for the first time brought out by Griffith in his play. Lee then handed the document to an aide, who placed it in Grant's hand. The two generals thereupon arose, met in the center of the room and shook hands. There have been several paintings of the historic scene, but never, it is believed, had a stage representation of the living figures and action been made before Griffith's putting it into the present play."

Griffith, by the way, is the son of Brig. Gen. Jacob Ward Griffith, who fought on Lee's side. It was in Louisville that the foremost motion-picture director of the country was born, fifteen years after Lee's surrender. The son took up acting as a profession and made his debut in a Louisville stock company conducted by Oscar Eagle, who is also prominent today in the motion-picture world. Afterward Griffith went to New York and found engagements as "juvenile." One of these was under the management of George H. Brennan, who was a newspaper writer in Boston twenty years ago, and who managed the company that appeared in the Dixon play, "The Clansman." It was this play in part that was used as the basis of "The Birth of a Nation."

But Griffith, it seems, was all the time straining to do big things. He wrote a play called "A Fool and the Girl," which James K. Hackett produced in Washington. But as success did not come, the restless Kentuckian turned to the newspaper field and wrote several short stories for the Sunday supplement of one of the New York dailies. The editor suggested to Griffith that some of his offerings would make good scenarios for the "movies." Griffith was impressed at the suggestion, "rattled off" a few photo-plays and waited for results. By the time two of them were accepted he was nearly on his uppers, and so the Biograph people, who were to produce the plays, gave the author a job at $5 a week, acting before the camera. This $5-a-week job was the making of Griffith, for by and by one of the Biograph directors fell sick, and Griffith took the sick man's place. Forthwith Griffith began to submit new ideas. He introduced the "close up" or enlarged portrait of the principal character in each scene—and you will see much of this in "The Birth of a Nation." He brought out the "cut back" or "insert," which visualizes the thoughts of the charcters. He specialized in the reproduction of classic stories. The company met the novelties with some misgivings, but Griffith's work spelled success, nevertheless, and before long he was the Biograph's chief director.

A year and a half ago he went over to the Mutual Film Company as director-in-chief, with a carte blanche contract. Today he is one of the most famous men in the motion-picture world and he is one of the three great producers who form the Triangle Film Corporation.

In Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" there were over 120,000 feet of film when the cameras finished their work in the West and the South, but the process of selection, which plays such a telling part in these productions, has reduced this to about 12,000 feet. The spectacle, as it stands now, takes about two and three-quarters hours to present. The first presentations was given in Los Angeles. The pictures now are to be seen in a number of the leading cities of the United States and at every theater in which the spectacle may be seen there are crowds at each presentation.

porque son las cualidades ... "Rosario", riqueza ... y bellezas de dicción.

El asunto ... bien ... aunque ... el tercer cuadro se pueden hacer algunas objeciones; por ejemplo el olvido que tiene el protagonista por la vida de Rosario, desde que fué abandonada por él; en el segundo acto hay emocion y la exposicion, en el primero, tiene mas de pintoresco que de claridad. En la reduccion se han perdido algunos aspectos de la pieza—sobre todo en el diálogo—que justificaban la actitud de los personajes.

La interpretacion correcta y la señora Membrives evidenció sus buenas condiciones de actriz, sobre todo en una escena del segundo cuadro que arrancó aplauso unánime. El público salió satisfecho.

—

ODEON

—

Amalia Isaura

—

Despues de haber escuchado anoche á Amalia Isaura en sus canciones epigramáticas, podemos decir que es esa artista renovadora del género que Repide hizo se llamara tonadilla, siguiendo antes á sus amores las antiguas canciones que á la ...dad. Estábamos un poquito fatigados de oir canciones rumánas y politanas con letras españolas, las traducciones, couplets de Lebert, de Mayol ó Fregson, mal adaptados. Y anoche Amalia Isaura ... letrillas antiguas, de Trillo, Cervantes, Figueroa, Breton de los Herreros, llenas de gracia y espíritu de tonadilla. Son canciones burlescas la mayoría.

El maestro Vives las ha musicado con verdadera devocion. No es su música esa de las coupleteras, música fácil al oido, de ritmo insistente, es un comentario á la letra, cuidado, para que la letra brille claramente; son juguetes lindísimos. Otros ya habia intentado esta clase de música, y en "Don Lucas del Cigarral" tiene trozos que son muy ...os.

Pero estas canciones necesitan un ...ento interpretativo como el de Amalia Isaura. De otro modo parecen monótonas y lánguidas. Hace falta matizarlas y subrayarlas ... por palabra, vivirlas intensamente, cantarlas con esa media voz ... esa dicción clarísimas que constituyen uno de los méritos de Amalia Isaura.

El triunfo fué completo. El público aplaudió con entusiasmo y hizo que se repitieran algunas canciones, entre ellas "La presumida", que es ... las que más gustaron.

ARTE NACIONAL

—

La reunion que anoche se celebró en la Asociacion de la Crítica á iniciacion del señor García Velloso y celebrando el éxito de "Mamá Culebra", estuvo muy bien concurrida. Asistieron á la simpática fiesta de hermanamiento autores, críticos, literatos y buen número de artistas, entre ellos Amalia Isaura, Dell'Acqua, Lola Membrives, Parravicini, señora Rico, Aldo Toniu...

LILLIAN GISH, LA HEROINA DE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

La mas hermosa actriz del mundo cinematográfico interpreta el papel de protagonista en el gran espectáculo de D. W. Griffith Mucho del entusiasmo que ha despertado "The Birth of A Nation", el grandioso espectáculo de D. W. Griffith, que empieza una temporada en el teatro de la Opera, el sábado próximo, se debe á la gentil manera de representar de la señorita Lillian Gish, en el papel de Elsie Stoneman, la heroina. La señorita Gish es una jóven de tipo rubio de la "aureola de oro", que se presta para la belleza fotográfica. Es singularmente graciosa y su carácter nunca pierde su interés y espiritualidad. Sus ojos delante de la cámara oscura, son singularmente expresivos y su manera de representar dice sinceridad así como verdadero encanto femenino.

Tal vez la más poética escena de todo el drama es aquella en que ella y Henry Walthall, desahogan el sentimiento de sus corazones por el medio de un antiguo símbolo de Venus, la paloma. No atreviéndose en este punto, por cortesía, á besarse, depositan sus cariños alternativamente al ave. Otra escena en la cual la señorita Gish desarrolla su exquisito encanto, es una en la que juega con un gatito con tanta gracia y significante acariciamiento, que el auditorio, invariablemente, experimenta una deliciosa impresion de simpatía. La señorita Gish contrasta fuertemente en "The Birth of A Nation" con la hermosa morocha, la señorita Miriam Cooper, que representa la otra heroina de la parte Sur de los Estados Unidos.

La pequeña heroina del Norte nació en el Norte, como la señorita Cooper en el Sud, su estado de nacimiento es el de Ohio. En su temprana juventud ella y su hermana Dorothy, tambien famosa en el mundo cinematográfico, vivieron en Missouri.

La señorita Gish, siendo casi niña, ganó fama en la escena como bailarina y formó parte en el ballet de una produccion de Sarah Bernhardt. Ha sido presentada al señor D. W. Griffith, productor de "The Birt of A Nation", por Mary Pickford.

El señor Griffith instantáneamente reconoció su talento y rápidamente la promovió de un papel á otro hasta que finalmente la hizo célebre en su papel actual de la heroina del Norte en el "The Birth of A Nation".

THE CLEARFELD PROGRESS,

EVENING, MAY 15, 1916.

ON THE SCREEN

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant aond Lee affixed at the bottom.

The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith during his staging on "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox," one of his striking historical fac-simile scenes in Griffith's motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Opera house Monday and Tuesday, May 22 and 23. General Grant is correctly represented in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, whilst General Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress. "My aim," said Mr. Griffith, in speaking of such scenes recently, "has been to introduce as little acting as possible. I have tried to be accurate in every detail and keep away from theatricaljam." Seats now on sale.

THE WILLIAMSPORT SUN
TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1916.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

That Williamsport is fortunate in being privileged to see "The Birth of a Nation," was the judgment of all who saw the first performance yesterday afternoon. In the first place it is the most spectacular thing ever achieved in film production. Words fail to describe such scenes as the burning of Atlanta, the meetings and the night rides of the Ku Klux Klan, and several of the battles which took place. They are simply magnificent, while the music played by a large orchestra adds to the interpretation of each picture.

Then too, there is another side to this picture. The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study, which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers, renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children or were still unborn during these years. A child can certainly learn more true history and get more atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill, than by weeks of study in the classroom. Some objection has been made at times by people of the colored race in regard to this picture. The criticism is made that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light, and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity. Rather it represents the negro not as he is now, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him, and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it, and was as ignorant as a baby of how to use it. In fact it is a compliment to the negro of today, and when in closing we are informed of the thousands of these people who are in college, are found in all professions, in newspaper work, owning homes and farms, and ending with pictures of the wonderful Hampton College, then what they have accomplished in a short time is almost unbelievable.

The play is so stupenduous it is almost impossible to discuss each part. The reason for showing the picture is given as "the right to picture the dark side of wrong as well as the right side of virtue."

It is clearly stated that there is no desire to reflect on any race or people, that rather facts are given in order to open the eyes of all people. It is a strong protest against war, showing that war does not close with the ending of hostilities, but goes on and on for years, during the period of reconstruction. That men do not want to fight, that in their own hearts there is no bitterness, was shown over and over again, in these pictures. When pals, one fighting for the north, the other for the south die with their arms around each other, one realizes there is no enmity there. That war hits women is clearly shown. There is nothing thrilling in the pictures of war. It is depicted in its true light. The battle scenes, which Mr. Griffith depicts, are

LEBANON DAILY NEWS
LEBANON, PA.

LAST CHANCE TO SEE BIRTH OF A NATION

Tonight will be the last time Lebanon audiences will be given the chance of seeing D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which closes its sixth performance engagement at the Academy. Both balconies of the theatre were taxed to their capacity last evening, the seats being sold out early; there were however a number of very good seats to be had on the first floor, but for tonight there promises to be a full house.

Those who have seen this magnificent picture cannot find words to express their satisfaction with the wonderful display and admirable music that accompanies it, played by a symphony orchestra of twenty men, who seem to be a part of the play itself. They at all times assist in keeping the interest in the picture at the highest pitch and their work has come in for a big amount of the praise.

The picture is both instructive and interesting, and carries through it two of the prettiest love stories ever told; the love of a Southern girl and her brother for a Northern gentleman and his sister. The action of the play brings tears one moment and ripples of laughter, the next. All in all, it is generally admitted by all who witnessed it to be the greatest attraction of its kind ever shown here.

From the quiet and happy life of the country before the Civil War, one is carried on through the early days of the rebellion, through the great strife itself, showing some of the decisive battles, and Sherman's March to the Sea, and the burning of Atlanta. The tragedy of the death of Abraham Lincoln is next revealed in startling manner, not only his assassination, but the terrible consequences of his death, to the poor whites of the Southern States. From an historical standpoint the picture is even more wonderful than as a dramatic spectacle. All the reproductions, of famous doing during that period, that are attempted in this picture, seem to be exact according to history.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the production from a dramatic standpoint is the period it shows, following the declaration of peace between the North and South. The rebuilding of the Southern plantations and cities following the rebellion furnishes considerable fuel for thought and action. The formation of the Ku Klux Klan and their work is perhaps the most exciting part of the performance, assisted by the orchestra. Those who have not seen this picture should not fail to make a special effort to witness it for its last appearance here this evening. It is really the most wonderful picture of its kind ever attempted and well worth coming miles to see

EVENING REPORT, LEBANON, PA. MAY 1[illegible]

MISS MAE MARSH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE ACADEMY

THE WASHINGTON POST
TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1916.

National—"The Birth of a Nation."

About five weeks ago there were whisperings and wagging of heads over the coming of "The Birth of a Nation." There was some opposition to its happening here, and some wiseacres predicted that such a thing would never come to pass. Opposition came principally from those who had never seen the production. Now it is said a hundred thousand Washingtonians have seen it, and no longer is there an opposing voice. People fear usually what they do not know; like the pickaninnies in "The Birth of a Nation," who take fright at the white children wrapped up in a sheet. The blissful ignorant are the conventional always—they hate a new twist in life, any old thing grafted upon a new stem.

Now when "The Birth of a Nation" comes again it will come upon rubber heels; there will be no opposing voice. It is now an old story. The blissful ignorant will be looking for other lands to conquer. And in the meantime this masterpiece in film art goes serenely on at the National, closing at that playhouse this coming Saturday night. Other attractions have come and gone at the other theaters, but this entertainment is still the vogue. For the wise ones who have not seen it a hint is sufficient. Go. To miss it is to give your neighbor the advantage.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES.
TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1916.

NATIONAL.

The record for continuous performance of a theatrical attraction in Washington has been broken by the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which began its fifth week at the New National Theater yesterday. Apparently there is no diminution of interest if the size of the audiences which attended the two performances can be any measure.

The film spectacle seems to have unusual capacity for making people return to see it again and again. The big theme of the play and the mass of incident that go to make it up seem almost impossible to grasp at the first sitting, and persons who have seen it once return again to watch for and note particularly scenes that impressed them in the first performance, but which the rapid change of scene and incident made impossible to watch closely.

It is understood that the run of "The Birth of a Nation" will close on Saturday night, closing the season of the National Theater.

WASHINGTON TIMES.
TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1[illegible]

The record for continuous performance of a theatrical attraction in Washington has been broken by the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which began its fifth week at the New National Theater yesterday. Apparently there is no diminution of interest if the size of the audiences which attended the two performances can be any measure.

The film spectacle seems to have unusual capacity for making people return to see it again and again. The big theme of the play and the mass of incident that go to make it up seem almost impossible to grasp at the first sitting, and persons who have seen it once return again to watch for and note particularly scenes that impressed them in the first performance, but which the rapid change of scene and incident made impossible to watch closely.

It is understood that the run of "The Birth of a Nation" will close on Saturday night, closing the season of the National Theater.

THE EVENING STAR.
TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1916.

New National.

"The Birth of a Nation," in its fifth and closing week, still commands interest at the New National Theater, where last evening the applause expressed the same interest at various stages of the big photo-production as that which marked the opening night. The drama is not always a rigidly faithful reflex of the truth of history, because the play must supply a thrill or a shudder here and there that strict truth might hardly justify, but there is much of truth in the photoplay pictures of the great war that ultimately brought a

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 16, 1916
LEBANON DAILY NEWS, LEBANON, PA.

HENRY WALTHALL AS THE "LITTLE COLONEL" IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE ACADEMY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY and SATURDAY, THIS WEEK

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 17, 1916.

FRANKLIN REPOSITORY, CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

BIRTH OF A NATION

Not Even Poor Imitation of History but a Wilful Perversion Says a Greencastle Writer.

Horace G. Kauffman, Greencastle, saw "Birth of a Nation" in Chambersburg and records his public protest in a long letter to the press, part of which we reprint:—

Soon after being graduated from Dartmouth College, Thaddeus Stevens left his home at Peacham, Vt., and went to York, Pa., where he was a teacher in an academy; later a student and then practitioner of the law. He was near Mason and Dixon's line and repeatedly saw fugitive slaves, like hunted rabbits, dart over that historic boundary, that "scar of honor across the brow of our country," only, perchance, to be taken into custody by the officers of the law and held for delivery back into the hands of their pursuing slave masters, their hope to reach Canada and freedom crushed, and their treatment on their return made cruel in the extreme. Fleeing from bondage under the stars and stripes, emblem of democracy, and attaining liberty under the banner of St. George, ensign of monarchy, was a contradiction in government and a travesity on justice in a republic over which the young attorney became increasingly incensed.

Later, when elected to congress, Thaddeus Stevens fought slavery with all the logic, satire and wit at his command, and without quarter, while at the same time he befriended individuals of the servile race wherever and whenever he could. When the slave oligarchy, having taken up the sword, had perished by the sword, the Great Commoner, who throughout the years of the war had been the leader of his party in congress, and of whom one can say that he leaned upon a cane, being lame, Mr. Lincoln leaned upon him, declared that the slave states, having taken themselves out of the Union upon their own initiative, should be received back into the family of loyal states only after they had been sufficiently reconstructed by adequate punishment. In this we know he was unnecessarily and unwisely harsh. And here, I take it, is the chief reason, at this late day, for this novelist of that one time misguided section of the Union to stoop to the ignoble task of slurring the character and damaging the reputation of the dead. I believe that such mendacity, conceived in the sin and born in the iniquity of sectional hatred that was fast passing into forgetfulness among all good citizens, then put forward under the guise of historical fiction and followed by a play for the moving-picture screen, on which the lies of the story are visualized, should be resented, and that they who resent it are doing a patriotic service.

In this case, I am further induced to assail this mendacious writer, who is willing to drag his country's history and the biography of a statesman down to the low plane of attempting to revive political prejudice and sectional hate, by the fact that Thaddeus Stevens represented in congress the district which included my birthplace, where I recall hearing my father, who knew Mr. Stevens personally, often speak of the Great Commoner, and always in terms of admiration and respect, as did all other abolitionists and Republicans there of whom I have recollection.

(Continued on Page Five)

ATTACKS BIRTH OF NATION.

(Continued from Page One).

There were those, especially southern members of congress, who declared Stevens a dangerous radical and denounced him as a troublemaker because of the fight he made against slavery and the slave regime. Slander was sometimes his portion, as it was of other leaders of the time, including Abraham Lincoln. It must be said that Stevens dealt sledgehammer blows, that his argument was able and his invective bitter, and that he was as keen for vexing the slave-owing aristocrats as is an acid for an alkali.

But while Thaddeus Stevens is singled out for slur and innuendo, there are others of the north who are assailed and caricatured; none of the south. In the surrender at Appomatox, General Grant, with a cigar uptilted in the corner of his mouth, is represented in a swaggering attitude before General Lee. Yet we know that Grant did not take Lee's sword, that he offered 25,000 rations for the immediate use of the famishing Confederates, whom he permitted to take their horses to their homes, because, as he said, they would "need the horses to put in their crops." The assassination of President Lincoln is described as if it had been a bit of pretty stage play, instead of hideous and awful fact, with no word of condemnation for either the deed or the assassin, while the following chapter of the novel is entitled "A Nation in a Frenzy." The entire story is false and misleading from the standpoint of history, and so meager and puerile from the standpoint of literature, as to be unfit to be read. The book had but a limited sale.

Return Engagement of "The Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" will be at the Academy three days, starting Thursday, May 18, as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES: WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1916.

PLAYS A LEADING ROLE IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

LILLIAN GISH.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer.

They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importing of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across bloodstained plains. The human note weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded. Seat sale now.

DUAL LOVE AFFAIR IN GRIFFITH FILM

"Birth of a Nation" Is Not All War and Turmoil and War's Alarms.

All is not war, nor war's alarms in "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith spectacle now at the National Theater. All is not turmoil and confusion. There are two perfectly developed love stories during the action of the play; love stories that appeal more than do the average tales, to the grown-ups of this generation.

And it is because the lovers were contemporary with the fathers and mothers of the lovers of today, and one can see that the style of lovemaking has not changed with the years; its sweet song is sung in the same key and to the same accompaniment.

The first note of the song is heard by Margaret Cameron and Phil Stoneman before the call to arms has been sounded in the land, and all is serene in the little Southern home to which has come the young Northerner to visit his college chum. The haughty little Southern beauty wins his heart, and when he is summoned home to take his place in the great struggle that has begun between North and South, he takes with him the heart and troth of the beautiful Southern girl. It is years ere that troth can be plighted at the altar. In the meantime each passes through perils of war, but after the terrible days of Reconstruction are over and peace reigns supreme the couple finds happiness.

The love of the "Little Colonel" and Elsie Stoneman begins at the Army Hospital in Washington, where Colonel Cameron has been taken as a prisoner of war, apparently mortally wounded. He is brought back to health by the careful nursing of Elsie and falls a victim to her piquant charm.

And while no troth is plighted at the time between the little Northern girl and the Little Colonel, there is an understanding between them that when the fearful struggle that is separating the States, as well as lovers, is over, they will join their lives as their hearts are already joined.

Ball Room Seen in The Birth of a Nation At the Academy Thus Fri. and Sat. This Week Matinee Daily

THE EVENING REPORT, LEBANON, PA., MAY 17, 1916.

THE EVENING REPORT, LEBANON, PA., MAY 17, 1916.

BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

LEBANON PA. WEDNESDAY MORNING. MAY 17. 1916

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

The one great theatrical sensation of New York, Boston and Chicago. "The Birth of a Nation", will be presented at the Academy again on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

The first half of the D. W. Griffith spectacle unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpetbagger-negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku Klux Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and Gray, suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman". A complete metropolitan production is to be on view here. It comprises a company of 50 expert technicians, a complete symphony orchestra, and two baggage cars of effects. Seats now on Sale.

WASHINGTON TIMES WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1916

Elimination of Villain Would Destroy Drama, Says Griffith

Photoplay Producer Sends Frank Views on Censorship to Members of Congress.

RIDICULES PROPOSED LAW

Declares Captious Orders of Censors Would Destroy Art of the Picture.

David Wark Griffith, who is by way of being the most authoritive person in these United States regarding the production of motion pictures, declares that if the principles of censorship proposed in the national censorship bill before Congress, had been suggested for literature there would have been no Shakespeare, no Dickens, no Thackeray, no Dumas, no Cervantes, no Hugo, no Ibsen, and certainly no Maeterlinck.

Griffith is the author of an anti-censorship pamphlet which has, within the past two or three days, been placed in the hands of every member of Congress and most of the people who will have the most to do with the censorship legislation that is proposed.

The producer of "The Birth of the Nation" and a hundred other films uses sarcasm and keen analysis in his summing up of the evils of censorship and his prediction of what will happen. Books and newspapers will be the next to feel the weight of the humors of people whose business in life it is to attend to other people's business.

Advocates Talk Nonsense.

"It is painful to listen to the nonsense about censorship from the people who are behind it," Mr. Griffith writes.

"These people would not have us show the glories and beauties of the most wonderful moral lesson the world has ever known—the life of Christ—because in that story we must show the vice of the traitor Judas Iscariot.

"Had the modern censors existed in past ages, and followed out their theories to a logical conclusion, thewe would have been written no Iliad of Homer; there would not have been written for the glory of the human race that grand cadence of uplift called the Bible; there would have been no Goethe. There would have been no thrilling, beautiful dramas given us as the grandest heritage of the English-speaking race—the plays of Shakespeare.

Would Avoid Truth.

"According to the theory of the censors, the moving picture producers must slavishly avoid the truth, for fear of trending on the toes of races, politicians, and individuals.

"For example—the moving pictures dare not even hint the possibility of wrong conduct of the Democrats in Atlanta; of the Republicans in a Northern States; of the 'wets' in another vicinity; of the police in Chicago; of the Germans in Milwaukee; of the Irish in another community.

"Now, the same reasons which make a censorship of the printed press unconstitutional and intolerable to Americans, make a censorship of the pictorial press unconstitutional and intolerable.

Violates Constitutional Right.

"The theory of the constitutional guarantee, in brief, is this: Every American citizen has a constitutional right to publish anything he pleases, either to speech, or in writing, or in print, or in pictures, subject to his personal liability after publication to the penalties of violating any law, such as the law forbidding obscenity, libel and other matter legally unfit for publication.

"But the distinction between this theory and a censorship is that a censorship passes upon and forbids printing a picture before publication, and so directly controverts the most valuable of all our liberties under the Constitution, which our fathers established for our guidance and our protection.

"If the pictorial press can be subjected to censorship by a mere act of Congress, then so can the printed press. And, of course, there would be an end, at once, to the freedom of writing and printing."

Aug. 13-16

LEBANON DAILY NEWS, LEBANON, PA.

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"

By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

IT is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not [illegible] the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

THE EVENING STAR.
THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1916.

Birth of a Nation.

The patronage accorded Griffith's mammoth spectacle of photography, "The Birth of a Nation," has prompted the management to defer the close of the engagement until next week, when the final showing of the big photoproduction will be made at the New National Theater. This extraordinary photoproduction, with a record of five weeks already, has been so completely described that further details of it seem unnecessary. It blends historical events of the civil war with romance and incidents during the reconstruction period in a tensely interesting way.

WASHINGTON TIMES
FRIDAY, MAY 19, 191

TYPICAL MOTHER IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Josephine Crowell, As Mrs. Cameron, Idealizes Character, Says Critic.

"The Birth of a Nation" claims to have within its cast one of the few typical American mother roles, played by Josephine Crowell.

Now that Mother Day has just passed it is not amiss to speak of the stage Mother. Frequently she has had a place upon the stage, and recently she has come prominently before the public in "Madame X" and "Mother," plays which expressed the melodramatic and maudlin sentiment. There have been others, like "Kindling," where the maternal spirit or instinct was represented. Seldom has the modern stage seen the Spartan mother, or the selfish mother; rather it is the character which typifies the mother-love.

Shakespeare was not given to creating the mother character, he eschewed it rather. There is none of the mother in Juliet or Portia or Lady Macbeth. Though ideally poetical, Juliet and Portia, they cannot be associated with motherhood, while Lady Macbeth is the embodiment of ambition with none of the finer qualities which express the maternal spirit. One can hardly conceive of Lady Macbeth in the role of a mother. She would probably send her sons to the wars with much glee while Juliet would neglect her children for her husband and Portia would bring them up on the rule of three. None of these would typify the American mother, particularly the American stage mother.

Love and Sacrifice.

Here we like to have all that mother love and sacrifice mean emphasized. The selfish mother who exacts everything from the child until it is sixty years old, and gives it nothing after the age of six, has not been depicted upon the stage, and probably would not be greeted with favor by the American public. Here the grown-up boy likes to hear of the mother who gives her sons over to her country; open-handedly, freely and heroically.

It has remained for the photoplay to give us the ideal mother, the typical American mother. She is not of today a club woman with a nursery and all of its accessories. The author with a modern locale could not have brought out all of the finer qualities of motherhood.

She is of the civil war times, when the mothers paid their toll. And in this mother we have the embodiment of sacrifice, the strongest virtue in a mother's breast. And she is a mother of the South, giving up not only her boys, but her home as well, and thereby exacting greater sympathy than the mother of the North, whose home was not sacrificed. This is Mrs. Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation," played by Josephine Crowell and witnessed and known today by millions of people.

Speechless Anguish.

And no doubt she has demanded a sob from every one of these millions. Men have wept shamefacedly, and men have wept freely—there being only a difference in the method and the character—before her sacrifice. With all of its big tragic scenes provocative of heart sobs the pivot of sympathy is this Southern mother. The big scenes may lift you up and leave you spellbound, but your throat is dry; it is the simplicity of this mother, a mere twitch of the mouth, half-smile, half-sob, which gets you. And strange to say the potency of this character lies in its speechless anguish. Here is one character in the photoplay which would have been weakened had it been endowed with words. Here is a mother! Here is a character, the embodiment of sacrifice, all that a big mother should be, giving away the world itself—her sons—not freely, heroically, but with a half-smile, half-sob—in silent anguish. The world is chuck full of silent, sacrificing little women. Men know them. Hence the sobs over this Southern mother. Thanks to Griffith for her.

EVENING REPORT, LEBANON, PA., MAY 19, 191

MIRIAM COOPER IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE ACADEMY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY, MAY 19TH AND 20TH.

Lee and Grant at Appomattox---Scene in "The Birth of a Nation"

Daily Public Spirit
Clearfield, Pa.
May 20, 1916

'The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" is due for an engagement of two days at the Opera House commencing Monday, May 22; when D. W Griffith's mighty spectacle will be offered for the first time here. This is the great attraction which has broken all records in New York City and has also to its credit record runs in Boston,Chicago and elsewhere. It takes four cars to transport the big organization. In the story proper 18.000 people and 3,000 horses are seen. The story tells in thrilling detail the relationship that the rise and fall of slavery in this country bore tot he making of American history. It ist he great est achievement ever seen upon the American stage. Seats are now on sale.

SCRANTON TIMES.
SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" RETURNS WEEK AFTER NEXT, WILL BE SEEN AT MAJESTIC

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen at the Majestic theater for an engagement of one week, beginning Monday, May 29, with daily matinee, exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written last upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and with this framework they make these wonderful characters live again. They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement [illegible] is startling [illegible] entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with [illegible] of the first African slave and it closes with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mighty nation in the world passed through [illegible] strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across blood-stained plains. The human note weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded.

Seats for all performances will be placed on sale Thursday, May 25, at 9 a. m. Phone, 5226-J.

French Scene In D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," Which Returns To the Majestic Theater for a Week's Engagement, Beginning Monday, May 29th, With a Matinee Daily.

Big Battle Scene In "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Temple Theatre, St. Marys, 2 Nights, Friday and Saturday, May 26 and 27, Matinee Saturday.

Lillian Gish in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION", Temple Theatre, 2 Nights, Friday and Saturday, May 26 and 27. Matinee Saturday.

MAY 22, 1916.

CLEARFIELD, PA., MONDAY.

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" is due for an engagement of two days at the Opera House commencing Monday, May 22, when D. W Griffith's mighty spectacle will be offered for the first time here. This is the great attraction which has broken all records in New York City and has also to its credit record runs in Boston, Chicago and elsewhere. It takes four cars to transport the big organization. In the story proper 18.000 people and 3,000 horses are seen. The story tells in thrilling detail the relationship that the rise and fall of slavery in this country bore tot he making of American history. It ist he great est achievement ever seen upon the American stage. Seats are now on sale.

THE CLEARFELD PROGRESS.

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 23, 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWING CAPACITY HOUSES

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle Witnessed by Hundreds Last Night

Orchestra of Thirty Pieces Furnished Special Music Which Greatly Increased Effects—Full house Witnesses Play Again this Afternoon.

"The Birth of a Nation" the greatest moving picture play ever produced, was presented last evening in the opera house before a capacity house. Many residents of near-by towns were in attendance. The picture will be shown this afternoon and this evening and from the advance seat sale, it is expected that the house will be filled both times.

The play, which has met with such great success in all the larger cities of the country, surpassed all expectations of the audience last night. A orchestra of thirty pieces furnished music written especially for this picture which greatly increased the effects.

The picture is founded on Thomas Dixon's book "The Clansman" and is full of historical facts, giving the history of the south from many years before the civil war until the present time. It traces the development during the reconstruction period immediately following the Civil war, showing scenes where the Ku Klux Klan disperse the negro mob. A beautiful love story runs through the entire play.

DU BOIS DAILY EXPRESS
WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1916

"The Birth of a Nation," Monday and Tuesday, May 29 and 30.

Cavalry experts figure that the life of a horse in war times is about ten days. These high strung animals knock under to the nervous strain of battle. When D. W. Griffith was building his big scenes for "The Birth of a Nation" he used 3,000 horses. These were used in relays and each horse was given a two days' rest between times that it was used in the mimic warfare. In this way the producer was able to save all of the fine horses and not a fatality was charged up against the production. Returning to the Avenue theatre two days, Monday and Tuesday, May 29 and 30. Matinees daily. See adv. for scale prices. Seats on sale Thursday.

Adv-24-1t

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1916.
THE SCRANTON TIMES.

AT MAJESTIC

"The Birth of a Nation" is due for an engagement of one week at the Majestic commencing on Monday next, when D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle will be offered for the second time here. This is the great attraction which has broken all records in New York and has also to its credit record runs in Boston, Chicago and elsewhere. It takes four cars to transport the big organization. In the story proper 18,000 people and 3,000 horses are seen. The story tells in thrilling detail the relationship that the rise and fall of slavery in this country bore to the making of American history. It is the greatest achieevment ever seen upon the American stage.

down and all are welcome to join

THE SCRANTON TIMES,
THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1916.

AT MAJESTIC

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is to be seen in Scranton next week at the Majestic theater, with D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarter hours' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil war history, and of Ku-Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants, drilled with the well-known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the indoor drama can not henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

THE TYRONE HERALD

"The Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be presented at the Wilson on June 2-3, both afternoon and evening is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the north and the south.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story.

Eighteen thousand people were employed in taking the historical pictures. One sees Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for troops, the battles of the conflict, Sherman's march, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the south in the throes of change, the carpetbaggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the K. K. K.

ST. MARYS, ELK CO., PA.
THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1916

"The Birth Of A Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation" brings forth D. W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music. The first half of the production which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the War between the States. The formation of the Confederacy; Lincoln's call for troops; Sherman's march to the sea; the battle of Petersburg; surrender to Grant; and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theatre, April 14th, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith Drama. In the second half the South's "Second Uprising"-this time against the carpet-bagger regime-is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the unionist Captain, Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Clansmen are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand actors and three thousand horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificient instrumental musical is played by a large orchestra of thirty musicians. At the Temple, Theatre, Friday and Saturday, May 26-27, Matinee Saturday.

The New York Times
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1916.

A KUKLUX STATUE.

Southern newspapers are debating with considerable warmth the announced intention of THOMAS DIXON to honor the memory of his uncle, Colonel MCAFEE, by erecting an equestrian statue on the Court House lawn in Shelby, N. C. Colonel MCAFEE was the original of Mr. DIXON's hero, "the Little Colonel," in his film play, "The Birth of a Nation." He purposes to portray the man he would honor in the uniform of the Kuklux Klan, and it is over this part of the plan that the discussion has been aroused. The Charlotte Observer declares that "it "would be hard to conceive of a statue "more grotesquely treated," and would have the Colonel clad in Confederate uniform. The history in which the Kuklux Klan played a part "belongs to the past," should be "stored in the archives as a sealed book." None but Southerners understand, or ever will understand, that history, and "the "erection of a statue of the class proposed would impose upon the people "of this and succeeding generations "the duty of perpetual explanation "and defense, a duty that might become irksome with the passing of the "years, and that might in the end be "repudiated."

The Montgomery Advertiser calls The Observer's position "ridiculous." Colonel MCAFEE's fame is that of "leader and organizer of the Kuklux," and virtually every Southern town has a statue to some Confederate officer; there would be nothing distinguishing about another such statue.

Kukluxism is an interesting phase of Southern civilization, an institution that rose up to do a definite thing, and disappeared when its purposes had been accomplished. It will live always in the lore of this people. * * * The Clansman's individuality should not be lost, but should be indelibly impressed upon the minds of this and coming generations.

Where Southerners take such opposite views, it may not be intrusive for Northerners to express opinions. The Advertiser's position seems to be the right one. If MCAFEE was famous as organizer of the Klan, that is the way he should be remembered, unless, indeed, his people are ashamed of the work in which he won fame and wish to remember only the work in which he was not distinguished above others. Largely because of Mr. DIXON's own labors, this generation is being taught to idealize the Klan. After the MCAFEES let go of it, it fell into the hands of scoundrels and committed many bloody and shameful outrages. In the beginning, however, it was an uprising like that of the San Francisco Vigilance Committee, for which no Californian will ever dream of apologizing. It was the uprising of Confederate soldiers against an intolerable tyranny. It was violent and lawless, but so was the San Francisco revolt; both were cases where civilization was prostrate under the feet of ignorance and vice. If the Kuklux afterward became the instrument of tyranny and crime, while the Vigilance Committee did not, it was because such an instrument always invites such a danger, and California was luckier than the South. It was with the better part of the Klan's history, its fight for the preservation of civilization in the South, that this soldier was connected; and if he is to be honored by a statue, it should be one that will recall his real work. It was, as The Advertiser says, a phase of Southern civilization which has passed. The Observer is perhaps too touchy. It is more the North than the South that has reason to blush at the name of the Kuklux Klan; that name recalls a time when men took the law into their own hands, but it recalls still more the unclean tyranny that forced them to do so; and of that tyranny the North has long repented.

ST. MARYS, ELK CO., PA.
FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1916

"The Birth Of A Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with evening's performance opens an engagement of two nights at the Temple Theatre, Matinee Saturday. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's Surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's Theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising." this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle and (it is estimated) no less than 200.000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures.

This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part-singirg behind the scenes. Somehow the old war time tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments" of long ago seem irresistably real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Henaberry as President Lincoln; Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee; Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Waltball, Lillian Gish. Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN
TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1916

"BIRTH OF NATION" SPLENDID AS EVER

Week's Engagement At Majestic Theater Opens Auspicious Lyceum Management.

"The Birth of a Nation!" How wisely that motion picture spectacle was named. How potent is its argument for patriotism, preparedness; how intensely it grips the interest of the spectators; and yet, how human is the story about which everything is developed. A large audience saw it on its return engagement to the city last night at the Majestic theater and from the interest displayed, it is certain to appeal to capacity houses at the theater for the remainder of its stay in Scranton. It will be presented as it was last night, with a superb orchestra of thirty musicians, and all of the interesting effects that lend so much attractiveness and so much force to the most forceful motion picture ever conceived.

It would seem casually that a goodly portion of the population had already witnessed "The Birth of a Nation". Yet that impression must be erroneous, for the gasp for breath at the tense moments in last night's production, the tears of the woman folks whose heartstrings are more easily touched, and the eager anticipation of the last moments proved conclusively that the spectators could not have seen this picture before.

To a large portion of the population, "The Birth of a Nation" is the most potential argument so far advanced for military preparedness. It visualizes and reveals to the eye the thoughts that heretofore have been strongly enough expressed, but no force con go with an argumentative speech to equal the visualization of the dire consequences to follow military unpreparedness. "The Birth of a Nation" will be at the Majestic theater all this week, with two performances today and matinees every day this week. The picture begins at 2.15 in the afternoon and 8:15 at night, and there is but one performance afternoon and evening.

MAY 30, 1916 THE CLEVELAND STAR, SHELBY, N. C., TUESDAY

The second half of "The Birth of a Nation" showing at the Shelby Auditorium Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, is devoted to events of the Reconstruction which discloses the inner workings of the Ku Klux Klan is driving the carpetbaggers and blacks from politics in Carolina. The spectacle is a screen adaption of "The Clansman," written by Thomas Dixon, a Shelby native, and the royalties have made Mr. Dixon enormously wealthy.

TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1916.

THE SCRANTON TIMES.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS AGAIN SCORING BIG HIT

BEING SHOWN AT MAJESTIC THEATER, UNDER LYCEUM THEATER MANAGEMENT, ALL THIS WEEK.

D. W. Griffith's mighty motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," founded upon Thomas Dixon's celebrated novel, "The Clansman," is playing Scranton a return engagement this week. It is being shown at the Majestic theater, under the Lyceum management, where it opened with a matinee yesterday. "The Birth of a Nation," the same great film in every detail as that displayed to crowded houses at the Lyceum theater some months ago, can be seen at the Majestic for the remainder of the week. There are matinees very day at 2:15 o'clock, and the evening performances begin at 8:15 o'clock.

The Majestic theater has been renovated by the Lyceum management and it is one of the coziest playhouses in the city. Manager Edward Kohnstamm has had a new ventilating system installed, and the audiences at the performances yesterday afternoon and last night were not made the least bit uncomfortable by the warm weather.

But to get back to the great Griffith masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." There is not space enough to describe this wonderful photoplay. It is unquestionably the most stupendous dramatic pageant the brain of man has ever visioned and revealed. No less than 18,000 people and 3,000 horses participate in "The Birth of a Nation." A thrill sweeps the audience as the thousands of mounted clansmen in the wierd garb of the Ku Klux clan come dashing through the open country to fight for their brothers and sisters being outraged by another people in the south. And the great battle scenes stir the audience to a high pitch, especially when Henry Walthall, as "The Little Colonel," charges the Union forces with his little band of sons of the southland. No such battle scenes have ever been staged before.

A deep silence falls over the audience as John Wilkes Booth creeps up behind President Lincoln and assassinates him. This scene, taken in a building erected as an exact likeness of Ford's theater, where Lincoln was killed, is only one of the wonderful settings shown in "The Birth of a Nation."

And while the picture is being displayed a symphony orchestra of thirty pieces is playing appropriate music. Scrantonians who were unable to purchase seats for "The Birth of a Nation" when it was in this city before should not miss the opportunity given them this week.

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" at the Avenue this afternoon and evening.

NEW YORK AMERICAN

MONDAY, MAY 29, 1916

programme rounded out the bill.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S master-picture "The Birth of a Nation," is playing a return New York engagement at the York Theatre, and is as popular as ever.

THE DU BOIS DAILY EXPRESS

MONDAY, MAY 29, 1916

"The Birth of a Nation" Tonight and Tomorrow, Matinee and Night.

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to the Avenue tonight and tomorrow, matinee and night, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Official hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands. Adv-29-1t

"The Birth of a Nation" Today.

Today is your last chance to see "The Birth of a Nation." Matinee at 2:15; evening at 8:15.—1

"The Birth of a Nation" Today.

"The Birth of a Nation" matinee today will start at 2:15. Prices 25c to $1.00. Evening at 8:15. Prices 25c to $1.50.—1

TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1916.

DUBOIS MORNING COURIER

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ON RETURN TRIP IS HIGHLY PLEASING

(Continued From Page 1)

the audiences to the greatest pitch of applause. Similarly when saddening effects of the war are shown in the homes where the womenfolks receive the news of the death of their loved ones many in the audience are moved to tears.

As stated before the picture is one that everybody should see at least once. It gives a person a new insight into events following the war of the rebellion and reconstruction days in Dixie. The battle scenes employ more people and are the most realistic ever filmed and there is a story of romance permeating the whole. In fact the picture contains something of every element that goes to thrill, instruct and amuse or set a person to doing some thinking as well as absorbing historical facts. The assassination of President Lincoln is shown with a fidelity of detail which is marvelous. It is claimed that the interior of Ford's theatre, the audience and Wilkes Booth's bloody act is pictured to exact realism.

Manager Way is to be congratulated on his enterprise in securing this grand production for the second time

TYRONE, PA.

THE WILSON THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Be Seen Here Next Week.

Grown up with underbrush and scrub pine is the spot that marks "the end of the war" when Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee, the opposing commanders, firmly clasped hands, and Grant said. "Let us have peace." There are few of the comrades still left who remember that bright, sunshiny day at Appomattox Court House, when the two generals flanked by other generals of their commands, went into the Wilmer McLean house and arranged the terms of surrender that meant the end of the war and the return of the citizen armies to their civilian occupations.

Out of the beaten track as it is Appomattox has fallen into ruin. The famous apple tree is now preserved only in memory and in the curtain cited so memorably by Roscoe Conkling in the Republican Convention of 1880. The quiet little county seat of Appomattox had slumbered in obscurity until April 8 1865, when it took its place in history, to be forever remembered in connection with the names of the great leaders of the Civil war and the end of the Lost Cause.

Few of the od houses are remaining in the little village Unlike other famous battlefields, there has been no effort to preserve the spot that marked the most important event of the great American conflict.

Because of this condition the lifelike reproduction of the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant at Appomattox Court House in David W. Griffith's, "The Birth of a Nation," is particularly interesting and valuable. The place is hallowed ground in the story of America and it is unpleasant to learn that fire and flood, vandal hands and public indifference and want of care have brought desolation to the spot whose name so appeals to both North and South, there united in lasting peace. It is to be regretted that this place of peace has not received the attention of those who have labored to erect monuments in historic spots. It is, therefore, all the more gratifying to know that Mr. Griffith has preserved for posterity such a faithful representation of one of the most momentous scenes in American history.

The village of Appomattox has nearly disappeared. Only three houses remain. Even those are badly warped, giving promise that they too will soon rot, and that weeds, followed by scrub pine, will soon hide their sites from view. Two of these houses have long been abandoned. The other is occupied by the large family of a small farmer, a stranger to that part of Virginia and unfamiliar with and apparently indifferent to the great memories of the county in which he lives.

At the time of the surrender the village had been reduced by four years of war to a ramshackle crossroads hamlet. A cluster of dwellings, mostly of wood, a livery stable and a store or two were built around the sleepy court house square The court house was burned down twenty years ago, and to-day the desolate court house square is but a place of ashes, charred plaster and shattered bricks.

"The Birth of a Nation" with its famous orchestra of twenty-four musicians will be presented in all its grandeur at the Wilson theatre for four performances starting next Friday afternoon. The engagement in Tyrone will be its first presentation at popular prices, the scale of seats ranging from 25 cents to one dollar.

Seats Now Selling for "The Birth of a Nation."

Seats are now on sale for the entire four performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Wilson on next Friday and Saturday. As this will be the first presentation of Griffith's wonderful picture at less than a two dollar scale of prices, no doubt the theatre will be filled to capacity at all four performances. The management of "The Birth of a Nation" does not permit telephone orders to be taken or seats laid aside. Mail orders will be filled in the order of their receipt, when accompanied by a remittance. The prices of admission are: Lower floor, seventy-five cents and one dollar; balcony, twenty-five, fifty and seventy-five cents A matinee will be given both days.

THE SCRANTON TIMES
WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ATTRACTS GREAT CROWDS TO MAJESTIC

D. W. Griffith's Masterpiece Proving a Remarkable "Repeat."

Thousands of devotees of the movies in the city and valley have viewed D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," yet there is no diminution in the size of the audiences that are witnessing the masterpiece which is being staged at the Majestic theater all this week. Memorial day brought out capacity houses, afternoon and evening.

"The Birth of a Nation" is easily the biggest film affair ever produced. Its success has been tremendous, the picture being called upon to play return engagements in many parts of the country. As an added attraction an orchestra of thirty pieces plays appropriate music while the thousands of fe[illegible]ilm are being shown.

In making this world-famous movie, Mr. Griffith spared nothing in the way of expense. Half a million dollars were expended in the hiring of the thousands of people who participated in the production. The scenes depicted carry one back to the sixties, the most trying days of the republic. Events of that period are faithfully reproduced. "The Birth of a Nation" is to be seen at the Majestic, matinee and night, every day for the balance of the week.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN.
WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1916

NEWSBOYS TO SEE BIRTH OF A NATION

Republican Carriers to Attend Majestic Theater Thursday Night and Friday Matinee.

The Scranton Republican carriers, are to witness a performance of "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented at the Majestic theater on Penn avenue, which playhouse is now under the direct management of the old Lyceum theater. Arrangements for this treat for the newsboys have been completed by the management of The Republican.

The carriers will be entertained at the Majestic, Thursday night and Friday matinee, these two performances beoing designated on account of the great number of carriers of The Republican who intend witnessisg "The Birth of Nation." Those carriers who desire to go Thursday night, are requested to get in touch with their branch manager, who will let the circulation manager know by Thursday noon.

As during the first presentation of the photoplay in this city some months back, "The Birth of a Nation," is attracting equally as large audiences. At both performances yesterday packed houses were the order. The film's fascination for masy local theatergoers has been so great, that they have witnessed the production two and even three times.

Thursday night and Friday matinee will be big days for The Republican newsboys in this city, who have been anxious to view the picture, and now that their hopes have been realized are anticipating a big time.

THE CLEVELAND STAR, SHELBY, N. C. TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1916

CONFEDERATE VETERANS LEAVING FOR THE [illegible]
In this scene in "The Birth of a Nation" which is showing at the [illegible] ning Monday night, the symphony orchestra of 25, carried by the [illegible] heard in the South since the early sixties.

The Following Notice was Clipped from YORK THEATRE

116th STREET
Near Lenox Avenue

COM. MONDAY MAT., MAY 29
TWO WEEKS
Twice Daily 2.15 8.15
Incl'g Sundays

D. W. GRIFFITH'S GIGANTIC SPECTACLE
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 30

All Matinees
25c 50c

EVENINGS
Entire Balcony and 500 Orchestra Reserved
50c

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Also Seats at 25c, 75c & $1.00

302

THE SCRANTON TIMES, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" FILLS TIMES NEWSBOYS WITH GLEE

Famous Motion Picture Is Drawing Packed Houses At Majestic Theater.

No audience ever attending a performance of "The Birth of a Nation" applauded more vociferously than the crowded house that witnessed the film production in the Majestic theater last night. The occasion was the first of the two outings provided by The Times for its carriers and proved a thoroughly enjoyable treat for the many boys who filled a good portion of the house. Last night was central city newsboys' night, while tonight The Times will entertain the carriers from the West Scranton and Petersburg sections.

The stirring rides of the Ku Klux Klan, together with the inspiring scenes of battles of the Civil war, with Old Glory always leading to victory, proved more than the youngsters could quietly endure. On nearly a dozen occasions the carriers got to their feet and made the house tremble with their shouts, applause and stamping of feet. The scenes were more than inspiring and forced many of the grownups to forget the staid dignity that comes with years and join heartily in the shouts and stampedes of the youngsters.

As has proved the case in every city where this picture has been shown, the performances of yesterday in the Majestic brought capacity attendances. Manager Edward Kohnstamm has announced that new attendance records promise to be made this week, as the demand for tickets is just as great as the demand which greeted the picture on its first presentation in this city. The picture will be shown twice daily for the remainder of the week. The photoplay in itself needs no introduction, as no picture ever presented in the United States has aroused the interest and discussion that this one has. To miss it is really to leave out one of the treats of the modern day.

Times Out-of-Town Carriers.

The out-of-town carriers are to attend the performance on Saturday night, and we want them to call us on the phone or drop postals immediately so that we may get seats reserved for them.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

BIRTH OF NATION FOR BOYS TONIGHT

Republican Carriers to See Stirring Photoplay As Guests of the Management.

Carriers of The Scranton Republican to the number of several hundred will attend tonight's performance of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic theater, as the guests of The Republican management. A like number, or those who cannot arrange to see tonight's performance will attend the matinee tomorrow, Friday.

Circulation Manager Fred I Cook declared yesterday that the carriers who desire to attend tonight's performance of the famous photoplay should inform their branch managers of their choice before noon today, so that the branch manager can inform the home office also before noon.

Mr. Cook said that carriers from out-of-town, should be sure to communicate with him before noon today, if they wish to attend either tonight's performance or the matinee tomorrow. The newsboys are being allowed their choice of what day they wish to see "The Birth of a Nation."

The stirring battle scenes, the wild ride of the "Ku Klux" clan and Sherman's March to the Sea, all so historically portrayed in "The Birth of a Nation," will delight the youngsters.

All of the carriers yesterday when informed of The Republican's announcement that they were going to give the newsboys a treat, were wild with delight. Needless to say enthusiasm will run high during tonight's performance, with the audience augmented by the large number of sturdy youngsters, carriers of The Republican.

THE DAILY POTTSTOWN LEDGER, THURSDAY JUNE 1, 1916

Grand Opera House—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Grand Opera House, June 5, 6 and 7, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the War between the States and the Reconstruction of the South land. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a Brigadier General of the Confederate Army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old-fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916.

THE LOCK HAVEN EXPRESS.

WHY YOU SHOULD SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

B—"It is a brilliant, vivid, stirring masterpiece."—Rupert Hughes.

E—"It will take the whole country by storm."—Booth Tarkington.

C—"In the short space of three hours the audience sees, hears and feels a period of fifteen years."—Rev. Father John Talbot Smith.

A—"I know it is true, because I have lived through the actual realities."—Rev. Dr. Thomas B. Gregory.

U—"Never before has such a whirlwind combination of story, spectacle and tense drama been unrolled."—N. Y. Eve. Sun.

S—"It is worth $5 a seat."—C. F. Zittel, N. Y. Eve. Journal.

E—"It is history vitalized—History by lightning flash. Go to see it because of the wonder of the pictures themselves, and finally, go to see it because it will make a better American of you, for out of the baptism of blood of the Civil war was born the new nation, one and invisible."—Dorothy Dix.

Martin Theatre, Lock Haven, two nights, beginning Wednesday, June 7. Matinee Thursday. Seats now selling. Night, 25c to $2; matinee, 25c to $1.

THE EVENING CHRONICLE—JUNE 1, 1916.

Sherman's march to the sea. Scene from Griffith's massive photo spectacle "The Birth of a Nation."

POTTSTOWN NEWS, THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 1, 1916

Society Drama at Hippodrome.

Movies reveal many an interesting story, but back of them all are many incidents which occur in the studios that never come to light. Mme. Bertha Kalich, star in "Slander," a William Fox production which comes to the Hippodrome today, nearly fainted in the studio when someone shouted, "Shoot her in the back." This was not a criminal injunction, or incitation to murder, but merely a director crying for his cameraman to keep turning the crank as Madame walked away from the camera.

In offering Bertha Kalich in her first great motion picture drama, William Fox feels confident of the unusual merit of the star, an opinion on which agree America's leading critics. Countrywide comment favors this great Jewish artist who by hard work and sheer genius has risen to the foremost among stage folk. Speaking of her abilities as a screen artist the San Francisco Call-Post says: "Bertha Kalich is the sort of actress that captivates and touches the heartstrings in the melodrama roles without overdoing it." "Slander," the production at the Hippodrome today is a powerful society drama that every woman should see and every man should study.—Advertisement.

Griffith's "Birth of Nation."

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House commencing a three-day engagement next Monday, June 5.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American History ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story.

Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women, while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up on the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action adn grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.—Advertisement.

Sandalwood oil supply comes-pain

Scranton Republic June 1, 1916

CLEVER ACTRESS IN BIRTH OF A NATION

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Majestic theater, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate theatre is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

MAE MARSH

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few years ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was a raw undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likeable in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the remarkable drama the film has yet unreleased.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise for her sincere and emphatic, for the parts she plays the younger sister in the appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the human mind can grasp. She has played both and heroines, consumptive girls and romantic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her name is better known than any actress in the world, and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

AVOCA

THE SCRANTON TIMES.
WEDNESDAY, MAY 31. 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ATTRACTS GREAT CROWDS TO MAJESTIC

D. W. Griffith's Masterpiece Proving a Remarkable "Repeat."

Thousands of devotees of the movies in the city and valley have viewed D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," yet there is no diminution in the size of the audiences that are witnessing the masterpiece which is being staged at the Majestic theater all this week. Memorial day brought out capacity houses, afternoon and evening.

"The Birth of a Nation" is easily the biggest film affair ever produced. Its success has been tremendous, the picture being called upon to play return engagements in many parts of the country. As an added attraction an orchestra of thirty pieces plays appropriate music while the thousands of fe[illegible]lm are being shown.

In making this world-famous movie, Mr. Griffith spared nothing in the way of expense. Half a million dollars were expended in the hiring of the thousands of people who participated in the production. The scenes depicted carry one back to the sixties, the most trying days of the republic. Events of that period are faithfully reproduced. "The Birth of a Nation" is to be seen at the Majestic, matinee and night, every day for the balance of the week.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN.
WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1916

NEWSBOYS TO SEE BIRTH OF A NATION

Republican Carriers to Attend Majestic Theater Thursday Night and Friday Matinee.

The Scranton Republican carriers, are to witness a performance of "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented at the Majestic theater on Penn avenue, which playhouse is now under the direct management of the old Lyceum theater. Arrangements for this treat for the newsboys have been completed by the management of The Republican.

The carriers will be entertained at the Majestic, Thursday night and Friday matinee, these two performances beoing designated on account of the great number of carriers of The Republican who intend witnessisg "The Birth of Nation." Those carriers who desire to go Thursday night, are requested to get in touch with their branch manager, who will let the circulation manager know by Thursday noon.

As during the first presentation of the photoplay in this city some months back, "The Birth of a Nation," is attracting equally as large audiences. At both performances yesterday packed houses were the order. The film's fascination for masy local theatergoers has been so great, that they have witnessed the production two and even three times.

Thursday night and Friday matinee will be big days for The Republican newsboys in this city, who have been anxious to view the picture, and now that their hopes have been realized are anticipating a big time.

THE CLEVELAND STAR, SHELBY, N. C. TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1916

VOL. II. NO. 14
REFLECTIONS
"With Malice Towards None and Charity For All"

[illegible] Newspaper of Upper Manhattan, New York City
217 WEST 125th ST., NEW YORK, N. Y.
TEL[illegible]GSIDE

YORK THEATRE TO SHOW "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Monday afternoon, May 29, the famous cinema spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will commence a two week's engagement at the York Theatre. Performances will be given twice daily, including Sundays.

The success of this film epic is more than national in scope, for in Canada and England, as well as in this country, its patronage has reached the most amazing figures. No theatrical production of any country or century has given as many performances in 12 months as "The Birth of a Nation" has, or has been seen by as many people. Without question, it is the most widely discussed play of modern times. In every city where it has appeared, the small cities as well as the large ones, such as Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Los Angeles, it has established, as it did in this city, a new record for number of consecutive performances given and length of stay. Everywhere crowded houses feature its engagements. In the theatrical world it has made history and demonstrated the fact that it is more popular than the greatest English-speaking star or the most successful production of the spoken drama; presentations of it are now being given in Sidney, Australia, Buenos Ayres and Argentine.

War as it really is—as it has never before been shown on any stage, is pictured in "The Birth of a Nation." The drama is crowded with reproductions of historical scenes—there are intimate views of Lincoln, Lee, Grant and other celebrated figures; Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta and the assassination of Lincoln are but incidentals of its thrilling, convincing and realistic dramatic story. The production that will be seen at the York will be exactly the same as the one that made the record theatrical run at the Liberty Theatre, including a symphony

In "The Birth o[illegible]g Next Monday

302

THE SCRANTON TIMES, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" FILLS TIMES NEWSBOYS WITH GLEE

Famous Motion Picture Is Drawing Packed Houses At Majestic Theater.

No audience ever attending a performance of "The Birth of a Nation" applauded more vociferously than the crowded house that witnessed the film production in the Majestic theater last night. The occasion was the first of the two outings provided by The Times for its carriers and proved a thoroughly enjoyable treat for the many boys who filled a good portion of the house. Last night was central city newsboys' night, while tonight The Times will entertain the carriers from the West Scranton and Petersburg sections.

The stirring rides of the Ku Klux Klan, together with the inspiring scenes of battles of the Civil war, with Old Glory always leading to victory, proved more than the youngsters could quietly endure. On nearly a dozen occasions the carriers got to their feet and made the house tremble with their shouts, applause and stamping of feet. The scenes were more than inspiring and forced many of the grownups to forget the staid dignity that comes with years and join heartily in the shouts and stampedes of the youngsters.

As has proved the case in every city where this picture has been shown, the performances of yesterday in the Majestic brought capacity attendances. Manager Edward Kohnstamm has announced that new attendance records promise to be made this week, as the demand for tickets is just as great as the demand which greeted the picture on its first presentation in this city. The picture will be shown twice daily for the remainder of the week. The photoplay in itself needs no introduction, as no picture ever presented in the United States has aroused the interest and discussion that this one has. To miss it is really to leave out one of the treats of the modern day.

Times Out-of-Town Carriers.

The out-of-town carriers are to attend the performance on Saturday night, and we want them to call us on the phone or drop postals immediately so that we may get seats reserved for them.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

BIRTH OF NATION FOR BOYS TONIGHT

Republican Carriers to See Stirring Photoplay As Guests of the Management.

Carriers of The Scranton Republican to the number of several hundred will attend tonight's performance of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic theater, as the guests of The Republican management. A like number, or those who cannot arrange to see tonight's performance will attend the matinee tomorrow, Friday.

Circulation Manager Fred I. Cook declared yesterday that the carriers who desire to attend tonight's performance of the famous photoplay should inform their branch managers of their choice before noon today, so that the branch manager can inform the home office also before noon.

Mr. Cook said that carriers from out-of-town, should be sure to communicate with him before noon today, if they wish to attend either tonight's performance or the matinee tomorrow. The newsboys are being allowed their choice of what day they wish to see "The Birth of a Nation."

The stirring battle scenes, the wild ride of the "Ku Klux" clan and Sherman's March to the Sea, all so historically portrayed in "The Birth of a Nation," will delight the youngsters.

All of the carriers yesterday when informed of The Republican's announcement that they were going to give the newsboys a treat, were wild with delight. Needless to say enthusiasm will run high during tonight's performance, with the audience augmented by the large number of sturdy youngsters, carriers of The Republican.

THE DAILY POTTSTOWN LEDGER, THURSDAY JUNE 1, 1916

Grand Opera House—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Grand Opera House, June 5, 6 and 7, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the War between the States and the Reconstruction of the South land. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a Brigadier General of the Confederate Army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old-fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916.

THE LOCK HAVEN EXPRESS.

WHY YOU SHOULD SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

B—"It is a brilliant, vivid, stirring masterpiece."—Rupert Hughes.

E—"It will take the whole country by storm."—Booth Tarkington.

C—"In the short space of three hours the audience sees, hears and feels a period of fifteen years."—Rev. Father John Talbot Smith.

A—"I know it is true, because I have lived through the actual realities."—Rev. Dr. Thomas B. Gregory.

I—"Never before has such a whirlwind combination of story, spectacle and tense drama been unrolled."—N. Y. Eve. Sun.

S—"It is worth $5 a seat."—C. F. Zittel, N. Y. Eve. Journal.

E—"It is history vitalized—History by lightning flash. Go to see it because of the wonder of the pictures themselves, and finally, go to see it because it will make a better American of you, for out of the baptism of blood of the Civil war was born the new nation, one and invisible."—Dorothy Dix.

Martin Theatre, Lock Haven, two nights, beginning Wednesday, June 7. Matinee Thursday. Seats now selling. Night, 25c to $2; matinee, 25c to $1.

THE EVENING CHRONICLE—JUNE 1, 1916.

Sherman's march to the sea. Scene from Griffith's massive photo spectacle "The Birth of a Nation."

POTTSTOWN NEWS, THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 1, 1916

Society Drama at Hippodrome.

Movies reveal many an interesting story, but back of them all are many incidents which occur in the studios that never come to light. Mme. Bertha Kalich, star in "Slander," a William Fox production which comes to the Hippodrome today, nearly fainted in the studio when someone shouted, "Shoot her in the back." This was not a criminal injunction, or incitation to murder, but merely a director crying for his cameraman to keep turning the crank as Madame walked away from the camera.

In offering Bertha Kalich in her first great motion picture drama, William Fox feels confident of the unusual merit of the star, an opinion on which agree America's leading critics. Countrywide comment favors this great Jewish artist who by hard work and sheer genius has risen to the foremost among stage folk. Speaking of her abilities as a screen artist the San Francisco Call-Post says: "Bertha Kalich is the sort of actress that captivates and touches the heartstrings in the melodrama roles without overdoing it." "Slander," the production at the Hippodrome today is a powerful society drama that every woman should see and every man should study.—Advertisement.

Griffith's "Birth of Nation."

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House commencing a three-day engagement next Monday, June 5.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American History ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story.

Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women, while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up on the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action adn grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.—Advertisement.

Sandalwood oil supply comes prin-

San Francisco Call June 1, 1916

CLEVER ACTRESS IN BIRTH OF A NATION

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Majestic theater, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to position in the motion picture field. Maude Adams holds in the legitimate. This is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

MAE MARSH

Little Miss Marsh has only been in picture two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to work her older sister work. She was raw undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl to work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable in all the thousands of characters crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the remarkable drama the film has yet unreleased.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the girl who plays the younger sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the human mind can grasp. She has played princesses and heroines, consumptive girls and romantic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her name is better known than any actress in the world, and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

AVOCA

THE SCRANTON TIMES.
WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ATTRACTS GREAT CROWDS TO MAJESTIC

D. W. Griffith's Masterpiece Proving a Remarkable "Repeat."

Thousands of devotees of the movies in the city and valley have viewed D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," yet there is no diminution in the size of the audiences that are witnessing the masterpiece which is being staged at the Majestic theater all this week. Memorial day brought out capacity houses, afternoon and evening.

"The Birth of a Nation" is easily the biggest film affair ever produced. Its success has been tremendous, the picture being called upon to play return engagements in many parts of the country. As an added attraction an orchestra of thirty pieces plays appropriate music while the thousands of feet of film are being shown.

In making this world-famous movie, Mr. Griffith spared nothing in the way of expense. Half a million dollars were expended in the hiring of the thousands of people who participated in the production. The scenes depicted carry one back to the sixties, the most trying days of the republic. Events of that period are faithfully reproduced. "The Birth of a Nation" is to be seen at the Majestic, matinee and night, every day for the balance of the week.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN.
WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1916

NEWSBOYS TO SEE BIRTH OF A NATION

Republican Carriers to Attend Majestic Theater Thursday Night and Friday Matinee.

The Scranton Republican carriers, are to witness a performance of "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented at the Majestic theater on Penn avenue, which playhouse is now under the direct management of the old Lyceum theater. Arrangements for this treat for the newsboys have been completed by the management of The Republican.

The carriers will be entertained at the Majestic, Thursday night and Friday matinee, these two performances beoing designated on account of the great number of carriers of The Republican who intend witnessing "The Birth of Nation." Those carriers who desire to go Thursday night, are requested to get in touch with their branch manager, who will let the circulation manager know by Thursday noon.

As during the first presentation of the photoplay in this city some months back, "The Birth of a Nation," is attracting equally as large audiences. At both performances yesterday packed houses were the order. The film's fascination for masy local theatergoers has been so great, that they have witnessed the production two and even three times.

Thursday night and Friday matinee will be big days for The Republican newsboys in this city, who have been anxious to view the picture, and now that their hopes have been realized are anticipating a big time.

THE CLEVELAND STAR, SHELBY, N. C. TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1916

MAY MARSH
In "The Birth of a Nation" at York Theatre, Beginning Next Monday

5

302

THE SCRANTON TIMES, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" FILLS TIMES NEWSBOYS WITH GLEE

Famous Motion Picture Is Drawing Packed Houses At Majestic Theater.

No audience ever attending a performance of "The Birth of a Nation" applauded more vociferously than the crowded house that witnessed the film production in the Majestic theater last night. The occaston was the first of the two outings provided by The Times for its carriers and proved a thoroughly enjoyable treat for the many boys who filled a good portion of the house. Last night was central city newsboys' night, while tonight The Times will entertain the carriers from the West Scranton and Petersburg sections.

The stirring rides of the Ku Klux Klan, together with the inspiring scenes of battles of the Civil war, with Old Glory always leading to victory, proved more than the youngsters could quietly endure. On nearly a dozen occasions the carriers got to their feet and made the house tremble with their shouts, applause and stamping of feet. The scenes were more than inspiring and forced many of the grownups to forget the staid dignity that comes with years and join heartily in the shouts and stampedes of the youngsters.

As has proved the case in every city where this picture has been shown, the performances of yesterday in the Majestic brought capacity attendances. Manager Edward Kohnstamm has announced that new attendance records promise to be made this week, as the demand for tickets is just as great as the demand which greeted the picture on its first presentation in this city. The picture will be shown twice daily for the remainder of the week. The photoplay in itself needs no introduction, as no picture ever presented in the United States has aroused the interest and discussion that this one has. To miss it is really to leave out one of the treats of the modern day.

Times Out-of-Town Carriers.

The out-of-town carriers are to attend the performance on Saturday night, and we want them to call us on the phone or drop postals immediately so that we may get seats reserved for them.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

BIRTH OF NATION FOR BOYS TONIGHT

Republican Carriers to See Stirring Photoplay As Guests of the Management.

Carriers of The Scranton Republican to the number of several hundred will attend tonight's performance of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic theater, as the guests of The Republican management. A like number, or those who cannot arrange to see tonight's performance will attend the matinee tomorrow, Friday.

Circulation Manager Fred I Cook declared yesterday that the carriers who desire to attend tonight's performance of the famous photoplay should inform their branch managers of their choice before noon today, so that the branch manager can inform the home office also before noon.

Mr. Cook said that carriers from out-of-town, should be sure to communicate with him before noon today, if they wish to attend either tonight's performance or the matinee tomorrow. The newsboys are being allowed their choice of what day they wish to see "The Birth of a Nation."

The stirring battle scenes, the wild ride of the "Ku Klux" clan and Sherman's March to the Sea, all so historically portrayed in "The Birth of a Nation," will delight the youngsters.

All of the carriers yesterday when informed of The Republican's announcement that they were going to give the newsboys a treat, were wild with delight. Needless to say enthusiasm will run high during tonight's performance, with the audience augmented by the large number of sturdy youngsters, carriers of The Republican.

THE DAILY POTTSTOWN LEDGER, THURSDAY JUNE 1, 1916

Grand Opera House—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Grand Opera House, June 5, 6 and 7, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the War between the States and the Reconstruction of the South land. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a Brigadier General of the Confederate Army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old-fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916.

THE LOCK HAVEN EXPRESS.

WHY YOU SHOULD SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

B—"It is a brilliant, vivid, stirring masterpiece."—Rupert Hughes.

E—"It will take the whole country by storm."—Booth Tarkington.

C—"In the short space of three hours the audience sees, hears and feels a period of fifteen years."—Rev. Father John Talbot Smith.

A—"I know it is true, because I have lived through the actual realities."—Rev. Dr. Thomas B. Gregory.

U—"Never before has such a whirlwind combination of story, spectacle and tense drama been unrolled."—N. Y. Eve. Sun.

S—"It is worth $5 a seat."—C. F. Zittel, N. Y. Eve. Journal.

E—"It is history vitalized—History by lightning flash. Go to see it because of the wonder of the pictures themselves, and finally, go to see it because it will make a better American of you, for out of the baptism of blood of the Civil war was born the new nation, one and invisible."—Dorothy Dix.

Martin Theatre, Lock Haven, two nights, beginning Wednesday, June 7. Matinee Thursday. Seats now selling. Night, 25c to $2; matinee, 25c to $1.

THE EVENING CHRONICLE—JUNE 1, 1916.

Sherman's march to the sea. Scene from Griffith's massive photo spectacle "The Birth of a Nation."

POTTSTOWN NEWS, THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 1, 1916

Society Drama at Hippodrome.

Movies reveal many an interesting story, but back of them all are many incidents which occur in the studios that never come to light. Mme. Bertha Kalich, star in "Slander," a William Fox production which comes to the Hippodrome today, nearly fainted in the studio when someone shouted, "Shoot her in the back." This was not a criminal injunction, or incitation to murder, but merely a director crying for his cameraman to keep turning the crank as Madame walked away from the camera.

In offering Bertha Kalich in her first great motion picture drama, William Fox feels confident of the unusual merit of the star, an opinion on which agree America's leading critics. Countrywide comment favors this great Jewish artist who by hard work and sheer genius has risen to the foremost among stage folk. Speaking of her abilities as a screen artist the San Francisco Call-Post says: "Bertha Kalich is the sort of actress that captivates and touches the heartstrings in the melodrama roles without overdoing it." "Slander," the production at the Hippodrome today is a powerful society drama that every woman should see and every man should study.—Advertisement.

Griffith's "Birth of Nation."

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House commencing a three-day engagement next Monday, June 5.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American History ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story.

Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women, while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up on the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action adn grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.—Advertisement.

Sandalwood oil supply comes ...

Scranton Tribune June 1, 1916

CLEVER ACTRESS IN BIRTH OF A NATION

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Majestic theater, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to position in the motion picture field Maude Adams holds in the legitimatema is due to the careful manner in wD. W. Griffith, the master producers studied her personality and brought every latent gift.

MAE MARSH

LitMiss Marsh has only been in pictwo years, but she has already reacthe top of the ladder. A few seasgo she came to the Griffith studio to w her older sister work. She was raw undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye great possibilities beneath the surf her anxious eyes and mobile counce. He wanted a half-grown girs work he was finishing and he selher. Now she has the most likabl in all the thousands of character crowd the Griffith masterpiece. Sihe joyous note of youth in the maarkable drama the film has yet u enced actors always have a word of sincere and emphatic, for the ls who plays the younger sister appealing story. This California express almost any emotion the mind can grasp. She has played and heroines, consumptive girls atic girls. No part frightens her Griffith is directing. Today her etter known than any actress in d, and she is the pet of movie every quarter of the globe.

AVOCA

THE SCRANTON TIMES.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1916.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ATTRACTS GREAT CROWDS TO MAJESTIC

D. W. Griffith's Masterpiece Proving a Remarkable "Repeat."

Thousands of devotees of the movies in the city and valley have viewed D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," yet there is no diminution in the size of the audiences that are witnessing the masterpiece which is being staged at the Majestic theater all this week. Memorial day brought out capacity houses, afternoon and evening.

"The Birth of a Nation" is easily the biggest film affair ever produced. Its success has been tremendous, the picture being called upon to play return engagements in many parts of the country. As an added attraction an orchestra of thirty pieces plays appropriate music while the thousands of fe[illegible] film are being shown.

In making this world-famous movie, Mr. Griffith spared nothing in the way of expense. Half a million dollars were expended in the hiring of the thousands of people who participated in the production. The scenes depicted carry one back to the sixties, the most trying days of the republic. Events of that period are faithfully reproduced. "The Birth of a Nation" is to be seen at the Majestic, matinee and night, every day for the balance of the week.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1916

NEWSBOYS TO SEE BIRTH OF A NATION

Republican Carriers to Attend Majestic Theater Thursday Night and Friday Matinee.

The Scranton Republican carriers, are to witness a performance of "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented at the Majestic theater on Penn avenue, which playhouse is now under the direct management of the old Lyceum theater. Arrangements for this treat for the newsboys have been completed by the management of The Republican.

The carriers will be entertained at the Majestic, Thursday night and Friday matinee, these two performances beoing designated on account of the great number of carriers of The Republican who intend witnessing "The Birth of Nation." Those carriers who desire to go Thursday night, are requested to get in touch with their branch manager, who will let the circulation manager know by Thursday noon.

As during the first presentation of the photoplay in this city some months back, "The Birth of a Nation," is attracting equally as large audiences. At both performances yesterday packed houses were the order. The film's fascination for masy local theatergoers has been so great, that they have witnessed the production two and even three times.

Thursday night and Friday matinee will be big days for The Republican newsboys in this city, who have been anxious to view the picture, and now that their hopes have been realized are anticipating a big time.

THE CLEVELAND STAR, SHELBY, N. C. TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1916

The Harlem Star welcomes the receipt of social, business, amusement and club notices. Send reports to the Editor. Proper attention given to all news items.

302

THE SCRANTON TIMES, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" FILLS TIMES NEWSBOYS WITH GLEE

Famous Motion Picture Is Drawing Packed Houses At Majestic Theater.

No audience ever attending a performance of "The Birth of a Nation" applauded more vociferously than the crowded house that witnessed the film production in the Majestic theater last night. The occasion was the first of the two outings provided by The Times for its carriers and proved a thoroughly enjoyable treat for the many boys who filled a good portion of the house. Last night was central city newsboys' night, while tonight The Times will entertain the carriers from the West Scranton and Petersburg sections.

The stirring rides of the Ku Klux Klan, together with the inspiring scenes of battles of the Civil war, with Old Glory always leading to victory, proved more than the youngsters could quietly endure. On nearly a dozen occasions the carriers got to their feet and made the house tremble with their shouts, applause and stamping of feet. The scenes were more than inspiring and forced many of the grownups to forget the staid dignity that comes with years and join heartily in the shouts and stampedes of the youngsters.

As has proved the case in every city where this picture has been shown, the performances of yesterday in the Majestic brought capacity attendances. Manager Edward Kohnstamm has announced that new attendance records promise to be made this week, as the demand for tickets is just as great as the demand which greeted the picture on its first presentation in this city. The picture will be shown twice daily for the remainder of the week. The photoplay in itself needs no introduction, as no picture ever presented in the United States has aroused the interest and discussion that this one has. To miss it is really to leave out one of the treats of the modern day.

Times Out-of-Town Carriers.

The out-of-town carriers are to attend the performance on Saturday night, and we want them to call us on the phone or drop postals immediately so that we may get seats reserved for them.

THE SCRANTON REPUBLICAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916

BIRTH OF NATION FOR BOYS TONIGHT

Republican Carriers to See Stirring Photoplay As Guests of the Management.

Carriers of The Scranton Republican to the number of several hundred will attend tonight's performance of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic theater, as the guests of The Republican management. A like number, or those who cannot arrange to see tonight's performance will attend the matinee tomorrow, Friday.

Circulation Manager Fred I Cook declared yesterday that the carriers who desire to attend tonight's performance of the famous photoplay should inform their branch managers of their choice before noon today, so that the branch manager can inform the home office also before noon.

Mr. Cook said that carriers from out-of-town, should be sure to communicate with him before noon today, if they wish to attend either tonight's performance or the matinee tomorrow. The newsboys are being allowed their choice of what day they wish to see "The Birth of a Nation."

The stirring battle scenes, the wild ride of the "Ku Klux" clan and Sherman's March to the Sea, all so historically portrayed in "The Birth of a Nation," will delight the youngsters.

All of the carriers yesterday when informed of The Republican's announcement that they were going to give the newsboys a treat, were wild with delight. Needless to say enthusiasm will run high during tonight's performance, with the audience augmented by the large number of sturdy youngsters, carriers of The Republican.

THE DAILY POTTSTOWN LEDGER, THURSDAY JUNE 1, 1916

Grand Opera House—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Grand Opera House, June 5, 6 and 7, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken throughout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, mechanical effects and realism, whilst the wizard of the screen, David W. Griffith, unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the War between the States and the Reconstruction of the South land. Some idea of its magnitude may be had from the fact that 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses took part and that the staging of this great "outdoor" drama cost half a million dollars.

Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendant of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a Brigadier General of the Confederate Army.

For every character, however small, Mr. Griffith has found just the personality needed. After that his masterly direction made each one give a perfect characterization of the widely varying roles. The result was not acting but life itself. Such realism is never seen on the old-fashioned stage. The limitations of the theatre were swept away for Nature was Mr. Griffith's stage. Panorama is revealed to the astonished eyes of the spectator. The most inventive imagination could hardly picture to itself such scenes of splendor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1916.

THE LOCK HAVEN EXPRESS.

WHY YOU SHOULD SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

B—"It is a brilliant, vivid, stirring masterpiece."—Rupert Hughes.

E—"It will take the whole country by storm."—Booth Tarkington.

C—"In the short space of three hours the audience sees, hears and feels a period of fifteen years."—Rev. Father John Talbot Smith.

A—"I know it is true, because I have lived through the actual realities."—Rev. Dr. Thomas B. Gregory.

U—"Never before has such a whirlwind combination of story, spectacle and tense drama been unrolled."—N. Y. Eve. Sun.

S—"It is worth $5 a seat."—C. F. Zittel, N. Y. Eve. Journal.

E—"It is history vitalized—History by lightning flash. Go to see it because of the wonder of the pictures themselves, and finally, go to see it because it will make a better American of you, for out of the baptism of blood of the Civil war was born the new nation, one and invisible."—Dorothy Dix.

Martin Theatre, Lock Haven, two nights, beginning Wednesday, June 7. Matinee Thursday. Seats now selling. Night, 25c to $2; matinee, 25c to $1.

THE EVENING CHRONICLE—JUNE 1, 1916.

Sherman's march to the sea. Scene from Griffith's massive photo spectacle "The Birth of a Nation."

POTTSTOWN NEWS, THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 1, 1916

Society Drama at Hippodrome.

Movies reveal many an interesting story, but back of them all are many incidents which occur in the studios that never come to light. Mme. Bertha Kalich, star in "Slander," a William Fox production which comes to the Hippodrome today, nearly fainted in the studio when someone shouted, "Shoot her in the back." This was not a criminal injunction, or incitation to murder, but merely a director crying for his cameraman to keep turning the crank as Madame walked away from the camera.

In offering Bertha Kalich in her first great motion picture drama, William Fox feels confident of the unusual merit of the star, an opinion on which agree America's leading critics. Countrywide comment favors this great Jewish artist who by hard work and sheer genius has risen to the foremost among stage folk. Speaking of her abilities as a screen artist the San Francisco Call-Post says: "Bertha Kalich is the sort of actress that captivates and touches the heartstrings in the melodrama roles without overdoing it." "Slander," the production at the Hippodrome today is a powerful society drama that every woman should see and every man should study.—Advertisement.

Griffith's "Birth of Nation."

D. W. Griffith's master production "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House commencing a three-day engagement next Monday, June 5.

It will be brought here in exact reproduction of the greatest attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American History ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story.

Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people. 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women, while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up on the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action adn grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.—Advertisement.

Sandalwood oil supply comes ...

April 1st 1916

CLEVER ACTRESS IN BIRTH OF A NATION

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Majestic theater, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to position in the motion picture field Maude Adams holds in the legitimatema is due to the careful manner in wD. W. Griffith, the master producer studied her personality and brought every latent gift.

MAE MARSH

LiMiss Marsh has only been in pictwo years, but she has already reacthe top of the ladder. A few seasgo she came to the Griffith studio to w her elder sister work. She was raw undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye great possibilities beneath the surpl her anxious eyes and mobile counce. He wanted a half-grown girl work he was finishing and he selher. Now she has the most likabl in all the thousands of characte crowd the Griffith masterpiece. Sthe joyous note of youth in the moarkable drama the film has yet u enced actors always have a word of sincere and emphatic, for the ls who plays the younger sister appealing story. This California express almost any emotion the mind can grasp. She has played and heroines, consumptive girls atic girls. No part frightens her Griffith is directing. Today her ttier known than any actress in d, and she is the pet of movie every quarter of the glob.

AVOCA